The rule is firmly established that taxes voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back, and payments with knowledge and without compulsion are voluntary; when paid under protest or with notice of suit, a recovery may, on occasion, be had, although, generally speaking, even protest or notice will not avail if the payment be made voluntarily, with full knowledge, and without any coercion by the actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to be possessed, over person or property, from which there is no means of immediate relief than payment; Chesebrough v. United States, 192 U. S. 253, 24 Sup. Ct. 262, 48 L. Ed. 432 (purchase of war revenue stamps for a deed without protest or notice).

Neither a statute imposing a tax, nor the execution issued, nor a mere demand for payment, is treated as duress. It does not necessarily follow that there will be a levy on goods. Or, if there is, the citizen may pay the money, regain the use of his property and maintain a suit for the recovery of what has been exacted. But he has the same right to sue if he pays under compulsion of a statute whose self-executing provisions amount to duress. For instance, an act requiring that if a franchise tax is not paid by a given date a penalty of 25 per cent. shall be incurred and the license of the corporation cancelled and the right to sue be lost. Payment to avoid such consequences is not voluntary, but compulsory, and the money may be recovered back; Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Shannon, 223 U. S. 468, 32 Sup. Ct. 236, 56 L. Ed. 510, following Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 Sup. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1050.

See PROTEST.

The state rule excludes interest on overdue taxes unless the statute so provides; the United States rule allows interest unless forbidden by statute; Billings v. United States, 232 U. S. 261, 34 Sup. Ct. 421, 58 L. Ed. —, citing Cooley, Taxation 17, and Rochester v. Bloss, 185 N. Y. 42, 77 N. E. 794, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 694, 7 Ann. Cas. 15, as to the state rule, and U. S. v. R. Co., 106 U. S. 327, 1 Sup. Ct. 223, 27 L. Ed. 151, and U. S. v. R. Co., 154 Fed. 519, as to the federal rule. Interest accrues on a tonnage tax on foreign-built yachts; U. S. v. Bennett, 232 U. S. 299, 34 Sup. Ct. 433, 58 L. Ed. —. See TONNAGE.

The bankrupt act prefers taxes due to any state and not only those due to the state in which the proceedings are; New Jersey v. Anderson, 203 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 51 L. Ed. 284; and this covers all taxes, including yearly license fees of corporations organized under a state law for the privilege of doing business; id.; but this does not apply to the liability of an employer to the state under a state workmen's compensation act; In re Farrell, 211 Fed. 212.

The fact that a tax statute acts retroactively does not cause it to be unconstitutional; Billings v. U. S., 232 U. S. 261, 34 Sup. Ct. 421, 58 L. Ed. —.

Federal courts may issue a mandamus against counties or municipal corporations, to compel the levy of a tax to pay their judgments; Deuel County v. Bank, 86 Fed. 264, 30 C. C. A. 30.

The collection of taxes by distraint is one of the most ancient methods known to the law; Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co. v. Bowland, 196 U. S. 611, 25 Sup. Ct. 345, 49 L. Ed. 619; and government bonds may be distrained upon for that purpose; id.

TAX DEED. An instrument whereby the officer of the law undertakes to convey the title of the rightful proprietor to the purchaser at a tax sale, or sale of the land for non-payment of taxes.

This deed, according to the principles of the common law, is simply a link in the chain of the grantee's title. It does not ipso facto transfer the title of the owner, as in grants from the government or deeds between man and man. The operative character of it depends upon the regularity of the anterior proceedings. The deed is not the title itself, nor even evidence of it. Its recitals bind no one. It creates no estoppel upon the former owner. No presumption arises upon the mere production of the deed that the facts upon which it is based had any existence. When it is shown, however, that the ministerial officers of the law have performed every duty which the law imposed upon them, every condition essential in its character, then the deed becomes conclusive evidence of the title in the grantee, according to its extent and purport. See Blackw. Tax Titles 430.

The legislature may make a tax deed prima facie evidence of title in the purchaser, but cannot make it conclusive evidence of his title to the land; Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 13 Sup. Ct. 508, 37 L. Ed. 410.

TAX LEVY. The total sum to be raised by a tax. Also the bill, enactment, or measure of legislation by which an annual or general tax is imposed.

TAX LIEN. A statutory lien in favor of the state or municipality, upon the lands of a person charged with taxes, binding the same either for the taxes assessed upon the specific tract of land, or for all the taxes due from the individual, and which may be foreclosed for non-payment, by judgment of a court or sale of the land.

TAX SALE. A sale of lands for the non-payment of taxes assessed thereon.

The power of sale does not attach until every prerequisite of the law has been complied with; Minor v. Natchez, 4 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 602, 43 Am. Dec. 488.

There must be a substantial compliance with the law authorizing the sale; Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 13 Sup. Ct. 508, 37 L. Ed. 410.

There are important details connected with the auction itself and the duties of the officer intrusted with the conducting thereof. The sale must be a public, and not a private, one. The sale must take place at the precise time and place fixed by the law or notice. A tax sale is vitiated by a failure to give the notice required by law of the place where the sale will occur; Henderson v. White, 69 Tex. 103, 5 S. W. 374.

The sale must be made to the highest bidder. This is the rule in Pennsylvania; but in most of the states the highest bidder is he who will pay the taxes, interest, and costs due upon the tract offered for sale for the least quantity of it. The sale must be for cash and must be according to the parcels and descriptions contained in the list and the other proceedings.

When a tract of land is assessed against tenants in common, and one of them pays the tax on his share, the interest of the other may be sold to satisfy the residue of the assessment.

Where several parcels of land belonging to the same person are separately assessed, each parcel is liable for its own specific tax and no more.

A tax sale is void if any portion of the tax for which it was made was illegal; Tillotson v. Webber, 96 Mich. 144, 55 N. W. 837; Graham v. Mortgage Co., 33 Fla. 356, 14 South. 796. See Culbertson v. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 8 Sup. Ct. 1136, 32 L. Ed. 134; TAX DEED.

TAX TITLE. The title by which one holds land which he purchased at a tax sale.

It is not a derivative title. If valid, it is a breaking up of all other titles, and is an tagonistic to all other claims to the land; Willcuts v. Rollins, 85 Ia. 247, 52 N. W. 199; but in Pennsylvania, by statute, tax sales do not always cut out existing liens.

The owner of land can acquire a tax title by purchasing it at a tax sale; Griffin v. Turner, 75 Ia. 250, 39 N. W. 294.

TAXABLE. That may be taxed.

TAXATION. The process of taxing or imposing a tax. Webster, Dict.

In Practice. Adjustment. Fixing the amount; e. g. taxation of costs. 3 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 602.

See Tax.

TAXATION OF COSTS. Fixing the amount of costs to which a party is entitled.

It is a rule that the jury must assess the damages and costs separately, so that it may appear to the court that the costs were not considered in the damages; and when the jury give costs in an amount insufficient to answer the costs of the suit, the plaintiff may pray that the officer may tax the costs, and such taxation is inserted in the judgment. This is said to be done ex assensu of the plaintiff, because at his prayer. Bac. Abr. Costs (K).

The costs are taxed in the first instance by the prothonotary or clerk of the court. See Jackson v. Huntley, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 244; Winslow v. Hathaway, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 211. A bill of costs, having been once submitted to such an officer for taxation, cannot be withdrawn from him and referred to another; Hall v. Sherwood, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 252. See Costs.

TAXING OFFICER. An officer in each house of parliament, whose duty it is to tax the costs incurred by the promoters or opponents of private bills. May, Parl. Pr. 843.

TEACHER. See SCHOOLS.

TEAM. Two or more horses, oxen, or other beasts harnessed together for drawing; Inman v. C., M. & St. P. R. Co., 60 Ia. 462, 15 N. W. 286; with the vehicle to which they are customarily attached; Dains v. Prosser, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 291; Wilcox v. Hawley, 31 N. Y. 655, in reference to an exemption law. It may mean a vehicle with animals drawing it and used for loads instead of persons. Hotchkiss v. Hoy, 41 Conn. 577. A horse driven with other horses unharnessed; Elliot v. Lisbon, 57 N. H. 29; and a single horse; Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; are held teams.

TEAM WORK. Work done by a team as a substantial part of a man's business. Hickok v. Thayer, 49 Vt. 375. It has been held to extend to other than agricultural work, as hauling coals; 9 Q. B. D. 636, overruling 8 Q. B. D. 1. A covenant to provide team work does not oblige a lessee to find the instruments necessary for its performance; id.

TEAMSTER. One who drives horses in a wagon for the purpose of carrying goods for hire. Elder v. Williams, 16 Nev. 416; Brusle v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 306, 91 Am. Dec. 695. He is liable as a common carrier. Story, Bailm. § 496. A teamster is a laborer; McElwaine v. Hosey, 135 Ind. 481, 35 N. E. 272. See CARRIER.

TECHNICAL. That which properly belongs to an art.

In the construction of contracts it is a general rule that technical words are to be taken according to their approved and known use in the trade in which the contract is entered into or to which it relates, unless they have manifestly been understood in another sense by the parties; 2 B. & P. 164. See CONSTRUCTION.

TEDING-PENNY. A small tax to the sheriff from each tithing toward the charge of keeping courts, etc. Cowell.

TEIND COURT. In Scotch Law. A court which has jurisdiction of matters relating to teinds or tithes.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE. Method of Operation and General Characteristics. In the United States all telegraph lines are operated by companies, either under the authority of general laws, or by express charter; Scott & J. Telgr. § 3. The telegraph is an instrument of commerce; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 7 Sup. Ct. 1126, 30 L. Ed. 1187; and telegraphic communication between states is interstate commerce; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311; Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Mobile, 179 Fed. 955; and so is communication by telegraph or telephone between points in different states; Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Eureka, 172 Fed. 755.

Telegraph companies are quasi-public agencies, and their rights, duties, and obligations are matters arising under the general law. Questions arising in connection with them are not controlled in the federal courts by state decisions; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 156 U. S. 210, 15 Sup. Ct. 356, 39 L. Ed. 399. An indictment of a telegraph operator in Connecticut who transmitted a message to New Jersey directing a bet on a horse-race, was upheld under a statute prohibiting betting on horse races, and the statute was held not to be in violation of the commerce clause in the constitution; State v. Harbourn, 70 Conn. 484, 40 Atl. 179, 40 L. R. A. 607, 66 Am. St. Rep. 126. Exclusive franchises may be granted, but will not be implied; Charles River Bridge v. Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773. By a federal statute, companies are authorized to construct their lines upon any public road or highway, and across navigable streams, but so as not to interfere with their public use or navigation; Dickey v. Tel. Co., 46 Me. 483. The telegraph is a public use authorizing the exercise of a right of eminent domain; State v. Commercial News Co., 43 N. J. L. 381; Chesapeake & P. Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 66 Md. 399, 410, 7 Atl. 809, 59 Am. Rep. 167; State

v. Tel. Co., 53 N. J. L. 341, 21 Atl. 460, 11 L. R. A. 664; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. R. Co., 42 Fed. 273, 12 L. R. A. 544.

Telephone Companies Usually Embraced in Telegraph Legislation. In law the owners and operators of telephones are in much the same position as telegraph companies. There appears to be no distinction between telephonic and telegraphic communication.

It is generally held that where, by statute, rights, duties or obligations are imposed upon telegraph companies, no others being mentioned, telephone companies are also embraced unless there is some special reason why they should be excluded. An extreme illustration of this is to be found in the fact that where telegraph companies are authorized by statute to exercise the right of eminent domain, the power is also held to be given to telephone companies; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Tel. Co., 93 Tex. 313, 55 S. W. 117, 49 L. R. A. 459, 77 Am. St. Rep. 884; Duke v. Tel. Co., 53 N. J. L. 341, 21 Atl. 460, 11 L. R. A. 664; and the same is true of the authority to occupy highways; People's Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Turnpike Rd., 199 Pa. 411, 49 Atl. 284; N. W. Tel. Exch. Co. v. Ry. Co., 76 Minn. 334, 79 N. W. 315, where it was said that "in these days there ought to be no one to question the statement that a telephone is simply an improved telegraph." The relation between the two systems of communication was considered in England in connection with the control of the telegraph by the postmaster-general. The question was whether the telephonic transmission of intelligence was an infringement of the telegraphic monopoly granted to the postmaster-general. It was concluded by Stephen, J., that notwithstanding the claim of novelty for the telephonic transmitter and receiver the whole apparatus taken together constituted a wire used for the purpose of telegraphic communication; Atty. Gen. v. Edison T. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 244. Where a telephone company had been organized under a general act for the incorporation of telegraph lines, it was held to be a valid corporation and as such subject to a municipal tax; Wis. Tel. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32, 21 N. W. 828. Telephone companies have also been classed with telegraph companies to determine the jurisdiction of justices of the peace; Franklin v. Tel. Co., 69 Ia. 97, 28 N. W. 461; and also to decide as to the place and manner of the assessment of their property; Iowa U. Tel. Co. v. Board of Equalization, 67 Ia. 250, 25 N. W. 155. In Richmond v. Tel. Co., 174 U. S. 761, 773, 19 Sup. Ct. 778, 43 L. Ed. 1162, the court (interpreting the postal telegraph act) refused to follow these cases.

Not Common Carriers but Exercise a Public Employment. It may be considered as settled by a preponderance of the cases that they are not common carriers so far as to be held as insurers of correct transmission of messages. Whether they were such was the only material point in the discussion, since they are held by practically all the courts both federal and state, to all the other obligations of common carriers and those who exercise a public employment, such as to serve all comers impartially and without discrimination and to transact their business with due care.

In Primrose v. Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883, it was said: "Telegraph companies resemble railroad companies and other common carriers, in that they are instruments of commerce; and in that they exercise a public employment, and are therefore bound to serve all customers alike, without discrimination. . . . But they are not common carriers; their duties are different, and are performed in different ways; and they are not subject to the same liabilities;" citing Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 264, 22 L. Ed. 556; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067; and in a later case, where the question was not involved, the court, speaking through the same judge, Gray, J., said by way of illustration: "Although a telegraph company is not a common carrier, yet its relation with senders of messages over its lines is of a commercial nature, and contracts that the company shall not be liable for the negligence of its servants, are affected in some degree by similar conditions;" Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 175 U. S. 91, 20 Sup. Ct. 33, 44 L. Ed. 84, where the above cases are cited with approval.

Both telegraph and telephone companies are subject to the rules governing common carriers to the extent that they are bound to furnish equal facilities to all persons or corporations belonging to the classes which they seek to serve; Delaware & A. Tel. & Tel. Co. v. State, 50 Fed. 677, 2 C. C. A. 1, 3 U. S. App. 30, affirming 47 Fed. 633; Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113; and to serve the public without partiality; Cent. U. T. Co. v. Swoveland, 14 Ind. App. 341, 42 N. E. 1035; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Hill, 163 Ala. 18, 50 South. 248, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 648, 19 Ann. Cas. 1058; and, subject to reasonable regulations, to receive and promptly transmit and deliver all messages; Cogdell v. Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490; and being engaged in a quasi public employment, they may not refuse to receive messages for the transmission of which payment has been tendered; Vermilye v. Cable Co., 205 Mass. 598, 91 N. E. 904, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

The rule as laid down by the supreme court is that which is generally followed; Gillis v. Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461, 17 Atl. 736, 15 Am. St. Rep. 917, 4 L. R. A. 611, and note; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Reynolds Bros., 77

Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715. But courts have been emphatic, as a rule, in the opinion that these companies were "not common carriers"; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525 (Christiancy, Cooley and Campbell, JJ., concurring in the opinion); and they are not charged with the absolute liability of a common carrier; Leonard v. Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446. In Breese v. Tel. Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 274, it was said that attempts to subject telegraph and telephone companies to the same rules and liabilities will "sooner or later have to be abandoned, as clumsy and undiscriminating efforts . . . to assimilate things which have no natural relation or affinity whatsoever, and at best but a loose or mere fanciful resemblance." That such company "is not a common carrier, but a bailee performing, through its agents, a work for its employer, according to certain rules and regulations, which, under the law, it has a right to make, for its government," was the view taken in Birney v. Tel. Co., 18 Md. 341, 81 Am. Dec. 607; and in another case it was said that such companies were not common carriers, "but, on the contrary, the true nature and character of their liability would seem to be that of bailees for hire"; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Fontaine, 58 Ga. 433. They are not insurers; Smith v. Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 22, 4 Am. St. Rep. 126; Fowler v. Tel. Co., 80 Me. 381, 15 Atl. 29, 6 Am. St. Rep. 211; Ellis v. Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 226; De Rutte v. Tel. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 547; New York & W. P. Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. 298, 78 Am. Dec. 338. There was an early tendency to hold these companies to all the liabilities of common carriers; Parks v. Tel. Co., 13 Cal. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 589; MacAndrew v. Elec. T. Co., 17 C. B. 3; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Meek, 49 Ind. 53. The California case is said to be the only one in which the rule was laid down positively where the point was necessary to be decided; Jones, Tel. & Tel. Cos. 27, note 3. There is a later case in which telegraph and telephone companies were held quasi common carriers of news, but bound only to service without discrimination, which is the rule generally agreed upon; State v. Tel. Co., 61 S. C. 83, 39 S. E. 257, 55 L. R. A. 139, 85 Am. St. Rep. 870. It is also true that it has been said in later cases that "a telephone company doing a general telephone business is a common carrier of news"; State v. Cadwallader, 172 Ind. 619, 87 N. E. 644, 89 N. E. 319; and that "telephone companies are, to a limited extent, and yet in a strict sense, common carriers of intelligence and news, and are bound to afford equal facilities to all in like situations"; Huffman v. Tel. Co., 143 Ia. 590, 121 N. W. 1033, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000. See 15 Harv. L. Rev. 309.

sion is not that it is such, but only that such companies are often described as such. The case decides only that it "is engaged in a quasi public service, affected with a public interest, for which it is endowed with some of the sovereign powers of the state, and as such is held to the obligation of an impartial and undiscriminating service to the public upon common-law principles"; Postal Cable Tel. Co. v. Tel. & Tel. Co., 177 Fed. 726. Notwithstanding these sporadic suggestions of the use of the term "common carriers of news" and the like, the law may be considered as settled in accordance with the rules and principles above stated.

In the act of June 18, 1910 (creating the commerce court) section 7 enacts a new section 1 of the act of Feb. 4, 1887 (which created the interstate commerce commission), which added to the subjects of its jurisdiction, which had been enlarged by the act of June 29, 1906, "telegraph, telephone and cable companies (whether wire or wireless) engaged in sending messages from one state, territory, or district of the United States, to any other state, territory, or district of the United States, or to any foreign country." It was further provided by the last mentioned act that telegraph and telephone charges shall be reasonable and if unreasonable shall be unlawful, but classification of different kinds of business is permitted; 36 Stat. L. 514-546. Whether this amendment of the statute is considered by the courts to affect any previous decisions does not appear, as it does not seem to have been adverted to in any reported case.

The Obligation of Impartial Service and Due Care. "They are endowed by the state with some of its sovereign powers, such as the right of eminent domain, and so endowed by reason of the public service they render. As a consequence of this, all individuals have equal rights, both in respect to service and charges. Of course, such equality of right does not prevent differences in the modes and kinds of service and different charges based thereon." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pub. Co., 181 U. S. 92, 100, 21 Sup. Ct. 561, 45 L. Ed. 765.

Like carriers, these companies are liable for negligence. They are held to a degree of care and skill commensurate with the importance of their duties; Bartlett v. Tel. Co., 62 Me. 209, 16 Am. Rep. 447; the obligation is due and reasonable care in the performance of their duties; Fowler v. Tel. Co., 80 Me. 381, 15 Atl. 29, 6 Am. St. Rep. 211; Stewart, Morehead & Co. v. Cable Co., 131 Ga. 31, 61 S. E. 1045, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 692, 127 Am. St. Rep. 205; Passmore v. Tel. Co., 78 Pa. 238; Breese v. Tel. Co., 48 N. Y. 132, 8 Am. Rep. 526; and the necessity for such care is made the greater by the delicacy of the instrument and the skill required to manage it; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525; Tyler v. Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421, 14

Am. Rep. 38. Ordinary care means the providing of suitable instruments and competent servants; Reed v. Tel. Co., 135 Mo. 661, 37 S. W. 904, 34 L. R. A. 492, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609. The company, by accepting a dispatch, assumes the duty of reasonable care in its transmission, and is liable in tort for the breach of it; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Dubois, 128 Ill. 248, 21 N. E. 4, 15 Am. St. Rep. 109; Frazier v. Tel. Co., 45 Or. 414, 78 Pac. 330, 67 L. R. A. 319, 2 Ann. Cas. 396. The duty is imposed by law, and proof of incorrect transmission casts the burden upon the company to prove its own due care; Reed v. Tel. Co., 135 Mo. 661, 37 S. W. 904, 34 L. R. A. 492, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609; contra, Ellis v. Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 226, where it was held that the duty to the addressee might be limited by contract; but another case holds that the liability imposed by law cannot be restricted by a contract to which the addressee is not a party; New York & W. P. Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. 298, 78 Am. Dec. 338.

A telephone company is not required by common law or statute (in Indiana) to construct a new line or maintain an old one; Severin v. Dearborn County, 105 Ind. 264, 4 N. E. 680; or to continue its service in particular places; American Bell Tel. Co. v. Service Co., 36 Fed. 488, 1 L. R. A. 799, when in the exercise of a legitimate business discretion such course is deemed unprofitable or unadvisable.

A telephone company maintaining a line between different cities and towns, with public stations therein, is required to maintain a messenger service to notify persons at a reasonable distance when they are wanted, and is liable for the negligence of its messengers, and a regulation to the contrary is void; Central Union Tel. Co. v. Swoveland, 14 Ind. App. 341, 42 N. E. 1035.

Telephone companies are bound to furnish telephones to private individuals under ordinary circumstances; Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 250, 5 N. E. 178, 55 Am. Rep. 201. See Central D. & P. Tel. Co. v. Com., 114 Pa. 592, 7 Atl. 926.

Under a statute prescribing a penalty, a telegraph company was held liable for refusing to send a message to a railroad superintendent that there was no fire in the station; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Lillard, 86 Ark. 208, 110 S. W. 1035, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 836. It may refuse obscene, blasphemous, slanderous, profane and indecent messages; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495; but may not assume to act as a moral censor of a message in decent language, on the mere inference of the operator that it is intended for immoral purposes; id., where the message refused was: "Send me four girls . . . to tend fair." Nor can he act as a censor of language or purpose, but he may refuse a message clearly on its face libellous, profane or obscene; Nye v. Tel. Co., 104 Fed. 628; Peterson v. Tel. Co., 65 Minn. 18, 67 N. W.

646, 33 L. R. A. 302; or if it discloses purpose to subserve either crime or tort; Gray v. Tel. Co., 87 Ga. 350, 13 S. E. 562, 14 L. R. A. 95, 27 Am. St. Rep. 259.

A telephone company, refusing to furnish service to a subscriber who has refused to pay for past service, is guilty of discrimination under the Arkansas statute; Southwestern Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Danaher, 102 Ark. 547, 144 S. W. 925. It may make and enforce reasonable rules; id.

Telegraph and Telephone Connections. A company may refuse to furnish the facilities to any one who does not pay the proper charges; Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113; Rushville Co-op. Tel. Co. v. Irvin, 27 Ind. App. 62, 59 N. E. 327; or whose rentals are in arrears; s. c., Irvin v. Telephone Co., 161 Ind. 524, 69 N. E. 258; or one who violates its reasonable regulations; Gardner v. Prov. Tel. Co., 23 R. I. 262, 49 Atl. 1004; as the use of improper language over the line; Pugh v. City of S. Tel. Ass'n., 8 Ohio Dec. 644 (affirmed 13 Wkly. L. Bul. 190), where it was held that the word damned is improper language; and this decision is said to be supported by one of Judge Barr of the United States District Court of Kentucky; 27 Albany L. J. 163.

The company is liable in damages for failure or refusal to make connections where the statute prescribes a penalty for failure to supply "telephone connections and facilities . . . without discrimination or partiality"; Cent. U. Tel. Co. v. Fehring, 146 Ind. 189, 45 N. E. 64.

A telephone company must furnish to any person who requests it a separate telephone with proper connections; Cent. U. Tel. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 194, 19 N. E. 604, 10 Am. St. Rep. 114. They must also furnish a directory of the subscribers, with their numbers; State v. Neb. Tel. Co., 17 Neb. 126, 22 N. W. 237, 52 Am. Rep. 409. But they are only compelled to furnish their facilities for use in legitimate business, and cannot be compelled by mandamus to furnish them for the purpose of furthering unlawful occupations, as, for example, the carrying on of a bucket shop; Byrant v. W. U. Tel. Co., 17 Fed. 825; Metropolitan G. & S. Exch. v. Chicago Board of Trade, 15 Fed. 847; or a bawdy-house; Godwin v. Tel. Co., 136 N. C. 258, 48 S. E. 636, 67 L. R. A. 251, 103 Am. St. Rep. 941, 1 Ann. Cas. 203, where it was held that the disability attached, not to the character of the proposed subscriber, but of the business at the house where the telephone was requested, and that a person engaged in an unlawful business might be entitled to have the telephone on other premises.

The rates charged must be uniform under similar conditions; maximum rates are in many states regulated by statutes which are constitutional; Hackett v. State, 103 Ind. 250, 5 N. E. 178, 55 Am. Rep. 201.

A requirement that the subscriber should pay the long distance charge in advance at the central office before getting the connection was held not reasonable under a statute prescribing a penalty for not making telephone connections and facilities . . . without discrimination or partiality; Yancey v. Tel. Co., 81 Ark. 486, 99 S. W. 679, 11 Ann. Cas. 135.

When a message is transmitted over two lines, the first company is liable for delay of an operator employed by both companies; Southwestern Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Taylor, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 79, 63 S. W. 1076. Failure to connect a house threatened with fire is not a proximate cause of the loss by fire, so as to make the telephone company liable; Lebanon L. & L. Tel. Co. v. Lumber Co., 131 Ky. 718, 115 S. W. 824, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115, 18 Ann. Cas. 1066.

As to the legal consequence of failure or refusal to make proper connections, see subtitle Damages, infra.

The Right of Regulation by Governmental Authority. The general principle that business "affected with a public interest" is subject to state regulation, as settled in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, and People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 22 N. E. 670, 682, 5 L. R. A. 559, and note, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, affirmed in 143 U. S. 517, 12 Sup. Ct. 468, 36 L. Ed. 247; applies to telegraph and telephone companies, the business conducted by them having been repeatedly held to be of that character; Chesapeake & P. Tel. Co. v. Manning, 186 U. S. 238, 22 Sup. Ct. 881, 46 L. Ed. 1144; Central U. Tel. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1, 5 N. E. 721; State v. Tel. Co., 113 N. C. 213, 18 S. E. 389, 22 L. R. A. 570; St. Louis v. Tel. Co., 96 Mo. 623, 10 S. W. 197, 9 Am. St. Rep. 370, 2 L. R. A. 278, and note. The power to determine what compensation it may exact is a legislative, not a judicial, function; Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113; and the power of state control is not lost by reason of the fact that the company's lines extend into another state; Central U. Tel. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 194, 19 N. E. 604, 10 Am. St. Rep. 114; but the act must prescribe the rate, as the court cannot do it; Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113; and the power to regulate is plenary and complete; Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 250, 5 N. E. 178, 55 Am. Rep. 201, where such a statute is held constitutional.

Statutes in some states provide that telephone companies shall serve all who apply as subscribers. Prior to the passage of such acts there was much litigation as to whether they could refuse their service under any circumstances. It was held that telephone companies are bound to furnish equal facilities to all telegraph companies; Chesapeake & P. Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 66 Md. 399, 7 Atl. 809, 59 Am. Rep. 167; State v. Tel. Co., 23 Fed. 539;

Cent. U. Tel. Co. v. Bradbury, supra; Bell Tel. Co. v. Com., 2 Sadler 299, 3 Atl. 825; but in American Rapid Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 49 Conn. 352, 44 Am. Rep. 237 (which seems to stand alone), the court held otherwise, upon the ground that the telephone company, a local company, was restricted under its license on the patents used by it and must be considered as doing business only within the lines of restriction. The contract between a telephone company and the owner of patented telephone instruments, that in the use of such instruments by the telephone company discriminations should be made against certain telegraph companies, was declared void; State v. Tel. Co., 36 Ohio St. 296, 38 Am. Rep. 583, and other cases herein cited. Accordingly it may be considered as settled that the right of regulation is not affected by the fact that the device used by the company is patented, as the right to use the patented article must be exercised in subordination to the police power of the state; and these principles were followed in Delaware & A. Tel. & Tel. Co. v. State, 50 Fed. 677, 2 C. C. A. 1, 3 U. S. App. 30, affirming 47 Fed. 633. This case seems to have settled finally a long contest on this question, which does not appear to have reached the supreme court. The language of the court in the case last cited is quoted by the higher court and construed with approval in Primrose v. Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 22, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883. The case in 23 Fed. 539, supra, was taken up, but the appeal was abandoned and dismissed; Bell Tel. Co. v. Missouri, 127 U. S. 780, 32 L. Ed. 328. That court has, however, applied the same principle in analogous cases; Patterson v. Ky., 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. Ed. 1115; nor can the regulation of a maximum rate be evaded under the excuse of the use of a patented article by dividing the charge into two items, one for rental and the other for the use of instruments; Johnson v. State, 113 Ind. 143, 15 N. E. 215.

The power of regulation, it is now considered by the weight of authority, may be delegated to a municipality; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 245, though it was contended otherwise by some authorities; and within the scope of the delegated power it is as absolute as that of the state would have been if not delegated; Taylor v. Carondelet, 22 Mo. 110; Heland v. Lowell, 3 Allen (Mass.) 408, 81 Am. Dec. 670. See Jones, Tel. & Tel. Cos. § 230. This power may be delegated, but the delegation must be either expressly given or necessarily implied from the powers granted; Domestic Tel. Co. v. Newark, 49 N. J. L. 344, 8 Atl. 128; Home Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 29 Sup. Ct. 50, 53 L. Ed. 176; and it is not implied from power in a city charter to regulate "all other business," though the telegraph companies were mentioned and the telephone had not been invented; St. Louis v. Tel. Co., 96 Mo. 623, 10

S. W. 197, 2 L. R. A. 278, 9 Am. St. Rep. 370. A city cannot regulate telephone rates unless the right has been granted to it by the state legislature; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Memphis, 200 Fed. 657, 119 C. C. A. 73; and when it has the power, the rates must be reasonable and not confiscatory; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Memphis, 183 Fed. 875.

The state statutes for the regulation of telephone companies requiring connections and facilities without discrimination or partiality, etc., are merely declaratory of their common law obligation, giving a new remedy and imposing penalties for non-observance; Cumberland T. & T. Co. v. Kelly, 160 Fed. 316, 87 C. C. A. 268, 15 Ann. Cas. 1210; Postal Cable Teleg. Co. v. Cumberland T. & T. Co., 177 Fed. 726, where it was also held that a telephone company also furnished telegraph service could not authorize discriminating charges for telephone service furnished to a competing telegraph company.

A railroad company cannot grant a telegraph company the exclusive right to establish telegraph lines along its way, such contracts being void as in restraint of trade; Western U. Tel. Co. v. R. Co., 11 Fed. 1.

Under the police power municipal corporations may regulate the manner in which the lines are to be constructed in cities, so as not to interfere with the comfort and safety of the inhabitants; Scott & J. Telegr. § 54. But the power of the municipality is to regulate, not to prohibit; Richmond v. Tel. & Tel. Co., 85 Fed. 19, 28 C. C. A. 659, 42 U. S. App. 686; and in the absence of evidence that a proposed method of laying the wires by a company will impede or endanger the use of the streets by the public, a court of equity will enjoin the town from interfering with the wires; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 325. Unless under the sanction of legislative enactment the erection of telegraph posts or the laying of tubes in any highway is a nuisance at common law; 30 Beav. 287. See POLES; WIRES.

A grant of authority to use the streets, etc., of a city for its telephone plant will not be construed to give an exclusive right or privilege simply from the failure to exclude other corporations from like privileges; City of Plattsmouth v. Tel. Co., 80 Neb. 460, 114 N. W. 588, 127 Am. St. Rep. 779, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, and note.

The question of permitting poles to be erected or conduits constructed in streets is a matter to be determined exclusively by the municipality, and the courts will not interfere, unless in the case of an unreasonable and flagrant exercise of that power; Auerbach v. Tel. Co., 7 Ohio N. P. 633.

Where a city is given authority to construct a line on a street, it will not be considered a limitation of the police power, and a subsequent order may be made for the removal of the wires or for placing them underground; American Rapid Tel. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 26 N. E. 919, 21 Am. St. Rep. 764, 13 L. R. A. 454, and note. Such an order for placing wires underground is a legitimate exercise of the police power; Western U. Tel. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. 552, 3 L. R. A. 449; Richmond v. Tel. Co., 85 Fed. 19, 28 C. C. A. 659.

Power to Make Regulations and What are Reasonable. A company may make reasonable rules relative to its business, and thereby limit its liability.

A rule that the company will not be responsible for the correct transmission of despatches, beyond the amount received therefrom, unless repeated at an additional expense, is reasonable; Becker v. Tel. Co., 11 Neb. 87, 7 N. W. 868, 38 Am. Rep. 356; Primrose v. Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883; McAndrew v. Elec. Tel. Co., 17 C. B. 3; 17 U. C. Q. B. 470; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525; whether the sender read the contract or not; Passmore v. Tel. Co., 78 Pa. 238; Clement v. Tel. Co., 137 Mass. 463; but such regulations were held void in Tyler & Co. v. Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421, 14 Am. Rep. 38; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Tyler, 74 Ill. 168, 24 Am. Rep. 279; Ayer v. Tel. Co., 79 Me. 493, 10 Atl. 495, 1 Am. St. Rep. 353; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 301, 41 Am. Rep. 500; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Crall, 38 Kan. 679, 684, 17 Pac. 309, 5 Am. St. Rep. 795, which cases are cited, but not approved, in Primrose v. Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883; but no regulations or device will avail to avoid liability in case of negligence or fraud; Candee v. Tel. Co., 34 Wis. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 452; Wann v. Tel. Co., 37 Mo. 472, 90 Am. Dec. 395; nor from injury which the repetition would not have prevented; North P. & P. Co. v. Tel. Co., 70 Ill. App. 275; nor is the company relieved from liability for delay in delivery not referable to any mistake in the tenor of the telegram; Barnes v. Tel. Co., 24 Nev. 125, 50 Pac. 438, 77 Am. St. Rep. 791; nor where the company failed to put the message on its transit; Birney v. Tel. Co., 18 Md. 341, 81 Am. Dec. 607; and failure to transmit and deliver a message correctly is prima facie evidence of negligence; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Short, 53 Ark. 434, 14 S. W. 649, 9 L. R. A. 744.

Such a stipulation in a telegraph blank releasing the company from liability beyond the price charged for non-delivery of un-repeated messages and for delays on connecting lines, is without effect where, upon receiving notice within a few minutes after undertaking to transmit an important message that the lines are down, it failed to notify the sender of that fact; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Nichols, 159 Fed. 643, 89 C. C. A. 585, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 870 note, 14 Ann. Cas. 369. Where the line is interrupted the company is bound to notify the sender and is liable for damages caused by its failure to do so; Swan v. Tel. Co., 129 Fed. 318, 63 C. C. A. 550, 67 L. R. A. 153, and note in which the earlier cases are collected, while the later ones are in a note in 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 870.

Stipulations releasing a company from liability unless a message is repeated are invalid, and according to the weight of authority not reasonable, being induced by moral duress; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Chamblor, 122 Ala. 428, 25 South. 232, 82 Am. St. Rep. 89. Such stipulations were held good in Wiscorsin v. W. U. Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 226; and bad as against public policy in Ayer v. Tel. Co., 79 Me. 493, 10 Atl. 495, 1 Am. St. Rep. 353.

If a message is incorrectly transmitted, the company is prima facie guilty of negligence, and is liable notwithstanding that the printed blank was used containing the stipulation of non-liability for unrepeatable messages; Tyler v. Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421, 14 Am. Rep. 38; id., 74 Ill. 168, 24 Am. Rep. 279; Rittenhouse v. Ind. Line of Tel., 44 N. Y. 263, 4 Am. Rep. 673; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 301, 41 Am. Rep. 500. (In the last case and the Ohio case there was no question of condition for repeating—merely error).

The current of authority favors the rule that the usual conditions in the blanks of telegraph companies exempt them only from the consequences of errors arising from causes beyond their control, whether the message be repeated, or unrepeatable; Thompson v. Tel. Co., 107 N. C. 449, 12 S. E. 427; Passmore v. Tel. Co., 78 Pa. 238; Sweatland v. Tel. Co., 27 Ia. 433, 1 Am. Rep. 285; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Graham, 1 Colo. 230, 9 Am. Rep. 136; Aiken v. Tel. Co., 5 S. C. 358. See Thompson v. Tel. Co., 107 N. C. 449, 12 S. E. 427. Notice of regulations must be brought home to the sender of the despatch, if they are to be regarded as incorporated in his contract. De Rutte v. Tel. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 547; Id., 30 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 403. His signature to the printed conditions is sufficient evidence of knowledge, and he will not be heard to say that he did not read them; Grinnell v. Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299, 18 Am. Rep. 485; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525; See Marr v. Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 529, 3 S. W. 496; Pegram v. Tel. Co., 97 N. C. 57, 2 S. E. 256; they are part of the contract; cases cited supra.

A company may regulate its office hours provided they are reasonable; Carter v. Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 374, 54 S. E. 274; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Ford, 77 Ark. 531, 92 S. W. 528; they may be fixed with reference to the amount of business done, and when that does not justify night delivery it is not required; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Van Cleave, 107 Ky. 464, 54 S. W. 827, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 53, 92 Am. St. Rep. 366.

It is unreasonable to require claims for damages caused by the company's failure to transmit messages correctly to be made within sixty days after the message was sent; Davis v. Telegraph Co., 107 Ky. 527, 54 S. W. 849, 92 Am. St. Rep. 371.

Regulations limiting the liability of companies upon non-compliance with stipulations in the blanks or regulations have been held not to apply to the receiver of the message; New York & W. Printing Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. 298, 78 Am. Dec. 338; Webbe v. Tel. Co., 169 Ill. 610, 48 N. E. 670, 61 Am. St. Rep. 207; but the cases on this point are very conflicting; they are collected in 61 Am. St. Rep. 214, note. The principle on which the cases rest in denying liability to the addressee is that the company owes no duty to the undisclosed principal of the addressee, because injury to him cannot be reasonably anticipated as the consequences of the lack of due care; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Schriver, 141 Fed. 538, 72 C. C. A. 596, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 678; unless the message shows upon its face that it related to the business of the employer; Lee v. Tel. Co., 51 Mo. App. 375; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 76 Tex. 217, 13 S. W. 70, 18 Am. St. Rep. 37; but where the addressee has an interest in the message, although he is not the primary beneficiary, and the company knows of such interest, it may be held liable to him; McLeod v. Tel. Co., 52 Ore. 22, 94 Pac. 568, 95 Pac. 1009, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 810, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 16 Ann. Cas. 1239.

Limitation of Liability for Negligence. Telegraph companies may limit their liability by notice to the sender of the message; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Buchanan, 35 Ind. 429, 9 Am. Rep. 744; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Tyler, 74 Ill. 168, 24 Am. Rep. 279; De Rutte v. Tel. Co., 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 413; 17 C. B. 3. But it is a general rule, upon the weight of authority, that they cannot by contract exempt themselves from losses caused by their own negligence; Willock v. R. Co., 166 Pa. 184, 30 Atl. 948, 27 L. R. A. 228, 45 Am. St. Rep. 674; Eells v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 903; Reed v. Tel. Co., 135 Mo. 661, 37 S. W. 904, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609, 34 L. R. A. 492; Camp v. Tel. Co., 1 Mete. (Ky.) 164, 71 Am. Dec. 461, and note with full citation of earlier cases; though it has been held in some cases that they may limit their liability for their negligence or error, except for wilful misconduct or gross negligence; Birkett v. Tel. Co., 103 Mich. 361, 61 N. W. 645, 33 L. R. A. 404, 50 Am. St. Rep. 374; Redpath v. Tel. Co., 112 Mass. 71, 17 Am. Rep. 69; but this exemption is limited to such mistakes as are incident to the service and involve slight culpability; Lassiter v. Tel. Co., 89 N. C. 336; Grinnell v. Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299, 18 Am. Rep. 485.

Acceptance of Messages. Telegraph companies are bound to receive and transmit messages from other companies, but are not held responsible for their defaults; Baldwin

v. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744, 6 Am. Rep. 165. They are not, at common law, bound to receive messages for points not on their own lines; Crow. Electr. § 445. In many states statutes provide otherwise; see id. § 385; but if a company accepts a message for transmission over a connecting line, it is liable to the same extent as over its own lines; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Shumate, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 429, 21 S. W. 109; De Rutte v. Telegraph Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 554; but it is held that its only obligation in such case is to deliver the message correctly to the connecting line; 16 U. C. Q. B. 530.

The company is not liable for receiving a libellous telegram at its office writing it out, having it copied in a letter press and delivering it to the addressee. The publication is solely by the one depositing the message; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Cashman, 149 Fed. 367, 81 C. C. A. 5, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140, 9 Ann. Cas. 693, and note; unless the message indicates upon its face that its object is defamation there is no liability; Nye v. Tel. Co., 104 Fed. 628; Stockman v. Tel. Co., 10 Kan. App. 580, 63 Pac. 658; Peterson v. Tel. Co., 65 Minn. 18, 67 N. W. 646, 33 L. R. A. 302.

Telegraph companies are not allowed to show any preference in the transmission of despatches, except as regulated by statute; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Ward, 23 Ind. 377, 85 Am. Dec. 462; U. S. Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 46. They may refuse to send obscene messages, but they cannot judge of the good or bad faith of the senders in the use of language not in itself immoral; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495. They may refuse to communicate a message which is to furnish the means of carrying on an illegal business; and this, regardless of the motive by which they are actuated in refusing to send the message; Smith v. Tel. Co., 84 Ky. 664, 2 S. W. 483; they need not supply reports to bucket shops; id.

When a telegraph company sends a messenger for the express purpose of taking a telegram, he is the agent of the company, and not of the sender, notwithstanding a stipulation to the opposite effect on the blank; Alexander v. Tel. Co., 158 N. C. 473, 74 S. E. 449, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407.

A telegraph company has the right to choose its own agencies for the delivery of its messages, and may refuse to deliver telegrams by telephone and to receive telephone messages to be telegraphed; People v. Tel. Co., 166 Ill. 15, 46 N. E. 731, 36 L. R. A. 637. But where the company permits its employes to receive, by telephone, messages for transmission, it consents to send a message so received; Texas Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Seiders, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 431, 29 S. W. 258.

Writing a message on the blank of another company is held to be an adoption by the sender of the conditions thereof; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wixelbaum & Co., 113 Ga. 1017, 39 S. E. 443, 56 L. R. A. 741; U. S.

Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519; Clement v. Tel. Co., 137 Mass. 463; when the company accepts a message written on blank paper, the conditions on its blanks do not apply; Pearsall v. Tel. Co., 124 N. Y. 256, 26 N. E. 534, 21 Am. St. Rep. 662 (where the fact that plaintiff was a shareholder was held not to charge him with notice); unless the sender is chargeable with knowledge or notice of the conditions; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buchanan, 35 Ind. 429, 9 Am. Rep. 744; Harris v. Tel. Co., 121 Ala. 519, 25 South. 910, 77 Am. St. Rep. 70; Beasley v. Tel. Co., 39 Fed. 181; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654, 10 S. W. 734, 13 Am. St. Rep. 843; but when the company refused to receive a message because the sender refused to use the blank, it was held that the refusal was not permissible under a statute, but that a claim for damages must be presented within a reasonable time, though the company could not prescribe a limitation; Kirby v. Tel. Co., 7 S. D. 623, 65 N. W. 37, 30 L. R. A. 621, 624, 46 Am. St. Rep. 765, overruling, on rehearing, Kirby v. Tel. Co., 4 S. D. 105, 55 N. W. 759, 30 L. R. A. 612, 46 Am. St. Rep. 765. A telegraph company cannot be compelled to accept messages by telephone, but if it does so it cannot claim the benefit of its printed conditions, and the operator is not the agent of the sender; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Todd, 22 Ind. App. 701, 54 N. E. 446; Carland v. Tel. Co., 118 Mich. 369, 76 N. W. 762, 43 L. R. A. 280, 74 Am. St. Rep. 394.

As to contracts for telegrams not written on the company's blanks, whether they are on the blanks of another company, or on blank paper, or given by telephone, or orally, see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wixelbaum & Co., 113 Ga. 1017, 39 S. E. 443, 56 L. R. A. 741, where it was held that a message written on the blank of another company is subject to the reasonable conditions set out therein, which are presumed to have been adopted; and see also 56 L. R. A. 741, where the same case is reported with an extended note.

Delivery. The company must use reasonable diligence to deliver messages; merely leaving them at the place of address is not sufficient; Western Union Tel. Co. v. De Jarles, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 109, 27 S. E. 792; and this is equally true if the addressee is absent from his residence or place of business; Pope v. Tel. Co. 9 Ill. App. 283. The leading principle as to delivery is that the message is to be delivered to the person primarily, and not to the place, and if the person cannot be found at the specified place it may be negligence for the company to leave the telegram at the place, without making further efforts to find the person; Crow. Electr. § 412; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Houghton, 82 Tex. 561, 17 S. W. 846, 15 L. R. A. 129, 27 Am. St. Rep. 918; Beas- ley v. Tel. Co., 39 Fed. 181; especially if the name is in the directory; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Newhouse, 6 Ind. App. 422, 33 N. E. 800. And the message should not be left at the office till called for; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Lindley, 62 Ind. 371. Delivery at a hotel is sufficient. If the addressee lives in the town, a misspelled name is not an excuse for nondelivery; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Gamble (Tex.) 101 S. W. 1166; nor is an abortive attempt to deliver; Western U. Tel. Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511, 14 N. E. 894. The company is bound to deliver a message where the true address can be ascertained by reasonable diligence; Klopff v. Tel. Co., 100 Tex. 540, 101 S. W. 1072, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498, 123 Am. St. Rep. 831; if personal delivery cannot be made, it must be delivered to those in charge of the business or to members of the family; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Woods, 56 Kan. 737, 44 Pac. 989; see as to the duty of the company to find the person addressed, Western U. Tel. Co. v. Houghton, 82 Tex. 561, 17 S. W. 846, 27 Am. St. Rep. 918, 15 L. R. A. 129, with note.

Where a telegraph operator accepts a telegram for transmission, the fact that there is no office at the place to which it is to be sent does not relieve the company from its liability for failure to transmit and deliver; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Jones, 69 Miss. 658, 13 South. 471, 30 Am. St. Rep. 579. If a telegram is addressed to one person in care of another, the company may deliver it to the latter without being guilty of any negligence, even if it fails to reach the person; Lefler v. Tel. Co., 131 N. C. 355, 42 S. E. 819, 59 L. R. A. 477; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Young, 77 Tex. 245, 13 S. W. 985, 19 Am. St. Rep. 751; though no effort was made to find the addressee; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Terrell, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 30 S. W. 70.

It has been held that the delivery of a message to a telegraph company for transmission raises an inference that it was received by the addressee; Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen (Mass.) 556, 83 Am. Dec. 712.

If there was delay in the delivery of the message, the burden is upon the company to explain it; Harkness v. Tel. Co., 73 Ia. 190, 34 N. W. 811, 5 Am. St. Rep. 672; Julian v. Tel. Co., 98 Ind. 327; and when there was a delay of a week, there is a presumption of negligence, but it may be rebutted, and to do so a preponderance of evidence is not required, since on the whole case the burden of proving negligence is on the plaintiff; Shepard v. Tel. Co., 143 N. C. 244, 55 S. E. 704, 118 Am. St. Rep. 796.

A telegraph company was not negligent in not delivering a warning message before the person to whom it was addressed was killed by his pursuers, where it could have delivered the message only by sending out messengers to watch for his arrival; Ross v. Tel. Co., 81 Fed. 676, 26 C. C. A. 564.

The fact that the addressee of a telegram, announcing the death of her brother, cannot attend his funeral without telegraphing the family to postpone the funeral and their compliance with the request, does not deprive her of a right of action against the company for failure to deliver the message; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Caldwell, 126 Ky. 42, 102 S. W. 840, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748, with note on contingencies in the possible action of the addressee or some third person as affecting liability. If a message is of such character as reasonably to suggest that mental suffering would result from the failure to deliver, the company is liable for mental suffering resulting from the non-delivery, and where it was customary to deliver messages beyond the delivery limits by telephone, it is competent for the company to enter into an agreement for such delivery; Lyles v. Tel. Co., 77 S. C. 174, 57 S. E. 725, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534.

Recovery cannot be had for the loss of a sale by delay in delivery of a cipher message unless the company knew its meaning or importance; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Cotton Oil Co., 136 Ky. 843, 122 S. W. 852, 125 S. W. 266.

Breach of the contract for prompt delivery of a telegram in another state takes place at the point where the addressee was, and not at the place where the mistake occurred, so that the courts of the former state, in which the action was brought, will apply their own rule as to damages; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Lacer, 122 Ky. 839, 93 S. W. 34, 121 Am. St. Rep. 502, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 751, and note on the liability of telegraph companies generally.

Where a telegraph message sent from a place outside of the state is to be delivered in a state, the contract between the sender and the telegraph company is to be performed there, and will be construed in accordance with the laws of the state of delivery; North P. & P. Co. v. Tel. Co., 70 Ill. App. 275.

See MENTAL SUFFERING; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Telegrams and Telephone Conversations as Evidence. Messages are instruments of evidence, and are governed by the same rules as other writings; Scott & J. Telegr. § 340; the original message is said to be the best evidence; if this cannot be produced, then a copy should be produced; id. § 341; see Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 440; Anheuser-Busch Bg. Ass'n v. Huttmacher, 127 Ill. 652, 21 N. E. 626, 4 L. R. A. 575. As to which is the original, is said to "depend upon which party is responsible for its transmission across the line, or, in other words, whose agent the telegraph company is. The first communication in a transaction, if it is all negotiated across the wires, will only be effective in the form in which it reaches its destination." Durkee v. R. Co., 29 Vt. 140. See Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307, 93 Am. Dec. 511; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 440.

A telegram as received is only admitted as secondary evidence where the company was the agent of the sender, and there must be proof that the company was duly authorized to send; Cobb v. Lumber Co., 57 W. Va. 49, 49 S. E. 1005, 110 Am. St. Rep. 734; but where the telegraph company was shown to be the agent of the sender, the message delivered was primary evidence against him; Morgan v. People, 59 Ill. 58; Trevor v. Wood et al., 36 N. Y. 307, 93 Am. Dec. 511; if the receiver is the employer, the original message given by the sender to the operator must be produced; Durkee v. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127; in an action for failure to deliver with due diligence, the delivered message is the original; Conyers v. Cable Co., 92 Ga. 619, 19 S. E. 253, 44 Am. St. Rep. 100; but in an action for failure to transmit the message, the dispatch handed to the operator is the original; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 223; to prove a hiring by telegraph, the dispatch received is the original; Wilson v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 481, 18 N. W. 291; Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 682, 75 Am. Dec. 88. The rule that a letter following a previous one calling for a reply should prove itself by contents does not apply to telegrams; Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487.

The signature of a clerk of a telegraph company to a despatch was held to be sufficient, under the statute of frauds, where the original instructions had been signed by the party; Gray, Com. by Tel. 138; Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 39 Am. Rep. 355; Little v. Dougherty, 11 Colo. 103, 17 Pac. 292; L. R. 5 C. P. 295. See 6 U. C. C. P. 221.

A contract may be made and proved in court by telegraphic despatches; Taylor v. The Robert Campbell, 20 Mo. 254; Leonard v. Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. St. Rep. 446; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327; L. R. 6 Ex. 7; and the same rules apply in determining whether a contract has been made by telegrams as in cases of a contract made by letter; Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307, 93 Am. Dec. 511; 31 U. C. Q. B. 18; Minnesota L. O. Co. v. Lead Co., 4 Dill. 431, Fed. Cas. No. 9,635; 20 Q. B. D. 640. Real estate may be leased or sold by telegram if the despatch was duly signed; Calhoun v. Atchison, 4 Bush (Ky.) 261, 96 Am. Dec. 299. Contracts by telegraph satisfy the statute of frauds in England; Chit. Contr., 13th ed. 15.

Statutes in some states provide that when any notice, information, or intelligence, written or otherwise, is required to be given, it may be given by telegraph, and powers of attorney or other instruments in writing duly proved or acknowledged for record may, with the proper certificate, be sent by telegraph and the telegraph copy recorded; and so of checks, due bills, promissory notes, and bills of exchange. And in such states writs and processes in legal proceedings can be transmitted by telegraph.

Notice of issue of an injunction may be transmitted by telegraph; 13 Ch. D. 110; Morgan v. People, 59 Ill. 58; Cape May & S. L. R. Co. v. Johnson, 35 N. J. Eq. 422.

Conversations over a telephone are admissible, without identification of the voice, the voluntary connection of a person with the telephone system being held to put him in the same category, with respect to communications received, as the result of a connection asked for, as would exist with reference to conversations with an unknown clerk in his place of business; Wolfe v. Ry. Co., 97 Mo. 473, 11 S. W. 49, 3 L. R. A. 539, 19 Am. St. Rep. 331; Globe P. Co. v. Stahl, 23 Mo. App. 451; Rock I. & P. R. Co. v. Potter, 36 Ill. App. 590; C. C. Thompson & W. Co. v. Appleby, 5 Kan. App. 680, 48 Pac. 933; but where the nature of the conversation is such as to require identification of the person speaking, in order to make such conversations admissible, the voice of the person speaking must be recognized; J. Obermann Brewing Co. v. Adams, 35 Ill. App. 540; Kimbark v. Equipment Co., 103 Ill. App. 632; Swing v. Walker, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 366; Murphy v. Jack, 142 N. Y. 215, 36 N. E. 882, 40 Am. St. Rep. 590; or the person identified; Davis v. Walter & Son, 70 Ia. 465, 30 N. W. 804; which may be by hearing or other circumstances; William Deering & Co. v. Shumpik, 67 Minn. 348, 69 N. W. 1088; Shawyer v. Chamberlain, 113 Ia. 742, 84 N. W. 661, 86 Am. St. Rep. 411; and the recognition of the voice is implied from testimony that the witness talked with a person named; Galt v. Woliver, 103 Ill. App. 71; and so when the voice was recognized as that of a person employed in the office, but the name was not known; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Heidenheimer, 82 Tex. 195, 17 S. W. 608, 27 Am. St. Rep. 861; or as that of the declarant, when it is sought to prove a declaration made over the telephone; Stepp v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. Rep. 349, 20 S. W. 753. Where the witness recognized the voice, he was not disqualified from testifying to what he had heard because he was eavesdropping; De Lore v. Smith (Or.) 136 Pac. 13, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 555. Delivery of a telegram over the telephone is not sufficiently proved, without identification or recognition of the voice; Planters' C. O. Co. v. Tel. Co., 126 Ga. 621, 55 S. E. 495, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, and note. A conversation over the telephone, where the voice was recognized, was admitted in a criminal case, against objection, but upon what ground did not appear; People v. Ward, 3 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 483, 511, note; so also where the accused admitted having called up the witness; Chapman v. Com., 112 S. W. 567, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 965. Where the operator repeated the conversation and was known to be doing it, proof of what she reported the other party to have said was admitted on the ground of agency; Sullivan v. Kuykendall, 82 Ky. 483, 56 Am. Rep. 901; Oskamp

v. Gadsden, 35 Neb. 7, 52 N. W. 718, 17 L. R. A. 440, 37 Am. St. Rep. 428; contra, Wilson v. Coleman, 81 Ga. 297, 6 S. E. 693. An acknowledgment of a deed through a telephone by a married woman was held valid; Banning v. Banning, 80 Cal. 271, 22 Pac. 210, 13 Am. St. Rep. 156; but reading a subpoena on a telephone was not a good service; Ex parte Terrell (Tex.) 95 S. W. 536; and such communication is insufficient to sustain an affidavit for an attachment, in the absence of identification of the person speaking, though it would be sufficient if it appeared that the affiant knew and recognized his voice; Murphy v. Jack, supra. A demand for payment of a note over the telephone was held sufficient to hold the endorser, where the maker had answered that he was unable to pay and had not insisted on his statutory right to the exhibition of the instrument; Gilpin v. Savage, 60 Misc. 605, 112 N. Y. Supp. 802. See also 56 Alb. L. J. 233.

Where the endorsee of a promissory note demanded payment by the maker over the telephone, it was held that this was not a sufficient presentment to charge the endorser; Gilpin v. Savage, 201 N. Y. 167, 94 N. E. 656, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 417, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 861, reversing 132 App. Div. 948, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1108, and 60 Misc. 605, 112 N. Y. Supp. 802. It is permitted to prove in evidence a conversation with a person who answers a telephone call after connection has been obtained with the place of business of one of the parties to the suit; Barrett v. Wagner, 105 Minn. 118, 117 N. W. 245, 127 Am. St. Rep. 531.

Disclosure of Messages by Employés. Employés of telegraph companies cannot refuse to answer questions as to messages transmitted by them; and they must, if called upon, produce such messages; 20 L. T. (N. S.) 421; U. S. v. Hunter, 15 Fed. 712; Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426; Ex parte Jaynes, 70 Cal. 638, 12 Pac. 117; an operator may be required to testify to the contents of a telegram addressed and delivered to a defendant on trial under indictment; State v. Litchfield, 58 Me. 267; National Bank v. Bank, 7 W. Va. 544. And even when a statute forbids the divulging of the contents of a telegram, it has been held not to apply when the testimony of an operator is required in a court of justice; 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 274. See Allen, Tel. Cas. 496, n. The power of the court to compel the local manager of a company to search for and produce private telegrams has been enforced by subpœna duces tecum, notwithstanding a statute similar to that referred to above; U. S. v. Hunter, 15 Fed. 712; Woods v. Miller, 55 Ia. 168, 7 N. W. 484, 39 Am. Rep. 170. The doctrine of these decisions has been severely criticised, but they have not been overruled; Cooley, Const. Lim., 371; 18 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 65. See 5 So. L. Rev. 473.

The Home Secretary of England has the power to order telegrams to be detained and opened for reasons of state or public justice, which power is exercised by express warrant under his signature, by statute.

Actions by and against Telegraph and Telephone Companies. The companies are liable for breach of contract where there is one, or in tort for negligence arising either in the performance or non-performance of their duties to those who deal with them; Brown v. R. Co., 54 Wis. 342, 11 N. W. 356, 911, 41 Am. Rep. 41; Shingleur v. Tel. Co., 72 Miss. 1030, 18 South. 425, 30 L. R. A. 444, 48 Am. St. Rep. 604. It is said that there is no liability in tort to the sender where there is an express contract; Crow. Electr. § 458; except perhaps in cases where the stipulations on the telegraph blanks are considered rather as regulations of the business than as contracts; id. If the sender of the message is the agent of the addressee, either disclosed or undisclosed, the latter may maintain an action against the company, whether the company had knowledge of the fact or not; Crow. Electr. § 454.

It has been held that the telegraph company is the agent of both parties and is liable to either for negligence; New York & W. P. Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. 298, 78 Am. Dec. 338; but it is probably more accurate to say that it is not an agent for either, but independent of both, as exercising a quasi public function; McPeck v. Tel. Co., 107 Ia. 362, 78 N. W. 63, 43 L. R. A. 214, 70 Am. St. Rep. 205; Alexander v. Tel. Co., 66 Miss. 161, 5 South. 397, 3 L. R. A. 71, 14 Am. St. Rep. 556; and for a failure to exercise the degree of care and diligence to which they are bounden, they are liable to the injured party; id.; Gray v. Tel. Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706, 56 L. R. A. 301, note.

In England there is said to be no action for mere negligence, and, the only remedy being on the contract, the courts hold that the receiver, not being a party to it, can claim no rights under it; Dixon v. Reuters' Tele. Co., 3 C. P. D. 1; Playford v. United Kingdom Tel. Co., L. R. 4 Q. B. 706. In the first of these cases the suit was by the addressee and in the last one by the sender. In both cases the court held that there was no cause of action and expressly declined to adopt the view of the American courts that there is any analogy between the liabilities of common carriers and of telegraph companies. The latter of the English cases cited was followed in Feaver v. Montreal Tel. Co., 23 U. C. C. P. 150. This case was decided in 1880, but in 1890 and 1892, in two Canadian cases, it was held that a telegraph company is responsible to the addressee in an action of tort for negligence in failing to deliver a message; Bell v. Dominion Tel. Co., 3 Montr. Leg. N. 406; Watzo v. Mont. Tel. Co., 5 Montr. Leg. N. 87; and in the periodical last cited, at page 87, these cases are the subject of editorial comment as being interesting evidences of concurrence in American and Canadian courts. And in an earlier case, Kinghorn v. Montreal Tel. Co. (1859) 18 D. C. Q. B. 60, while the plaintiff failed on the ground that, even if the telegram had been received, there would have been no complete contract, the suit being in tort, the court said that if the company "had received the message for the purpose alleged . . . he would have a good cause of action against them, such as he has brought—that is in tort for breach of duty," "and if he showed . . . damage from their negligence . . . he would be entitled to recover."

In the United States the right of action of the receiver of a message is conceded; 1 Am. L. Reg. 685; Crow. Electr. § 462; Pearsall v. Tel. Co., 124 N. Y. 256, 26 N. E. 534, 21 Am. St. Rep. 662. This right has been based upon the "misfeasance" of the company, upon which the receiver acted to his injury; New York & W. P. Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. 298, 78 Am. Dec. 338; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1; and the companies have been held equally responsible for their negligence to the addressee as to the sender; Young v. Tel. Co., 107 N. C. 370, 11 S. E. 1144, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883; Wadsworth v. Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695, 8 S. W. 574, 6 Am. St. Rep. 864; Webbe v. Tel. Co., 169 Ill. 610, 48 N. E. 670, 61 Am. St. Rep. 207.

An extended discussion of the liability of the company to the addressee, by Otto H. Draige, in 26 Wkly. L. Bul. 138, which contains a large collection of cases, reaches the conclusion that the addressee has a right of action for all damages not too remote, but resulting directly from the company's negligent act,—a right of action which cannot be impaired by any conditions entered into with the sender.

The American doctrine on which this line of cases rests gives to a third person a right of action on a promise made for his benefit, though he be a stranger both to the promise and the consideration, and it is said that two elements must combine an intent to benefit the third party and there must be an obligation from the promise to the third party, Townsend v. Rackham, 143 N. Y. 516, 38 N. E. 731. This American rule, in this as in many other cases, was originally based upon early English cases such as Dutton v. Poole, 2 Lev. 210, which have been overruled; Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 De G. & S. 393. See an interesting historical discussion of the English and American rules in Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. § 467 et seq.

Mandamus is a proper remedy to enforce the duties of a company to the public and secure its facilities, and that was the mode of proceeding adopted in the cases where the courts have enforced the obligation to install telephones for all persons and corporations impartially. A mandamus will lie to compel a company to supply facilities, though petitioner has not complied with his previous contract to use respondent's telephone exclusively, the remedy for that being an action for breach of contract; State v. Tel. Co., 61 S. C. 83, 39 S. E. 257, 55 L. R. A. 139, 85 Am. St. Rep. 870; but it will not lie to compel a telephone company to put a telephone in a bawdyhouse; Godwin v. Tel. Co., 136 N. C. 258, 48 S. E. 636, 67 L. R. A. 251, 103 Am. St. Rep. 941, 1 Ann. Cas. 203, where the objection was to the character of the house for which the telephone was sought, and not to the character of the plaintiff.

Telephone companies are liable for setting fire to buildings, caused by lightning striking the wires; Griffith v. Tel. & Tel. Co., 72 Vt. 441, 48 Atl. 643, 52 L. R. A. 919; but where the best known device for protecting persons against injury by atmospheric electricity has been placed on the telephone, there is no liability for injury to a user of the telephone during a violent thunderstorm; Rocap v. Tel. Co., 230 Pa. 597, 79 Atl. 769, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279.

Where a telegram was erroneously delivered to the wrong person, who undertook a journey because of it, he could not recover, where the person whose illness was announced was a stranger, and the name of the addressee, though similar, was not identical; Bowyer v. Tel. Co., 130 Ia. 324, 106 N. W. 728, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 984. The company is not liable for failure to give a proper connection on a call for a physician, and the damages are too remote in the absence of a specific contract; Southwestern Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Solomon, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 306, 117 S. W. 214.

An action cannot be maintained at common law for unreasonable delay in the delivery of a death notice where the only damage is mental suffering; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Sklar, 126 Fed. 295, 61 C. C. A. 281; Alexander v. Tel. Co., 126 Fed. 445; nor under the Virginia statute; id.

A company is not liable for failure to transmit a message to which no internal revenue stamp is affixed as required by law; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Young, 138 Ala. 240, 36 South. 374.

With respect to actions by telegraph or telephone companies, it has been held that the remedy of the latter against a subscriber for refusal to pay is to bring suit for the amount due; State v. Telephone Co., 17 Neb. 126, 22 N. W. 237, 52 Am. Rep. 404.

A telegraph company is liable in damages to a traveler, who during an electric storm, comes in contact with one of its wires, charged with electricity from the atmosphere, and is injured thereby; Southwestern Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Robinson, 50 Fed. 810, 1 C. C. A. 684, 2 U. S. App. 205.

Where the lessees of a tramway discharged

Electricity into the ground by uninsulated wires and the current interfered with the instruments of a telephone company, the tramway company was held liable; 68 L. T. 283. But an injunction will not lie at the suit of a telephone company to restrain an electric railway company from permitting the escape of electricity from its wires, where it appears that the former could obviate the trouble by the use of a return wire, and at a less expense than any method the railway company could adopt; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. R. Co., 42 Fed. 273, 12 L. R. A. 544.

A telephone company may enjoin the proprietor of a hotel from permitting his boarders to use an instrument in the hotel, for their private business, though they may use it to call for a carriage and such like; 32 Am. L. Rev. 736 (S. C. of D. C.), Chesapeake & Potomac Tel. Co. v. Danenhauer.

Under a statute imposing a penalty for refusing to transmit a message, neither the company nor its operator is guilty of libel for sending a message of which the language was innocent on its face, though in fact intended to state that a school committee had been bribed; Grisham v. Tel. Co., 238 Mo. 480, 142 S. W. 271, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 535.

See, generally, Allen, Telegraph Cases; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos.; Scott & Jarnagin, Telegraphs; Sherman & Redfield, Negligence; a collection of leading telegraph and telephone cases, with annotations, 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1-94; 26 Wkly. Law Bul. 147; COMMERCE; EVIDENCE; POLES; WIRES.

The rules as to the admissibility of evidence in actions against such companies is the same as in other cases. It must always be responsive to the issue involved; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Hoeffner, 44 Ill. App. 137; Kyle v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 16 U. C. C. P. 76. In a suit against a company, either in contract or tort, there must be proved in general a delivery of the message to the company, its implied or express contract to transmit it, and its breach of duty thereof; Pearsall v. Tel. Co., 124 N. Y. 256, 26 N. E. 534, 21 Am. St. Rep. 662. As to what constitutes a delivery, and the consequent duty of the company, see supra.

Where there has been proof of delivery and an error or other breach of duty, the burden is on the company to disprove negligence; Bartlett v. Tel. Co., 62 Me. 209, 16 Am. Rep. 437; Cowan v. Tel. Co., 122 Ia. 379, 98 N. W. 281, 64 L. R. A. 545, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268; where the suit is for an error on a connecting line, the burden is on the defendant to show that such line caused the loss; La Grange v. Tel. Co., 25 La. Ann. 383.

The question whether there was negligence, and what constitutes it, in the particular case, are exclusively for the jury; Coit v. Tel. Co., 130 Cal. 657, 63 Pac. 83, 53 L. R. A. 678, 80 Am. St. Rep. 153; McPeck v. Tel.

Co., 107 Ia. 356, 78 N. W. 63, 43 L. R. A. 214, 70 Am. St. Rep. 205.

Damages. In estimating the measure of damages for the failure to transmit a message properly, the general rules upon the subject of damages ex contractu are applied; Gray, Com. by Tel. 80; Squire v. Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232, 93 Am. Dec. 157; Kinghorne v. Montreal Tel. Co., 18 U. C. Q. B. 60; Washington & N. O. Tel. Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 122. The damages for negligent transmission of a telegram are said to be usually settled under the general rule of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, limiting consequential damages to those within the contemplation of the parties at the date of the contract; 12 H. L. R. 423; but the application of this rule has been refused; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542, 4 South. 844; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Beals, 56 Neb. 415, 76 N. W. 903, 71 Am. St. Rep. 682. This raises in most cases the question of notice to the operator as ground for special damages, which may be either actual or constructive; Squire v. Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232, 93 Am. Dec. 157; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Valentine, 18 Ill. App. 57; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575, 23 N. E. 583, 7 L. R. A. 474, 19 Am. St. Rep. 55; Primrose v. Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883, where the cases are collected on the reasonableness of the regulation requiring a message to be repeated in order to warrant the recovery of actual damages. A telegraph company is not relieved from liability by the fact that at the time of the delivery of the message relating to sickness and death it was not informed of the relation of the parties; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 12 S. W. 857, 6 L. R. A. 844, 16 Am. St. Rep. 920; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Fegles, 75 Tex. 537, 12 S. W. 860.

The company is liable for damages for the incorrect transmission of a message, notwithstanding a provision limiting its liability to the amount paid for transmission, as that amount is paid for correct transmission; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Milton, 53 Fla. 484, 43 South. 495, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 560, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1077; but probably the weight of authority is in favor of the validity of such stipulations, except as against gross negligence, and the cases are collected at large in the note to the last cited case.

Where failure to make a telephone connection is without wilfulness or oppression, actual and not punitive damages may be recovered; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. v. Paine, 94 Miss. 883, 48 South. 229; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Jackson, 95 Miss. 79, 48 South. 614; but merely nominal damages and not special damages growing out of the professional character of the person called, unless it appear that a conversation with him would have prevented the loss; Haber, B. B. Hat Co. v. Tel. Co., 118 Ga. 874, 45 S. E. 696.

and the requirement that the subscriber should first pay the long distance charge in advance at the central office is not so oppressive as to warrant exemplary damages; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Baker, 85 Miss. 486, 37 South. 1012.

Where a telegraph company is sued for negligence in transmitting a message, the measure of damages, unless special damages are alleged and proved, is the sum paid for transmission; Cutts v. Tel. Co., 71 Wis. 46, 36 N. W. 627. Speculative damages are not recoverable for error in transmitting a message; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Crall, 39 Kan. 580, 18 Pac. 719. Unless the despatch shows on its face the importance of the matter to which it relates, or information on this point is communicated to the company's agents, only nominal damages can be recovered for the default of the company; Pope v. Tel. Co., 9 Ill. App. 283; U. S. Tel. Co. v. Gildersleve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519; Beaupré v. Tel. Co., 21 Minn. 155; Baldwin v. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744, 6 Am. Rep. 165; Mackay v. Tel. Co., 16 Nev. 222.

If the sender of a cipher message does not inform the company of the nature of the transaction to which it relates, or what might happen if it were not correctly transmitted, he can recover only the sum paid for sending it, in case of a mistake in its transmission or delivery; Primrose v. Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575, 23 N. E. 583, 7 L. R. A. 474, 19 Am. St. Rep. 55; Candee v. Tel. Co., 34 Wis. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 452; Mackay v. Tel. Co., 16 Nev. 222; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Wilson, 32 Fla. 527, 14 South. 1, 22 L. R. A. 434, 37 Am. St. Rep. 125; either nominal damages or the cost of sending it, at most; Ferguson v. Tel. Co., 178 Pa. 377, 35 Atl. 979, 35 L. R. A. 554, 56 Am. St. Rep. 770. See also Western U. Tel. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444, 8 Sup. Ct. 577, 31 L. Ed. 479, as to MEASURE OF DAMAGES. Abbreviations in a telegram may render it unintelligible; but if they represent well-known trade abbreviations which the operator may be presumed to understand, the company will be put on information and become liable for negligence in its transmission; Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 33 Ill. App. 400; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299, 45 Am. Rep. 480; if the abbreviations are understood by the company, it is not a cipher despatch, and the company is liable for negligent alteration in transmission; Pepper v. Tel. Co., 87 Tenn. 554, 11 S. W. 783, 4 L. R. A. 660, 10 Am. St. Rep. 699. Orders to agents to buy and sell stocks, though briefly expressed, have been held to impart information sufficiently as to their importance; U. S. Tel. Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. 262, 93 Am. Dec. 751; Tyler v. Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421, 14 Am. Rep. 38; Rittenhouse v. Independent Line of Telegraph, 44 N. Y. 263, 4 Am. Rep.

Lines on Post Roads. Any telegraph company organized under the laws of any state is granted the right, under certain restrictions, to construct and operate lines through and over any portion of the public domain, and along any of the military or post roads of the United States, and under or across navigable streams or waters, provided that they do not obstruct their navigation, or interfere with ordinary travel; R. S. § 5263.

A telegraph company acquires no right, under this act, to occupy the public streets of a city without compensation; St. Louis v. Tel. Co., 148 U. S. 92, 13 Sup. Ct. 485, 37 L. Ed. 380, Id., 149 U. S. 465, and note, 13 Sup. Ct. 990, 37 L. Ed. 810; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 156 U. S. 210, 15 Sup. Ct. 356, 39 L. Ed. 399; but the word "highway," in a grant to a telephone company to construct its lines, includes streets and ways of a city; State v. Sheboygan, 111 Wis. 23, 86 N. W. 657, where the questions involved are discussed at large. This act, so far as it declares that the erection of telegraph lines shall, as against state interference, be free to all who accept its terms and conditions, and that a telegraph company of one state shall not, after accepting them, be excluded by another state from prosecuting its business within her jurisdiction, is a legitimate regulation of commerce and is appropriate legislation to execute the powers of commerce over the postal service; Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. Ed. 708. It applies equally to telephone companies. The privileges granted must be exercised subject to the police power of the state, provided regulations are not oppressive and such as show an intent to control and perhaps defeat the company's existence; Richmond v. Tel. Co., 85 Fed. 19, 28 C. C. A. 659. Since this act a railroad company, operating a post road over which interstate commerce is carried, cannot grant to a telegraph company the sole right to construct a line over its right of way so as to exclude other companies which have accepted the provisions of the said act, the lines of which would not obstruct the business of the first company; U. S. v. R. Co., 160 U. S. 1, 16 Sup. Ct. 190, 40 L. Ed. 319. Cables laid across navigable streams or waters must not obstruct navigation; Western U. Tel. Co. v. S. S. Co., 59 Fed. 365, 8 C. C. A. 152, 20 U. S. App. 247.

Submarine telegraph lines are subordinate to navigation and must be so laid and maintained as not to interfere therewith, and the company is liable in damages to vessels injured by them; Western U. Tel. Co. v. S. S. Co., 43 Fed. 85, affirmed 59 Fed. 365, 8 C. A. 152; Blanchard v. Tel. Co., 60 N. Y. 510; but in England injury resulting from submarine telegraph lines is held to be a question of negligence; 15 C. B. N. S. 759.

An opinion of the attorney-general given at the request of the secretary of state in January, 1898, holds that, in the absence of legislation, the president may control the landing of foreign submarine cables, either preventing it, if necessary, or permitting it on conditions demanded by the public interest.

TELLER (tallier, one who keeps a tally). An officer in a bank or other institution. A person appointed to receive votes. A name given to certain officers in the English exchequer.

The duties of tellers in banks consist of the receiving of all sums of money paid into the bank, and the paying of all sums drawn out. The position ranks next in importance to that of cashier. See CASHIER; OFFICER.

TELLTALES. In railroad practice ropes suspended from a wire across the track warning of a low bridge. West v. R. Co., 179 Fed. 801, 103 C. C. A. 293.

TEMPERANCE. It has no fixed legal meaning as contradistinguished from its usual import. It is habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions; restrained or moderate indulgence; moderation; as temperance in eating and drinking; temperance in the indulgence of joy or mirth. Web. Dict. in People v. Dashaway Ass'n, 84 Cal. 123, 24 Pac. 277, 12 L. R. A. 117. See LIQUOR LAWS.

TEMPEST. A violent or furious storm; a current of wind rushing with extreme violence, and usually accompanied with rain or snow. 29 U. C. C. B. 84. See ACT OF GOD; LIGHTNING.

TEMPLE. See INNS OF COURT.

TEMPORAL LORDS. See PEERS; PARLIAMENT.

TEMPORALITIES. Revenues, lands, teneaments, and lay fees which bishops have from livery of the king, and in virtue of which they sit in parliament. 1 Rolle, Abr. 881.

TEMPORALITY. The laity.

TEMPORARY. That which is to last for a limited time. Approved in People v. Wright, 70 Ill. 399. See PERMANENT.

TEMPORIS EXCEPTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A plea of lapse of time in bar of an action, like our statute of limitations.

TEMPUS (Lat.). Time in general. A time limited; a season: e. g. tempus personis, mast time in the forest.

TEMPUS SEMESTRE. In Old English Law. The period of six months or half a year consisting of one hundred and eighty-two days. Cro. Jac. 166.

TEMPUS UTILE (Lat.). In Civil Law. A period of time which runs beneficially: i. e. feast-days are not included, nor does it run against one absent in a foreign country, or on business of the republic, or detained by stress of weather. But one detained by sickness is not protected from its running; for it runs where there is power to act by an agent as well as where there is power to act personally; and the sick man might have deputed his agent. Calvinus.

TENANCY. The state or condition of a tenant; the estate held by a tenant.

TENANT. (Lat. tenere, to hold). One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, or at will. In a popular sense, he is one who has the temporary use and occupation of lands or tenements which belong to another, the duration and other terms of whose occupations are usually defined by an agreement called a lease, while the parties thereto are placed in the relation of landlord and tenant. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; 5 M. & G. 54.

The term is applied generally in connection with the names of the various estates in land to indicate the person entitled to a particular estate, as tenant in common, by the curtesy, in dower, in fee, for life, in severalty, at sufferance, in tail, at will, for years, from year to year, and joint tenants. See the several titles relating to these estates. Tenant of the demesne is one who is tenant of a mesne lord; Hamm. N. P. 392. Tenant by the manner is one who has a less estate than the fee in the land which remains in the reversion. He is so called because in avowries and pleadings it is specially shown in what manner he is tenant in contradistinction to veray tenant, who is called simple tenant. See Hamm. N. P. 393; VERAY. As to tenant paravail, see PARAVAIL. See ESTATE; LEASE; NOTICE TO QUIT.

See ESTATE IN COMMON; CURTESY; ESTATE BY THE CURTESY; DOWER; FEE-SIMPLE; FEE-TAIL; ESTATE FOR LIFE; SEVERALTY; ESTATE IN; SUFFERANCE; ESTATE AT WILL; ESTATE FOR YEARS; ESTATE OF JOINT TENANCY; ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE; ENTIRETY; ELEGIT; STATUTE MERCHANT; STATUTE STAPLE; JOINT TENANTS.

TENANT RIGHT. In leases from the crown, corporations, or the church, it is usual to grant a further term to the old tenants in preference to strangers; and as this expectation is seldom disappointed, such tenants are considered as having an ulterior interest beyond their subsisting term; and this interest is called the tenant right. Bacon Abr. Leases and Terms for Years (U).

TENANT TO THE PRÆCIPE. See RECOVERY.

TENDER. An offer to deliver something, made in pursuance of some contract or obligation, under such circumstances as to require no further act from the party making it to complete the transfer.

See LEGAL TENDER.

In Contracts. It may be either of money or of specific articles.

Tender of money must be made by some person authorized by the debtor; 2 Maule & S. 86; to the creditor, or to some person properly authorized, and who must have capacity to receive it; 1 Camp. 477; Huston v. Mitchell, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 307, 16 Am. Dec. 506; McIniffe v. Wheelock, 1 Gray (Mass.) 600 (but necessity will sometimes create exceptions to this rule; thus any one may make a tender for an idiot; 1 Inst. 206 b; an uncle, although not appointed guardian, has been permitted to make a tender on behalf of an infant whose father was dead; Brown v. Dysinger, 1 Rawle [Pa.] 408; in lawful coin of the country; 5 Co. 114; Halliwell & A. Bank v. Howard, 13 Mass. 235; Moody v. Mahurin, 4 N. H. 296; or paper money which has been legalized for this purpose; Thorndike v. U. S., 2 Mas. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 13,987; as, U. S. treasury notes or "greenbacks;" Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287; Bank of State v. Burton, 27 Ind. 426; or foreign coin made current by law; 2 Nev. & M. 519; but a tender in bank notes will be good if not objected to on that account; 2 B. & P. 526; Snow v. Perry, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 539; Brown v. Dysinger, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 408. A tender of a ground rent payable in Spanish milled dollars of a specified weight is good, though it does not include nine days interest, amounting to 1¼ cents; Milligan v. Marshall, 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 60.

He who tenders must be ready to pay or have within his reach the means to pay and actually offer to pay; 10 East 101; Sargent v. Graham, 5 N. H. 440, 22 Am. Dec. 469. The money need not always be brought forward as well as offered, especially if the party to whom the offer is made refuses to receive it; 2 M. & S. 86; Breed v. Hurd, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 356. The person making the tender need not have the money in his possession; 2 C. & P. 77. A refusal to accept a check for the sole reason that it was insufficient in amount, is a waiver of all objection to the form of the tender; Larsen v. Breene, 12 Colo. 480, 21 Pac. 498. A corporation is not bound to tender a certificate before it can maintain an action on a subscription for its stock; Columbia Electric Co. v. Dixon, 46 Minn. 463, 49 N. W. 244. The exact amount due must be tendered; Boyden v. Moore, 5 Mass. 365; Patnote v. Sanders, 41 Vt. 66, 98 Am. Dec. 564; Helphrey v. R. Co., 29 Ia. 480; though more may be tendered, if the excess is not to be handed back; 5 Co. 114; 4 B. & Ad. 546; and asking change does not vitiate unless objection is made on that account; 1 Camp. 70; 5 Dowl. & R. 289; see Gradle v. Warner, 140 Ill. 123, 29 N. E. 1118; and the offer must be unqualified; 1 M. & W. 310; Wood v. Hitchcock, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 47; Hunter v. Warner, 1 Wis. 141.

A tender accompanied with conditions which the party has no right to impose is of no avail; Odum v. R. Co., 94 Ala. 488, 10 South. 222. Though a conditional tender is not good, a tender under a protest, reserving the right of the debtor to dispute the amount due, is a good tender, if it does not impose any conditions on the creditor; [1892] 1 Ch. 1. Where a decree directed complainant to pay defendant, or into court, a certain sum, and defendant thereupon to deliver to the complainant, or into court, certain stock, held that the tender of the same with interest coupled with a demand for the surrender of the stock and a settlement of the pending appeal was bad as a conditional tender and did not stop the running of the interest; Beardsley v. Beardsley, 86 Fed. 16, 29 C. C. A. 538. One who makes a tender in order to stop the running of the interest must show that he has kept on hand, so as to be constantly ready and able to pay, the amount of the tender in lawful money at any time the creditor should elect to take it; id. See Cheney v. Bilby, 74 Fed. 52, 20 C. C. A. 291.

When a larger sum than is due is tendered, it is not necessary that the debtor pay or keep good the whole amount; for, although the tender of money is supposed to be an admission by the debtor that the entire sum tendered is due and payable, yet it is not conclusive evidence to that effect; Abel v. Opel, 24 Ind. 250. But where tender was made after suit brought, and the amount supposed by defendant to be due was paid into court, it was decided that the full amount must be paid over to the plaintiff, notwithstanding a much less sum was found by arbitrators to be due; Berkheimer v. Geise, 82 Pa. 64.

It is said that the amount must be stated in making the offer; Knight v. Abbott, 30 Vt. 577. It must be made at the time agreed upon; 1 Saund. 33 a, n.; Maynard v. Hunt, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 240; but the offer may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages, if made subsequently, before suit brought; 1 Saund. 33 a, n.; statutes have been passed in many of the states, permitting the debtor to make a tender at any time before trial, of the amount he admits to be due, together with all costs accrued up to date of tender, and compelling plaintiff, in case he do not recover more than the sum tendered, to pay all costs subsequently incurred. See The Enos B. Phillips, 53 Fed. 153; McDaniel v. Upton, 45 Ill. App. 151.

In Pennsylvania, by statute of 1705, in case of a tender made before suit, the amount tendered must in the event of a suit be paid into court; Cornell v. Green, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 14; otherwise, the plea of tender is a nullity. If so paid, tender is a good plea in bar, and if followed up, protects the defendant; Wheeler v. Woodward, 66 Pa. 158. Tender may be made after suit brought by paying the amount tendered into court with the costs up to the time of payment; 1 T. & H. Pr. 744; Stratton v. Graham, 140 N. Y. Supp. 869. At common law the tender of a mortgage debt on the day it falls due and at the appointed place discharges the mortgage; but if made after the maturity of the debt, it must be kept good, in order to have that effect; Crain v. McGoon, 86 Ill. 431, 29 Am. Rep. 37; Smith v. Kelley, 27 Me. 237, 46 Am. Dec. 595; Himmelmänn v. Fitzpatrick, 50 Cal. 650, but mere tender is sufficient to discharge the mortgage; Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343, 78 Am. Dec. 145; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270. Where a chattel mortgage is a mere lien, tender of the amount due at any time before sale under foreclosure discharges the lien; Thomas v. Malting Co., 48 Wash. 560, 94 Pac. 116, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1164, 125 Am. St. Rep. 945, 15 Ann. Cas. 494; Gould v. Armagost, 46 Neb. 897, 65 N. W. 1064; Barbee v. Scoggins, 121 N. C. 135, 28 S. E. 259.

It must be at a suitable hour of the day, during daylight; Wing v. Davis, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 31; at the place agreed upon, or, if no place has been agreed upon, wherever the person authorized to receive payment may be found; 2 M. & W. 223; and, in general, all the conditions of the obligation must be fulfilled. Where a chattel mortgage runs to several mortgagees jointly, to secure a joint debt, a tender to either mortgagee is good; Flanigan v. Seelye, 53 Minn. 23, 55 N. W. 115. The money must have been actually produced and offered, unless the circumstances of the refusal amount to a waiver; 3 C. & P. 342; Bakeman v. Pooler, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 637; Hunter v. Warner, 1 Wis. 141; or at least be in the debtor's possession ready for delivery; Sargent v. Graham, 5 N. H. 440, 22 Am. Dec. 469; Appleton v. Donaldson, 3 Pa. 381.

In order to constitute a valid tender there must be actual ability, accompanied by immediate possibility of reaching out and laying hold of the thing to be delivered, and the making of a manual proffer thereof or of placing it in such a position that the person to receive it may lay hold of it if he chooses; Greenwood v. Watson, 171 Fed. 619, 96 C. C. A. 421; Eastern Oregon Land Co. v. Moody, 198 Fed. 7, 119 C. C. A. 135. To support a plea of tender it must be shown that the tender was fairly made, that it was absolute and unconditional, and that it covered the full amount then due; Lillenthal v. McCormick, 117 Fed. 89, 54 C. C. A. 475; a plea of tender must state how and to whom it was made, as well as the amount tendered, in order that the court may see that as a matter of law the tender was good; Harding, Whitman Co. v. Knitting Mills, 142 Fed. 228.

An actual tender is dispensed with if the party is ready and willing to pay it, but is prevented by the other's declaring that he will not receive it; Odum v. R. Co., 94 Ala. 488, 10 South. 222. Presence of the debtor with the money ready for delivery is enough if the creditor be absent from the appointed place at the appointed time of payment; Gilmore v. Holt, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 258; or if the tender is refused; Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 18.

A tender may be made in the case of unliquidated damages, but it must be kept good, especially where there is a dispute as to the amount due; Dunbar v. De Boer, 44 Ill. App. 615.

See PAYMENT; ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

Tender of specific articles must be made to a proper person, by a proper person, at a proper time; 2 Pars. Contr. 158. The place of delivery is to be determined by the contract, or, in the absence of specific agreement, by the situation of the parties and circumstances of the case; Bronson v. Gleason, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 472; for example, at the manufactory or store of the seller on demand; Rice v. Churchill, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 145; at the place where the goods are at the time of sale; Veazy v. Harmony, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 91; Barr v. Myers, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 295; McMurry v. State, 6 Ala. 326; the seller's place of abode, when the articles are portable, like cattle, and the time fixed; Goodwin v. Holbrook, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 377; Aldrich v. Albee, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 120, 10 Am. Dec. 45. When the goods are cumbrous, it is presumed that the seller was to appoint a place; Bixby v. Whitney, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 192; Mingus v. Pritchett, 14 N. C. 78; or, if he fails to do so upon request, the buyer may appoint a place, giving notice to the seller, if possible; Lamb v. Lathrop, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 95, 27 Am. Dec. 174; Aldrich v. Albee, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 120, 10 Am. Dec. 45. Whether a request is necessary if the seller be without the state, see Bixby v. Whitney, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 192; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 611. The articles must be set apart and distinguished so as to admit of identification by the buyer; Barns v. Graham, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 452, 15 Am. Dec. 394; Bates v. Bates, Walk. (Miss.) 401, 12 Am. Dec. 572. It must be made during daylight, and the articles must be at the place till the last hour of the day; Sweet v. Harding, 19 Vt. 587; Duckham v. Smith, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 372; unless waived by the parties.

In Pleading. If made before action brought; Suffolk Bank v. Bank, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 106; Lavan v. Sternfeld, 55 N. J. L. 41, 25 Atl. 854; tender may be pleaded in excuse; 2 B. & P. 550; Jones v. Hoar, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 291; it must be on the exact day of performance; 1 Saund. 33 a, n.; and if a tender is relied on as a defence, it must be pleaded; Hughes v. Eschback, 7 D. C. 66. It cannot be made to an action for general damages when the amount is not liquidated; 2 Burr. 1120; as, upon a contract; 2 B. & P. 234; covenant other than for the payment of money; 1 Ld. Raym. 566; tort; 2 Stra. 787; or trespass; 2 Wils. 115. It may be pleaded, however, to a quantum meruit; 1 Stra. 576; accidental or involuntary trespass; Slack v. Brown, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 390; Tracy v. Strong, 2 Conn. 659; Brown v. Neal, 36 Me. 407; covenant to pay money; 7 Taunt. 486.

The effect of a tender is to put a stop to accruing damages and interest, and to entitle the defendant to judgment for his costs; 3 Bingh. 290; Carley v. Vance, 17 Mass. 389; Cornell v. Green, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 14; and it may be of effect to prevent interest accruing, though not a technical tender; Suffolk Bank v. Bank, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 106; but unless kept good by payment into court, it will not defeat a recovery of costs; Ramirez v. S. S. Co., 107 Fed. 530.

It admits the plaintiff's right of action as to the amount tendered; Eddy & Hathaway v. O'Hara, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 221; Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Readinger, 28 Neb. 587, 44 N. W. 864; at the date of the suit; Giboney v. Ins. Co., 48 Mo. App. 185; and the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for that amount at least; Brunswick Realty Co. v. Inv. Co. (Utah) 134 Pac. 608; but nothing more, and does not prevent the making of any defence inconsistent with the admissions of the original contract or cause of action, as to any claim beyond that of the sum tendered; Wilson v. Doran, 110 N. Y. 101, 17 N. E. 688. The benefit may be lost by a subsequent demand and refusal of the amount due; 5 B. & Ad. 630; Town v. Trow, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 168; but not by a demand for more than the sum tendered; Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440; or due; 3 Q. B. 915.

See LEGAL TENDER; PAYMENT INTO COURT.

A plea of tender, if defective, should be demurred to, and plaintiff cannot question its sufficiency after accepting the money paid into court under such plea; Gardner v. Black, 98 Ala. 638, 12 South. 813.

TENDER OF AMENDS. See AMENDS.

TENEMENT (from Lat. teneo, to hold). Everything of a permanent nature which may be holden.

House, or homestead. Jacob. Rooms let in houses. See APARTMENT; FLAT.

Property held by a tenant. Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. 299.

In its most extensive signification, tenement comprehends everything which may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature; and not only lands and inheritances which are holden, but also rents and profits à prendre of which a man has any frank tenement, and of which he may be seised ut libero tenemento, are included under this term; Co. Litt. 6 a; 2 Bla. Com. 17; 1 Washb. R. P. 10. In its technical sense it will include an advowson; 3 Atk. 460; 4 Bing. 290; tithes; 1 Stra. 100; 6 Ad. & El. 338; a dignity; 30 Ch. Div. 136; 2 Salk. 509. It includes a wharf; People v. Kelsey, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 372. The word tenements simply, without other circumstances has never been construed to pass a fee; Wright v. Page, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 201, 6 L. Ed. 303. See 1 B. & Ad. 161; Com. Dig. Grant (E. 2), Trespass (A 2).

Maitland (Domesday Book 358) speaks of the use of the "excellent tenement," of the "feeble holding" and the "overworked estate."

TENEMENTAL LAND. Land distributed by a lord among his tenants, as opposed to the demesnes which were occupied by himself and his servants. 2 Bla. Com. 90.

TENENDUM (Lat.). It was used to indicate the lord of whom the land was to be held and the tenure by which it was to be held. Since the statute of quia emptores, it was useful only for the latter purpose; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 194. It is joined to the habendum in this manner—to have and to hold. The words "to hold" have now no meaning in our deeds. 2 Bla. Com. 298. See HABENDUM.

TENERI (Lat.). That part of a bond where the obligor declares himself to be held and firmly bound to the obligee, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, is called the teneri. Fitch v. Brockmon, 3 Cal. 350.

TENET (Lat. he holds). In Pleading. A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done during the tenancy.

When the averment is in the tenet, the plaintiff on obtaining a verdict will recover the place wasted, namely, that part of the premises in which the waste was exclusively done, if it were done in a part only, together with treble damages. But when the averment is in the tenuit, the tenancy being at an end, he will have judgment for his damages only. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 652.

TENNESSEE. The name of one of the United States of America.

It was originally a part of North Carolina. In April, 1784, North Carolina passed an act ceding to the United States, upon certain conditions, all her territory west of the Appalachian or Alleghany Mountains. Before the cession was accepted by congress, it was repealed by another act passed in October, 1784. In December, 1789, the legislature again ceded the territory to the United States; and the cession was accepted by congress by act, April 2, 1790. A convention was called, and a constitution established on February 6, 1796. Tennessee was admitted by an act approved June 1, 1796. Prior to this time a legislature had been elected, the state government organized, and many important laws enacted.

The constitution of 1796 was not submitted to the people for ratification. The authority of the convention established it as the constitution of the state. A new constitution went into effect in 1835. Amendments were ratified in 1853 and 1866. The present constitution was framed, submitted to the people, and ratified in 1870, and went into effect May 6, 1870.

TENOR. A term used in pleading to denote that an exact copy is set out. 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 235; Com. v. Stevens, 1 Mass. 203; 1 East 180.

The tenor of an instrument signifies the true meaning of the matter therein contained. Cowell.

In Chancery Pleading. A certified copy of records of other courts removed into chancery by certiorari. Gresl. Ev. 309.

TENORE INDICTAMENTI MITTENDO.

A writ whereby the record of an indictment and the process thereupon was called out of another court into the Queen's bench. Reg. Orig. 69; Whart.

TENSE. A term used in grammar to denote a distinction of time.

The acts of a court of justice ought to be in the present tense; but the acts of the party may be in the perfect tense; and the continuances are in the perfect tense; 1 Mod. 81. The contract of marriage should be made in language of the present tense; Hantz v. Sealy, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 405. See 1 Saund. 393, n. 1.

TENT. A pavilion; or canvas house enclosed with walls of cloth and covered with the same material. Killman v. State, 2 Tex. App. 222, 28 Am. Rep. 432.

TENTERDEN'S ACT, LORD. The statute of George IV. c. 14, § 6, which provides that no action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon any representation given concerning the character, credit, etc., of another, or to the intent that another person may obtain credit, unless such representation be made in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

TENUIT (Lat. he held). A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done after the termination of the tenancy. See TENET.

TENURE (from Lat. tenere, to hold). The mode by which a man holds an estate in lands.

Such a holding as is coupled with some service, which the holder is bound to perform so long as he continues to hold.

The thing held is called a tenement; the occupant, a tenant; and the manner of his holding constitutes the tenure. Upon common-law principles, all lands within the state are held directly or indirectly from the king, as lord paramount or supreme proprietor. To him every occupant of land owes fidelity and service of some kind, as the necessary condition of his occupation. If he fails in either respect, or dies without heirs upon whom this duty may devolve, his land reverts to the sovereign as ultimate proprietor. In this country, the people in their corporate capacity represent the state sovereignty; and every man must bear true allegiance to the state, and pay his share of the taxes required for her support, as the condition upon which alone he may hold land within her boundaries; Co. Litt. 65 a; 2 Bla. Com. 105; 3 Kent 487.

In the earlier ages of the world the condition of land was probably allodial, that is, without subjection to any superior,—every man occupying as much land found unappropriated as his necessities required. Over this he exercised an unqualified dominion; and when he parted with his ownership the possession of his successor was equally free and absolute. An estate of this character necessarily excludes the idea of any tenure, since the occupant owes no service or allegiance to any superior as the condition of his occupation. But when the existence of an organized society became desirable to secure certain blessings only by its means to be acquired, there followed the establishment of governments, and a new relation arose between each government and its citizens,—that of protection on the one hand and dependence on the other,—necessarily involving the idea of service to the state as a condition to the use and enjoyment of lands within its boundaries. This relation was of course modified according to the circumstances of particular states; but throughout Europe it early took the form of the feudal system. See ALON.

The principal species of tenure which grew out of the feudal system was the tenure by knight's service (q. v.). Many arbitrary and tyrannical incidents or lordly privileges were attached to this tenure, which was abolished by statute 12 Charles II. c. 24, which declared that all such lands should thenceforth be held in free and common socage.

Tenure in socage is where a tenant holds his tenement by any certain service, in lieu of all other services, so that they be not services of chivalry or knight's service: as, to hold by fealty and twenty shillings rent, or by homage, fealty, and twenty shillings rent, or by homage and fealty without any rents, or by fealty and a certain specified service, as, to plough the lord's land for three days. Littleton 117; 2 Bla. Com. 79. See SOGAGE.

Other tenures have grown out of the two last mentioned species of tenure, and are still extant in England. See [1907] 1 ch. 366.

Among these are tenures by copyhold and in frankalmoin, in burgage and gavelkind, and grand and petit serjeanty; but their nature, origin, and history are explained in the several articles appropriated to those terms.

Tenures were distinguished, according to the quality of the service, into free or base; the former were such as were not unbecoming a soldier or a freeman to perform, as, to serve the lord in the wars; while the latter were only considered fit for a peasant, as to plough the land, and the like. They were further distinguished with reference to the person from whom the land was held, as a tenure in capite, where the holding was of the person of the king, and tenure in gross, where the holding was of a subject. By the statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Edw. I., it was provided that if any tenant should alien any part of his land in fee, the alienee should hold immediately of the lord of the fee, and should be charged with a proportional part of the service due in respect of the quantity of land held by him. The consequence of which was that upon every such alienation the services upon which the estate was originally granted became due to the superior lord, and not to the immediate grantee; 4 Term 443; 4 East 271; Crabb, R. P. § 735.

Only free tenures were recognized by the royal courts. The free tenures were frankalmoin, knight service, serjeanty and socage; see 2 Holdsw. 159; 3 id. 27.

In the United States every estate in fee-simple is held as absolutely and unconditionally as is compatible with the state's right of eminent domain. Many grants of land made by the British Crown prior to the Revolution created socage tenures, which were subsequently abolished or modified by the legislatures of the different states. Thus, by the charter of Pennsylvania, the proprietary held his estate of the crown in free and common socage, his grantees being thereby also authorized to hold of him directly, notwithstanding the statute of quia emptores. An act of Pennsylvania of November 27, 1779, substituted the commonwealth in place of the proprietaries as the ultimate proprietor of whom lands were held. Pennsylvania titles are allodial not feudal; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 492. In New York there was supposed to have been some species of military tenure introduced by the Dutch previously to their surrender to the English, in 1664; but the legislature of that state in 1787 turned them all into a tenure in free and common socage, and finally, in 1830, abolished this latter tenure entirely, and declared that all lands in that state should thenceforth be held upon a uniform allodial tenure.

See QUIA EMPTORES; ALLODIAL.

See Parliamentary Report (1870) on Tenures in the countries of Europe.

TENURE OF OFFICE. By R. S. § 1765, etc., it was provided that federal officers appointed with the consent of the senate should only be removed during their terms with like consent or by a new appointment made by the consent of the senate; but it did not apply to certain suspensions during a recess of the senate. The law was repealed by act of March 3, 1887. See, as to the effect of the repeal, Parsons v. U. S., 167 U. S. 324, 17 Sup. Ct. 880, 42 L. Ed. 185.

See OFFICE.

TERM. The limitation of an estate: as a term for years, and the like. The word term does not merely signify the term specified in the lease, but the estate, also, and interest that passes by that lease: and therefore the term may expire during the continuance of the time: as by surrender, forfeiture, and the like. 2 Bla. Com. 145; Farnum v. Platt, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 339, 19 Am. Dec. 330.

In Practice. The space of time during which a court holds a session. Sometimes the term is a monthly, at others it is a quarterly period, according to the constitution of the court.

The whole term is considered as but one day: so that the judges may at any time during the term revise their judgments. In the computation of the term, all adjournments are to be included; Leib v. Com., 9 Watts (Pa.) 200. Courts are presumed to know judicially when their terms are required to be held by public law; Foster v. Frost, 15 N. C. 427. A term of the circuit court may extend from the beginning of one term to the opening of the succeeding statutory term, and the beginning of another term in another district of the same circuit does not necessarily end the term of the first court; East Tennessee I. & C. Co. v. Wiggin, 68 Fed. 446, 15 C. C. A. 510, 37 U. S. App. 129.

In England Hilary term is from January 12 to April 8; Easter, from April 21 to May 29; Trinity, from June 9 to July 31; and Michaelmas, from Oct. 12 to Dec. 21. For the law terms before 1875, see 1 Reeves, H. E. L. 232; 3 Holdsw. H. E. L. 510.

TERM FEE. In English Practice. A certain sum which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party; payable for every term in which any proceedings subsequent to the summons shall take place. Whart. Lex.

TERM FOR YEARS. An estate for years and the time during which such estate is to be held are each called a term: hence the term may expire before the time, as, by a surrender. As to its origin, see 2 Poll. & Matl. 105.

See ESTATE FOR YEARS.

TERM IN GROSS. An estate for years which is not held in trust for the party entitled to the land on the expiration of the term.

TERM PROBATORY. In an ecclesiastical suit, the time during which evidence may be taken. Cootes' Eccl. Pr. 240.

TERMINAL CHARGES. Demurrage charged for the detention of cars in loading or unloading is a terminal charge required to be shown by the schedules of rates filed and published by an interstate railroad company under the interstate commerce act; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. U. S., 188 Fed. 879, 110 C. C. A. 513.

TERMINAL FACILITIES. See COMMERCE; RAILROADS.

TERMINUS (Lat.). A boundary or limit, either of space or time. A bound, goal, or borders parting one man's land from another's. It is used also for an estate for a term of years: e. g. "interesse termini." 2 Bla. Com. 143. See TERM.

Terminus a quo. The starting-point of a private way is so called. Hamm. N. P. 196.

Terminus ad quem. The point of termination of a private way is so called. In common parlance, the point of starting and that of termination of a line of railway are each called the terminus.

TERMOR. One who holds lands and tenements for a term of years, or life. Littleton § 100; 4 Tyrwh. 561.

TERMS, TO BE UNDER. A party is said to be under terms, when an indulgence is granted to him by the court in its discretion, on certain conditions. Thus, when an injunction is granted ex parte, the party obtaining it is put under terms to abide by such order as to damages as the court may make at the hearing. Moz. & W.

TERRA EXTENDENDA. A writ addressed to an escheator, that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery. Reg. Orig. 293; Whart.

TERRA HYDATA. Land subject to the payment of hydagc. Seld.

TERRA LUCRABILIS. Land gained from the sea or enclosed out of a waste. Cowell.

TERRA NOVA. Land newly converted from wood ground to arable. Cowell.

TERRA PUTURA. Land in forests, held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein. 4 Inst. 307.

TERRA TESTAMENTALIS. Gavelkind land, being disposable by will, or lands held in allodio. Spelm.

TERRÆ DOMINICALES REGIS. The demesne lands of the crown.

TERRAGES. An exemption from all uncertain services. Cowell.

TERRE-TENANT. One who has the actual possession of land; but, in a more technical sense, he who is seised of the land; and in the latter sense the owner of the land, or the person seised, is the terre-tenant, and not the lessee. Jones v. Shawhan, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 257; Bac. Abr. Uses and Trusts. It has been holden that mere occupiers of the land are not terre-tenants. See Chahoon v. Hollenback, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 432, 16 Am. Dec. 587; 2 Bla. Com. 91, 328; Hulett v. Ins. Co., 114 Pa. 146, 6 Atl. 554.

Contribution among Terre-tenants. The question whether purchasers, at different times, of land bound by an incumbrance created by the grantor, stand in equal equity as regards this incumbrance, and if so, must each contribute proportionately to its discharge, has been settled in England in the affirmative, following the rule laid down in the Year Books and repeated in Coke's Reports; 2 Wms. Saund. p. 10, n.; 3 Rep. 14 b. In this country, the opposite view has been taken; Gill v. Lyon, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 447; Nailer v. Stanley, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 450, 13 Am. Dec. 691; Sauer v. Monroe, 20 Pa. 222.

TERRIER. In English Law. A roll, catalogue, or survey of lands, belonging either to a single person or a town, in which are stated the quantity of acres, the names of the tenants, and the like. It may be an ancient document; 12 M. & W. 205.

One of the old records in the office of the recorder of deeds of Philadelphia County is still called the Germantown Terrier. In it will be found the Latin Dedication of Pastorius, quoted by Whittier in the Pennsylvania Pilgrim.

By the ecclesiastical law, an inquiry is directed to be made from time to time of the temporal rights of the clergymen of every parish, and to be returned into the registry of the bishop: this return is denominated a terrier. 1 Phill. Ev. 602.

TERRITORIAL COURTS. The courts established in the territories of the United States. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

TERRITORIAL PROPERTY. The land and water over which the state has jurisdiction and control whether the legal title be in the state itself or in private individuals.

Lakes and waters wholly within the state are its property and also the marginal sea within the three-mile limit, but bays and gulfs are not always recognized as state property.

TERRITORIAL WATERS. It is difficult to draw any precise conclusion as to the distance to which a state may lawfully extend its exclusive dominion over the sea adjoining its territories, and beyond those portions of the sea which are embraced by harbors, etc., over which it has unquestioned jurisdiction. All that can reasonably be asserted is that it extends as far as may be requisite for the state's safety, and for some lawful end. Until recent years it was generally recognized as extending as far as a cannon shot would reach—i. e. a marine league; 1 Kent 29; this limit was fixed when that was the range of a cannon; Hogg v. Beerman, 41 Ohio St. 81, 52 Am. Rep. 71; it is said that it can be extended as the range of cannon increases; Hall, Int. L. 157. It may be extended for protection in time of war, or for revenue purposes; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159; The Hungaria, 41 Fed. 109. Congress has recognized the customary limit by legislation as to captures made within a marine league of the shore; 1 Kent 29. It is three miles from low-water mark; Behr. Sea Case.

State legislation in Massachusetts which extends the territorial limit of a state three miles seaward from the shore is valid; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159; i. e. it may extend its territorial limits and the boundaries of its counties to the extent of the limits of the United States. So of a California act relating to a crime committed within the same limit; In re Humboldt Lumber Manufacturers Ass'n, 60 Fed. 428. Parliament "may extend the realm how far soever it may please;" 2 Ex. D. 152. Under the Behring Sea Arbitration, it was decided that the United States cannot protect seals in the open sea beyond the three-mile limit.

It would not be unreasonable for the United States to assume control of the waters on the coast included within distant headlands, as from Cape Ann to Cape Cod, Nantucket to Montauk Point, and from the latter to the Capes of the Delaware; 1 Kent 30.

"As between nations, the minimum limit of the territorial jurisdiction of a nation over tide waters is a marine league from the coast, and bays wholly within its territory which do not exceed two marine leagues at the mouth are within this limit." Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159. The Gulf of Mexico is part of the Atlantic Ocean; Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 121 U. S. 67, 7 Sup. Ct. 821, 30 L. Ed. 858; but on the other hand, the exclusive right of the British crown to the Bristol Channel, to the channel between Ireland and Great Britain, and between Scotland and Ireland, is uncontested; 1 Phill. Int. L. § 189; and Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay are not a part of the high sea: 1 Whart. Int. L. § 28; Narragansett Bay is claimed, by usage, to be within the jurisdiction of Rhode Island; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 522, 21 L. Ed. 369; Chase v. Steamboat Co., 9 R. 1. 419, 11 Am. Rep. 274; and Conception Bay in Newfoundland, though more than 20 miles wide at its mouth and nearly 50 miles long, is British territory; 2 App. Cas. 394. It is probable that the Delaware (1 Op. Atty. Gen. 15) and Chesapeake (4 Moore, Int. Arbitr.) bays are the property of the United States. England claims complete jurisdiction over the bays of Chaleur, Fortune, and Conception, and some other bays of Newfoundland, as closed seas; Snow, Int. Law 27. The Zuyder Zee and Hudson's Bay are probably parts of the territory of the nations which surround them; while the bays of Fundy and Chaleur are public; 3 Whart. Int. L. 28, 304, 305 a. The claim of Russia to sovereignty over the Pacific Ocean north of the 51st degree of latitude was considered by the United States as against the rights of other nations; 1 Kent 29.

The territorial waters of the United Kingdom, under the act of Aug. 16, 1878, are such as are deemed so by international law, and for the purpose of any offence declared by the act to be within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, it is one marine league from low-water mark; 1 Moore Int. L. 714.

See 1895 Rep. Society for Reform and Codif. of the Laws, 17th meeting; 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 946; PILOT; JURISDICTION; MARE CLAUSUM.

TERRITORY. A part of a country separated from the rest and subject to a particular jurisdiction.

A portion of the country subject to and belonging to the United States which is not within the boundary of any state or the District of Columbia.

The constitution of the United States, art. 4, s. 3, provides that the congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States; and nothing in this constitution shall be construed so as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any state.

The United States has supreme sovereignty over a territory, and congress has full and complete legislative authority over its people and government; Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. v. U. S., 136 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 792, 34 L. Ed. 478.

Congress possesses the power to erect territorial governments within the territory of the United States: the power of congress over such territory is exclusive and universal, and their legislation is subject to no control, unless in the case of ceded territory, as far as it may be affected by stipulations in the cessions or by the ordinance of 1787, under which any part of it has been settled; Story, Const. § 1322; Rawle, Const. 237; 1 Kent 243, 359; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 511, 7 L. Ed. 242. Congress has plenary legislative power over the territories of the United States, and upon the admission of a territory into the Union, may, if it so desires, effect a collective naturalization of its foreign-born inhabitants as citizens of the United States; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103.

The admission of a territory as a state is accomplished by means of what is generally known as an enabling act, which prescribes the terms and conditions upon which the new state is to be admitted.

A territory is the fountain from which rights ordinarily flow, though Congress might intervene; but the rights that exist are not created by congress or the constitution, except to the extent of certain limitations of power. The District of Columbia is different, because there the body of private rights is created and controlled by congress, and not by a legislature of the district; Kawanakoa v. Polyblank, 205 U. S. 349, 27 Sup. Ct. 526, 51 L. Ed. 834, where this doctrine was applied to Hawaii. A territory is sovereign, not in the full sense of juridical theory, but because in actual administration it may originate and change at will the law of contract and property, and it is therefore exempt from suit; id.

In determining rights and liabilities, local legislation under authority of congress previously granted is treated as emanating from the local legislature and not from congress; Honolulu R. T. & L. Co. v. Wilder, 211 U. S. 137, 29 Sup. Ct. 44, 53 L. Ed. 121; Kawanakoa v. Polyblank, 205 U. S. 349, 27 Sup. Ct. 526, 51 L. Ed. 834.

A territorial legislature has plenary power in matters of procedure and practice and may prescribe the method of selecting grand and petty jurors and their qualifications in the territorial courts; Ex parte Moran, 144 Fed. 594, 75 C. C. A. 396.

Laws enacted by the legislatures of the territories are not laws of the United States; Ex parte Moran, 144 Fed. 594, 75 C. C. A. 396.

In passing the enabling act for the admission of Oklahoma, June 16, 1906, congress preserved the authority of the federal government over the Indians, their lands and property which it had prior to that act; Tiger v. Inv. Co., 221 U. S. 286, 31 Sup. Ct. 578, 55 L. Ed. 738.

When the Louisiana territory was purchased in 1803, Jefferson believed that he had (in his own words) "done an act beyond the constitution"; but the treaty was ratified. When the question of the validity of the cession of Florida arose, Marshall, C. J., said: "The constitution confers absolutely on the government of the Union the powers of making war and of making treaties; consequently that government possesses the power of acquiring territory, either by conquest or by treaty;" American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 511, 542, 7 L. Ed. 242.

The United States may extend its boundaries by conquest or treaty, and demand cession of territory as a condition of peace, the indemnification of its citizens or the reimbursement of the government for the expenses of a war; Fleming v. Page, 9 How. (U. S.) 603, 13 L. Ed. 276.

Where congress authorized the acquisition of territory in a specific manner, and it was otherwise acquired, the subsequent action of congress in enacting laws for the territory amounts to a full ratification of the action of the executive in regard thereto. The concurrent action of congress and the executive is conclusive upon the courts; Wilson v. Shaw, 204 U. S. 24, 27 Sup. Ct. 233, 51 L. Ed. 351, where it was also said that it is now too late to question the right of acquiring territory by treaty.

"The United States has the powers of other sovereign nations" to "acquire territory in the exercise of the treaty-making power, by direct cession as the result of war and in making effectual the terms of peace," and until congress shall see fit to incorporate such territory into the United States, it is to be governed under the law-making power of congress, subject to such constitutional restrictions as are applicable to the situation; Dorr v. U. S., 195 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 808, 49 L. Ed. 128, 1 Ann. Cas. 697, where it was held that congress was not required to enact for the Philippines a system of laws including the right of trial by jury; in Hawaii v. Mankichi, 190 U. S. 197, 23 Sup. Ct. 787, 47 L. Ed. 1016, it was held that the mere annexation of Hawaii did not render applicable the provisions of the constitution as to grand and petty juries.

Where the United States acquires territory, the laws of the country transferred, unless inconsistent with provisions of the constitution and laws applicable thereto, continue in force until abrogated or changed by the authority of the United States; Ortega v. Lara, 202 U. S. 339, 26 Sup. Ct. 707, 50 L. Ed. 1055.

Congress may delegate legislative authority to such of the agencies as it may select; Dorr v. U. S., 195 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 808, 49 L. Ed. 128, 1 Ann. Cas. 697.

"The territories of the United States are entirely subject to the legislative authority of congress. They are not organized under the constitution, nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government as the organic law, but are the creation, exclusively, of the legislative department, and subject to its supervision and control. . . . It [congress] may legislate in accordance with the special needs of each locality, and vary its regulations to meet the conditions and circumstances of the people. . . . In a territory all the functions of government are within the legislative jurisdiction of congress, and may be exercised through a local government or directly;" Endleman v. U. S., 86 Fed. 456, 30 C. C. A. 186, citing Cross v. Harrison, 16 How. (U. S.) 164, 14 L. Ed. 889; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331.

When New Mexico was conquered by the United States it was only the allegiance of the people that was changed, their relation to each other and their property rights remained unchanged. The executive of the United States properly established a provincial government which ordained laws and instituted a judicial system, which continued in force until modified by the direct action of congress or by the territorial government established by it; Leitensdorfer v. Webb, 20 How. (U. S.) 176, 15 L. Ed. 891.

The treaty with Russia concerning Alaska, instead of exhibiting, as did the treaty with Spain concerning the Philippine Islands, a determination to reserve the question of the status of the acquired territory for action by congress, manifested a contrary intention to admit the inhabitants of the ceded territory to the enjoyment of citizenship and expressed the purpose to incorporate the territory into the United States. The constitution is applicable to that territory and under the fifth and sixth amendments, congress cannot deprive one there accused of a misdemeanor of trial by a common law jury; Rasmussen v. U. S., 197 U. S. 516, 25 Sup. Ct. 514, 49 L. Ed. 862.

The court will take judicial notice as to whether or not a given territory is within the boundaries of the United States, and this is a political question; Pearcy v. Stranahan, 205 U. S. 257, 27 Sup. Ct. 545, 51 L. Ed. 793, holding that the Isle of Pines is de facto under the jurisdiction of Cuba.

See STATE; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; SOVEREIGNTY; SNOW, Administration of Dependencies.

TERROR. The state of the mind which arises from an event or phenomenon that may serve as a prognostic of some catastrophe; affright from apparent danger. See RIOT; ROBBERY; PUTTING IN FEAR.

TERTIUS INTERVENIENS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who, claiming an interest to the subject or thing in dispute in action between other parties, asserts his right to act with the plaintiff, to be joined with him, and to recover the matter in dispute, because he has an interest in it; or to join the defendant, and with him oppose the interest of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. He differs from the intervenor, or him who interpleads in equity. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3819.

TEST. Something by which to ascertain the truth respecting another thing. Depue v. Place, 7 Pa. 428.

The requirement that an officer be a resident of the municipality in which he is to be elected for three years in order to be eligible to an office is not a test within the meaning of a constitutional provision that no other oath, declaration or test than a prescribed oath shall be required as a qualification for an office; Attorney General v. MacDonald, 164 Mich. 590, 129 N. W. 1056, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 835. Such a statute is not invalid as imposing disqualifications not imposed by the constitution; State v. Covington, 29 Ohio St. 102. That a state constitution designates the qualifications of certain officers named therein will not render invalid provisions in a city charter requiring a tax collector to have been an elector of the city and county for five years next preceding his election; Sheehan v. Scott, 145 Cal. 684, 79 Pac. 350.

TEST ACT. The act of 25 Car. II. c. 2, by which it was enacted that all persons holding any office, civil or military (excepting some very inferior ones), or receiving pay from the crown, or holding a place of trust under it, should take the oath of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England, under a penalty of £500 and disability to the office. 4 Bla. Com. 59. Abolished 9 Geo. IV. c. 17, so far as taking the sacrament is concerned, and a new form of declaration substituted. Mozl. & W.

TESTA DE NEVIL. An ancient and authentic record in two volumes, in the custody of the queen's remembrancer in the exchequer, said to have been compiled by John de Nevil, a justice itinerant, in the eighteenth and twenty-fourth years of Henry III. Cowell.

TESTACY. The state or condition of leaving a will at one's death, as opposed to intestacy.

TESTAMENT. In Civil Law. The appointment of an executor or testamentary heir, according to the formalities prescribed by law. Domat, liv. 1, tit. 1, s. 1.

At first there were only two sorts of testaments among the Romans,—that called calatis comitiis, and another called in procinctu. (See below.) In the course of time, these two sorts of testament having become obsolete, a third form was introduced, called per æs et libram, which was a fictitious sale of the inheritance to the heir apparent. The inconveniences which were experienced from these fictitious sales again changed the form of testament; and the prætor introduced another, which required the seal of seven witnesses. The emperors having increased the solemnity of these testaments, they were called written or solemn testaments, to distinguish them from nuncupative testaments, which could be made without writing: Afterwards military testaments were introduced, in favor of soldiers actually engaged in military service.

A testament calatis comitiis, or made in the comitia,—that is, the assembly of the Roman people,—was an ancient manner of making wills used in times of peace among the Romans. The comitia met twice a year for this purpose. Those who wished to make such testaments caused to be convoked the assembly of the people by these words, calatis comitiis. None could make such wills that were not entitled to be at the assemblies of the people. This form of testament was repealed by the law of the Twelve Tables.

A civil testament is one made according to all the forms prescribed by law, in contradistinction to a military testament, in making which some of the forms may be dispensed with. Civil testaments are more ancient than military ones; the former were in use during the time of Romulus, the latter were introduced during the time of Coriolanus. See Hist. de la Jurisp. Rom. de M. Terrason, p. 119.

A common testament is one which is made jointly by several persons. Such testaments are forbidden in Louisiana. Civ. Code of La. art. 1565, and by the laws of France, Code Civ. 968, in the same words, namely: "A testament cannot be made by the same act, by two or more persons, either for the benefit of a third person or under the title of a reciprocal or mutual disposition."

A testament ab irato is one made in a gust of passion or hatred against the presumptive heir, rather than from a desire to benefit the devisee. When the facts of unreasonable anger are proved, the will is annulled as unjust and as not having been freely made. See AB IRATO.

A mystic testament (called a solemn testament, because it requires more formality than a nuncupative testament) is a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope and sealing it in the presence of witnesses.

A nuncupative testament was one made verbally. See NUNCUPATIVE WILL.

An olographic testament is one which is written wholly by the testator himself. In order to be valid, it must be entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of the testator. It is subject to no other form. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1581.

TESTAMENTARY. Belonging to a testament; as, a testamentary gift; a testamentary guardian.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY. Mental capacity sufficient for making a valid will. As to what constitutes, see WILLS; UNDUE INFLUENCE; WILL.

TESTAMENTARY CAUSES. Causes relating to probate of testaments and administration and accounts upon the same. They are enumerated among ecclesiastical causes by Lord Coke. 5 Co. 1.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN. A guardian appointed by last will of a father to have custody of his child and his real and personal estate till he attains the age of twenty-one. In England, the power to appoint such guardian was given by 12 Car. II. c. 34. The principles of this statute have been generally adopted in the United States.

TESTAMENTARY PAPER. An instrument in the nature of a will; an unprobated will.

As to when a deed will have the effect of a testamentary instrument, see DEED; ESCROW; DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

TESTAMENTARY POWER. The power to make a will is neither a natural nor a constitutional right, but depends wholly upon statute. Brettun v. Fox, 100 Mass. 234. Such power has been expressly conferred by statute in most of the states, in some cases unrestricted, in others with various restrictions by reason of dower and homestead rights, and for other reasons; 3 Jarm. Wills 721, 731. See WILL.

TESTAMENTI FACTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. The ceremony of making a testament, either as testator, heir, or witness.

TESTATE. The condition of one who leaves a valid will at his death.

TESTATOR. One who has made a testament or will.

TESTATRIX. A woman who has made a will or testament.

TESTATUM (Lat.). The name of a writ which is issued by the court of one county to the sheriff of another county in the same state, when the defendant cannot be found in the county where the court is located: for example, after a judgment has been obtained, and a ca. sa. has been issued, which has been returned non est inventus, a testatum ca. sa. may be issued to the sheriff of the county where the defendant is. See Viner, Abr. Testatum 259.

In Conveyancing. That part of a deed which commences with the words "This indenture witnesseth."

TESTE MEIPSO (Lat.). In Old English Law and Practice. A solemn formula of attestation by the sovereign used at the conclusion of charters, and other public instruments, and also of original writs, out of chancery. Spelm.

TESTE OF A WRIT. The concluding clause, commencing with the word witness, etc. A signature in attestation of the fact that a writ is issued by authority. A writ which bears the teste is sometimes said to be tested.

The act of congress of May 8, 1792, directs that all writs and process issuing from the supreme or a circuit court shall bear teste of the chief justice of the supreme court, or, if that office be vacant, of the associate justice next in precedence; and that all writs of process issuing from a district court shall bear teste of the judge of such court, or, if the said office be vacant, of the clerk thereof. See R. S. §§ 911, 912.

TESTES. Witnesses. See TESTIS.

TESTIFY. To give evidence according to law.

TESTIMONIAL PROOF. In Civil Law. A term used in the same sense as parol evidence is used at common law and in contradistinction to literal proof, which is written evidence.

TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE. That clause of a deed or instrument with which it concludes.

TESTIMONY. The statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.

The statement of a witness under oath; yet it need not necessarily be made to a judicial tribunal. Thus, a deposition may contain testimony, although never used in the cause pending; Woods v. State, 134 Ind. 35, 33 N. E. 901. It is a species of evidence by means of witnesses; Carroll v. Bancker, 43 La. Ann. 1078, 1194, 10 South. 187.

It is said that testimony refers more properly to oral evidence than to documentary, and that it is reasonable that a distinction be made between the two; Ensign v. Pennsylvania, 227 U. S. 592, 33 Sup. Ct. 321, 57 L. Ed. 658. See EVIDENCE.

TESTIS. A witness. Testari: to be a witness, bear witness to; to be witnessed, shown, certified.

In the medieval trial by oath the fellow swearers who swore merely to the truthfulness of another person's oath and had no knowledge necessarily of the facts were called by the ambiguous name of testis. Thayer, Prel. Treat. on Evid. See COMPURGATORS.

TESTMOIGNE. An old French word, signifying, in the old books, evidence. Com. Dig. Testmoigne.

TEXAS. The name of one of the states of the American Union.

It was a province of Mexico until 1836, when the inhabitants established a separate republic. On March, 1845, the congress of the United States, by a joint resolution, submitted to the new republic a proposition providing for the erection of the territory of Texas into a new state, and for its annexation under the name of the state of Texas. This proposition was accepted by the existing government of Texas on the 23d of June, 1845, and was ratified by the people in convention on the 6th of July. On the 29th of December following, by a joint resolution of congress, the new state was formally admitted into the Union. The present constitution of the state was adopted by a convention on November 24, 1875, and was voted upon and accepted by the people on February 17, 1876.

TEXTUS ROFFENSIS. An ancient manuscript containing many of the Saxon laws, and the rights, customs, tenures, etc., of the church of Rochester, drawn up by Ernulph, bishop of that see from 1114 to 1124. Cowell.

THAINLAND. In Old English Law. The land which was granted by the Saxon kings to their thains or thanes was so called.

THALWEG (German). The term thalweg is commonly used by writers on international law, in the definition of water boundaries between states, meaning the middle or deepest or most navigable channel, and while often styled "fairway" or "midway" or "main channel," the word has been taken over into various languages and the doctrine of the thalweg is often applicable in respect of water boundaries to sounds, bays, straits, gulfs, estuaries and other arms of the sea, and also applies to boundary lakes and landlocked seas whenever there is a deep water sailing channel therein; Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U. S. 1, 26 Sup. Ct. 408, 571, 50 L. Ed. 913.

THANE. In Saxon Law. A word which sometimes signifies a nobleman, at others a freeman, a magistrate, an officer, or minister. A tenant of the part of the king's lands called the king's "thaneage." Termes de la Ley.

In later Anglo-Saxon days it became the general name for the higher classes of society, and among them were many different degrees. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 29. See THEGN.

THANKSGIVING DAY See HOLIDAY.

THAVIES INN. See INNS OF COURT.

THE. An article which particularizes the subject spoken of. "Grammatical niceties should not be resorted to without necessity; but it would be extending liberality to an unwarrantable length to confound the articles 'a' and 'the.' The most unlettered persons understand that 'a' is indefinite but 'the' refers to a certain object." Sharff v. Com., 2 Binn. (Pa.) 516; per Tilghman, C. J. It will not be construed as equivalent to "this"; Harris v. State (Tex.) 24 S. W. 290.

THEATRE. A house in which a story is represented by human action upon the stage. Jacko v. State, 22 Ala. 73. A house for the exhibition of dramatic performances. Bell v. Mahn, 121 Pa. 225, 15 Atl. 523, 1 L. R. A. 364, 6 Am. St. Rep. 786, where it was held that the performance of an opera is a "theatrical exhibition" within a statute providing that no theatrical exhibition should be allowed without a license. The court said: "A theatre, among the ancients, was an edifice in which spectacles or shows were exhibited for the amusement of the spectators; but in modern times a theatre is a house for the exhibition of dramatic performances: a theatrical exhibition must be either such as pertains to a theatre or to the drama, for the representation of which the theatre is designed: Webster. A drama is a story represented by action: the representation is as if the real persons were introduced and employed in the action itself. It is ordinarily designed to be spoken, but it may be represented in pantomime, when the actors use gesticulation, sometimes in the form of the ballet, but do not speak; or in opera, where music takes the place of poetry and of ordinary speech, and the dramatic treatment is essentially different from either." In an English case where the question was, what was a "stage play" in the language of a statute, there was a room containing a stage, foot lights, scenery, etc., and two living characters on the stage, while all the other characters were in the room below engaged in acting, speaking and dancing, and were so reflected upon the stage by mirrors as to appear to be actually there; it was held that the house was within the act, though the court was doubtful whether the performance of the actors in the room below was described by the term used in the statute; Day v. Simpson, 18 C. B. N. S. 680.

An edifice used for the purpose of dramatic, operatic, or other representations or performances for admission to which entrance money is received. The word does not import necessarily anything but the stage on which the actors play and the room in which the acting is done and seen; Lee v. State, 56 Ga. 477. Although the term has an extended signification and comprehends a variety of performances, yet it is conceived that all which it does legitimately comprehend partakes more or less of the character of the drama; Jacko v. State, 22 Ala. 73. It was there held that a theatrical performance does not include exhibitions of leger-demain or sleight of hand.

A music hall is not a theatre; 21 Q. B. D. 569. Theatrical performances may include negro minstrel performances; Taxing Dist. v. Emerson, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 312; but not tumbling or fencing; King v. Handy, 6 T. R. 286. Where a statute prohibits the obstruction of passage-ways in a theatre, it should be liberally construed, and does not give the proprietor any discretion to allow persons to stand in the passage-ways, even though the number be not so great as to prevent free exit in case of danger; Fire Department of New York v. Stetson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 125. That a number of seats for a performance were sold after knowledge that the seats were filled is sufficient proof to sustain a judgment against the manager in the absence of evidence that such sale was in opposition to his wishes; id.

A theatre ticket is a mere license to enter the house and witness the performance and may be revoked at the pleasure of the manager; Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 M. & W. 838; Pearce v. Spalding, 12 Mo. App. 141; Johnson v. Wilkinson, 139 Mass. 3, 29 N. E. 62, 52 Am. Rep. 698; Collister v. Hayman, 183 N. Y. 250, 76 N. E. 20, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188, 111 Am. St. Rep. 740, 5 Ann. Cas. 344, where it was held that the operation of a theatre is not a business affected with a public interest and a condition making void tickets sold by scalpers was valid. See TICKET. In Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. 234, it was held that the purchaser of a particular seat acquired more than a mere license; that his right was more in the nature of a lease, entitling him to peaceful ingress and egress and exclusive possession of the designated seats during the performance; but in Horney v. Nixon, 213 Pa. 20, 61 Atl. 1088, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1184, 110 Am. St. Rep. 520, 5 Ann. Cas. 349, this was said to be a mere dictum and was disapproved, and it was held that a theatre ticket is a mere license, revocable before the holder has actually taken his seat, and that the only remedy is in assumpsit for breach of contract. A ticket of admission to a place of amusement is held a revocable license; 227

U. S. 633. The remedy of the purchaser of a ticket for refusal of the proprietor to honor it is not in tort, but by action for breach of contract; Taylor v. Cohn, 47 Or. 538, 84 Pac. 388, 8 Ann. Cas. 527.

A visitor is entitled to a seat. This right depends on the nature of his ticket. If it is for a reserved seat, he has a right to that particular seat; if not reserved, then to any one which he may find unoccupied and which has not been previously sold to another; Com v. Powell, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 180. Whether a return check given to one after the performance commences may be transferred by the spectator to some other person is a question as to which different opinions have been expressed and apparently no authoritative decision of the point has been made. An anonymous writer in 12 Cent. L. J. 359, expresses the opinion that such a check is transferable, but no authority is cited, while in the same issue of that periodical, in an article by W. H. Wittacker, the opinion is expressed that "the purchaser of a reserved seat, who sells his pass on leaving the house, together with the ticket for his seat, could convey no right on the second purchaser which would entitle him to admission." This opinion is concurred in by two text-writers on the subject; Bracket, Theatrical Law 179, § 153; Wandell, Law of the Theatre, 246. None of these writers cites any authority, but the last cited author quotes from 12 C. L. J. 359, and dissents from it, adding: "The holder of a return check could not transfer the same if the original ticket of admission was non-transferable." The same author also suggests that the holder of a return check cannot transfer the same if the ticket of admission was transferable. The opinions cited on the subject of the right to transfer a ticket or return check are all based upon the theory that a mere license is not transferable, and such cases are cited as Mendenhall v. Klinck, 51 N. Y. 246; Jackson v. Babcock, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 418. This must be admitted as a settled principle with respect to licenses to enter upon land, of which the cases cited in this connection are instances, and, as appears by the authorities supra, the tendency of the courts has been to hold that the legal effect of a theatre ticket is a mere license. A ticket however is said to be more than a mere license, so far as the right to enter the building is concerned, as it includes a contract with the holder to permit him to enter and see the play; Beale, Innkeepers § 316. A revocation of the license, therefore, is a breach of this contract for which the holder may sue, though he may have been lawfully excluded from the premises; Burton v. Scherpf, 1 Allen (Mass.) 133, 79 Am. Dec. 717; Purcell v. Daly, 19 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 301, where it was held that the proprietor has the right to annex to tickets of admission the condition that they shall not be transferable, and if transferred, that they shall be worthless.

The plaintiff, during the course of a moving picture performance, for which he had purchased a reserved seat, was ejected from the defendant's theatre, with no unnecessary force. Plaintiff was allowed recovery in an action for assault and battery; Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd., 30 T. L. Rep. 98. The ticket holder has a license to enter the theatre and remain there, but since it is not coupled with an interest, it is revocable at the will of the licensor, although consideration has been paid; Hewlins v. Shippan, 5 B. & C. 221. On revocation the licensee becomes a trespasser; Ruggles v. Lesure, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 187. But in a jurisdiction like that in Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd., supra, where there is a fusion of law and equity, it would seem enough to defeat the justification for the ejection.

An agreement among theatre owners to exclude a certain dramatic critic is not unlawful; a theatre is a private enterprise, and the proprietor may say who shall enter; People v. Flynn, 114 App. Div. 578, 100 N. Y. Supp. 31.

Where a theatre ticket contained a statement that if sold on the sidewalk it would be rejected, a ticket speculator has no rights against the manager of the theatre; Collister v. Hayman, 183 N. Y. 250, 78 N. E. 20, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188, 111 Am. St. Rep. 740, 5 Ann. Cas. 344. The manager of a theatre is not bound to sell his tickets at the price advertised, and it is not within the police power to regulate prices; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 83 N. E. 236, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321.

It was held in Clifford v. Branden, 2 Camp. 358, that the audience had a right to express their sensations or opinions by applause or hisses, and that the right to do so had never been hindered or questioned, but that if any body of men went into a theatre with the intention of hissing an actor or condemning a piece, they would be guilty of riot; to the same effect was the expression of Tindal, C. J., in Gregory v. Duke of Brunswick, 1 C. & K. 24, who said: "The public who go to a theatre have the right to express their free and unbiased opinions of the merits of the performers who appear upon the stage, but have no right to go to the theatre by a preconcerted plan to make such a noise that an actor, without any judgment being formed on his performance, should be driven from the stage by such a scheme."

A theatrical performance being publicly given is subject to candid comment by a newspaper, but it must be done fairly and without malice or purpose to injure or prejudice the proprietor in the public mind; Lord Kenyon, charging the jury in Dibdin v. Swan, 1 Esp. 28.

The proprietor or manager is charged with the duty of protecting the spectators from personal danger resulting from the performance, so far as it could have been foreseen and by good care guarded against; Thompson v. Ry. Co., 170 Mass. 577, 49 N. E. 913, 40 L. R. A. 345, 64 Am. St. Rep. 323, where at a shooting entertainment the plaintiff was hit in the eye by a metallic piece which flew from the target when it was hit by the bullet; Herrick v. Wixom, 121 Mich. 384, 80 N. W. 117, 51 N. W. 333, where the spectator was hit by an exploded fire cracker. It is also the duty of the proprietor or manager to protect the spectator from violence or wrong-doing of his servants; Dickson v. Waldron, 135 Ind. 507, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1, 24 L. R. A. 483, 488, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440; Fowler v. Holmes, 3 N. Y. Supp. 816; or a bystander; Mastad v. Swedish Brethren, 83 Minn. 40, 85 N. W. 913, 53 L. R. A. 803, 85 Am. St. Rep. 446. He is also responsible for providing a safe building as little dangerous as is practicable with reference to its intended use; Sebeck v. P. V. Verein, 64 N. J. L. 624, 46 Atl. 631, 50 L. R. A. 199, 81 Am. St. Rep. 512; Hart v. Park Club, 157 Ill. 9, 41 N. E. 620, 29 L. R. A. 492, 48 Am. St. Rep. 298; Schofield v. Wood, 170 Mass. 415, 49 N. E. 636; Camp v. Wood, 76 N. Y. 92, 32 Am. Rep. 282; Francis v. Cockerell, L. R. 5 Q. B. 501; though he is not held as an insurer; Dunning v. Jacobs, 15 Misc. 85, 36 N. Y. Supp. 453. It has been held that the proprietor is not liable to a patron for property left in his private box which was stolen; Pattison v. Hammerstein, 17 Misc. 375, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1039, where it was said that he is not an insurer nor can he be expected, whether regarded as lessor or licensor, to control the access to the box while occupied by the party renting it.

The state or municipal government may require the granting of a license for a theatre and the payment of a license fee; Boston v. Schaffer, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 415; and the license need not be formally in writing, but may be by parol; id.; but a mere statement that the authorities would not grant a license, but would not object to the entertainment so long as it was proper, is not a license; Simpson v. Wood, 105 Mass. 263. A gratuitous or amateur exhibition need not be licensed; State v. Lundie, 47 La. Ann. 1596, 18 South. 636; Oellers v. Horn, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 537; contra, Com. v. Colton, 8 Gray (Mass.) 488; Shelly v. Bethell, 12 Q. B. 11.

A municipality may designate policemen and firemen for service at theatres, who shall be paid therefor by the managers of the theatre; Tannenbaum v. Rehm, 152 Ala. 494, 44 South. 532, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 700, 126 Am. St. Rep. 52; and a city ordinance may compel proprietors of theatres to require ladies to remove their hats at performances; Oldknow v. Atlanta, 9 Ga. App. 594, 71 S. E. 1015. A statute was held a valid exercise of the police power which makes it unlawful to exclude from places of amusement persons presenting tickets who are of age, not being under the influence of liquor, bolsterous, or of lewd or immoral character; Greenberg v. Turf Ass'n, 140 Cal. 357, 73 Pac. 1050. Exemplary damages cannot be recovered for ejection without force or insult, where the tickets handed out from the box office proved to be, by mistake, for the previous evening; MacGowan v. Duff, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 315; but compensatory or consequential damages are allowed for the indignity and disgrace of expulsion from a dance hall of a ticket holder; Smith v. Leo, 92 Hun, 242, 36 N. Y. Supp. 940; or of a man and wife from a theatre on account of their color; Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. 234; and additional punitive damages are not precluded under a statute allowing the recovery of actual damages and $1000 in addition; Greenberg v. Turf Ass'n, supra.

THEFT. A popular term for larceny.

It is a wider term than larceny and includes other forms of wrongful deprivation of property of another. Encycl. Br.

Acts constituting embezzlement or swindling may be properly so called. Smith v. State, 21 Tex. App. 133, 17 S. W. 558. See Quitow v. State, 1 Tex. App. 68.

THEFT-BOTE. The act of receiving a man's goods from the thief, after they had been stolen by him, with the intent that he shall escape punishment. This is an offence punishable at common law by fine and imprisonment. Hale, Pl. Cr. 130.

THEGN. An Anglo-Saxon term meaning a retainer. Afterwards it came to designate the territorial nobility. At a later period these were king's thegns, who were persons of great importance, and inferior thegns. Military service appears to have run through it all. After the Conquest, they were merged into the class of knights. Encycl. Br.

THEGNAGE TENURE. A kind of tenure in Northumbria in the 13th century and beyond, of which little is known. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 132.

THELONMANNUS. The toll-man or officer who receives toll. Cowell.

THELUSSON ACT. The stat. 39 & 40 Geo. III., passed in consequence of objections to a Mr. Thelusson's will for the purpose of preventing the creation of perpetuities. See PERPETUITY; 4 Ves. 221.

THEME. The power of jurisdiction over naifs or villeins and their suits, off-spring, lands, goods, and chattels. Co. Litt. 116 a.

THEMMAGIUM. A duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenant in respect of theme or team. Cowell.

THEN. As an adverb, means "at that time," referring to a time specified, either past or future. Mangum v. Piester, 16 S. C. 329. See Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 40. It may also denote a contingency and be equivalent to "in that event." Pintard v. Irwin, 20 N. J. L. 505; it may sometimes mean "soon after"; Merritt v. Portchester, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 40; or "further." 2 Jarm. 595. In a will it has been held to import the time at which the class described is to be ascertained; 3 Ves. 486; but see 17 Beav. 417.

THEN AND THERE. Words of reference, and when the time and place have once been named with certainty, it is sufficient to refer to them afterwards by these words. State v. Cotton, 24 N. H. 146. Where an averment merely declares a legal conclusion, the words "then and there" need not be repeated to it. State v. Willis, 78 Me. 74, 2 Atl. 848.

THENCE. In surveying, and in description of land by courses and distances, this word preceding each course given, imports that the following course is continuous with the one before it. Flagg v. Mason, 141 Mass. 66, 6 N. E. 702.

THEOCRACY. A species of government which claims to be immediately directed by God.

THEOWES, THEOWMEN, THEWS. Slaves, captives, or bondmen, Spelm. Feuds. They were the slaves of the old Saxon times. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 466.

THEREUPON. Without delay or lapse of time. Putnam v. Langley, 133 Mass. 205. See Hill v. Wand, 47 Kan. 340, 27 Pac. 988, 27 Am. St. Rep. 288. Immediately. 6 M. & W. 492. See 3 Q. B. 79, where the terms thereupon and thereby are distinguished.

THERewith. As used in the reform act; 2 W. IV. c. 45; referring to house, etc., the clause that any land occupied therewith, has reference to time and not to locality. 22 L. J. C. P. 38; 50 id. 117.

THESAURUS INVENTUS. Treasure-trove (q. v.).

THESAURUS, THESARIUM. A treasure.

THESMOTHETE. A law-maker; a law-giver.

THIEF. One who has been guilty of larceny or theft. The term covers both compound and simple larceny. American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 25.

THINGS. By this word is understood every object, except man, which may become an active subject of right. Code du Canton de Berne, art. 332. In this sense it is opposed, in the language of the law, to the word persons.

"Thing, in legal contemplation, even when we have to do with a material object, is not precisely the object as we find it in common experience, but rather the entirety of its possible legal relations to persons." Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 133.

An operation for abortion is a thing, within the act of congress declaring non-mailable obscene books and every article and thing for procuring abortion, etc.; U. S. v. Somers, 164 Fed. 259.

See CHOSE; PROPERTY; RES.

THINGUS. In Saxon Law. A thane or nobleman; knight or freeman. Cowell.

THINK. To believe, to consider, to esteem. Martin v. R. Co., 59 Ia. 414, 13 N. W. 424.

THIRD-BOROW. In Old English Law. A constable. Lombard, Duty of Const. 6; 28 Hen. VIII. c. 10.

THIRD DEGREE. See CONFESSION.

THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE. By the laws of Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a third night in an inn, he was called a "third-night-awn-hinde," and his host was answerable for him if he committed any offence. The first night he was reckoned a stranger; the second night a guest; and the third night an awn-hinde. Bract. 1. 3; Whart.

THIRD PARTIES. A term used to include all persons who are not parties to the contract, agreement, or instrument of writing by which their interest in the thing conveyed is sought to be affected. Morrison v. Trudeau, 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 384.

THIRD PENNY. Of the fines and other profits of the county courts (originally, when those courts had superior jurisdiction, before other courts were created) two parts were reserved to the king, and a third part or penny to the earl of the county. See Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. 418.

THIRD PERSON. Any person other than one of the parties to the contract or his representatives. Pollock, Contr. 209.

But it is difficult to give a very definite idea of third persons; for sometimes those who are not parties to the contract, but who represent the rights of the original parties, as executors, are not to be considered third persons. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1335.

THIRD PERSON, CONTRACTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF. The English rule is that only he can sue from whom the consideration has moved. That is, even a promisee cannot sue, if he has not provided the consideration; 1 B. & S. 393; L. R. 4 Q. B. 706.

In America the rule is well-nigh universal that the promisee can sue, although the consideration has moved from a third party; Bell v. Sappington, 111 Ga. 391, 36 S. E. 780; Williamson v. Yager, 91 Ky. 282, 15 S. W. 660, 34 Am. St. Rep. 184; Palmer Sav. Bank v. Ins. Co., 166 Mass. 189, 44 N. E. 211, 32 L. R. A. 615, 55 Am. St. Rep. 387. Sometimes the right is based upon code provisions giving the "real party in interest" the right to sue; sometimes upon the theory of a trust; sometimes upon agency. It is essential that the promise be made to the third party in fact, although not in form. It must appear that the parties intend to recognize him as a primary party in interest and as privy to the promise; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. R. Co., 204 Fed. 513, 122 C. C. A. 633.

The contract must be made for the benefit of the third person as its object, and he must be the party intended to be benefited; Simson v. Brown, 68 N. Y. 355, quoted with approval in Constable v. S. S. Co., 154 U. S. 51, 14 Sup. Ct. 1062, 38 L. Ed. 903. Other New York cases are Embler v. Ins. Co., 158 N. Y. 431, 53 N. E. 212, 44 L. R. A. 512; Lorillard v. Clyde, 122 N. Y. 498, 25 N. E. 917, 10 L. R. A. 113.

The difficult question comes when the plaintiff is not the promisee, but is attempting to sue on a contract made for his benefit. Such cases can be divided into two classes: 1. Where the plaintiff is attempting to enforce an agreement made on his behalf which operates as a gift to him (he is then usually called a "sole beneficiary"). 2. Where the fulfilment of the promisor's promise is to operate as satisfaction of an obligation due from the promisee to his creditor. The rules as to these two classes are different.

The cases of the "sole beneficiary" type arise principally in regard to life insurance. England has been compelled to pass a statute to allow a beneficiary of a life policy to sue; 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, § 11. The sole beneficiary cannot sue at law; Goodyear Shoe Mach. Co. v. Dancel, 119 Fed. 692; Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 245, 41 Atl. 803, 42 L. R. A. 514, 71 Am. St. Rep. 169; Clare v. Hatch, 180 Mass. 194, 62 N. E. 250; Linneman v. Moross' Estate, 98 Mich. 178, 57 N. W. 103, 39 Am. St. Rep. 528; Union R. Storage Co. v. McDermott, 53 Minn. 407, 55 N. W. 606; Curry v. Rogers, 21 N. H. 247; Fugure v. Mut. Society, 46 Vt. 362; Ross v. Milne, 12 Leigh (Va.) 204, 37 Am. Dec. 646; Hostetter v. Hollinger, 117 Pa. 606, 12 Atl. 741. Most of the other states allow a sole beneficiary to sue even at law. The rights of the sole beneficiary in equity have not been defined as yet. Insurance cases constitute a class by themselves, in which the sole beneficiary is universally allowed to recover, either by statute or by judicial decision; 3 Am. & Eng. Cyc. 980; also, when property is given or devised to a promisor on condition that he make certain payments to others, the beneficiaries are generally allowed to sue, even in England; see Poll. Contr. 3d Am. Ed. 252. In New York the sole beneficiary cannot recover; injured workmen cannot recover on an insurance policy, taken out for their benefit by their employer; Embler v. Ins. Co., 158 N. Y. 431, 53 N. E. 212, 44 L. R. A. 512; a subway contractor is not liable to abutting owners for the negligence of sub-contractors, though he has so agreed with the city; Haefelin v. McDonald, 96 App. Div. 213, 89 N. Y. Supp. 395; a contract made by a shareholder to guarantee the credits of the corporation to a transferee is not enforceable by the corporation; Rochester D. G. Co. v. Fahy, 111 App. Div. 748, 97 N. Y. Supp. 1013.

In cases of the second class where the promise is exacted in order to meet a liability of the promisee to the beneficiary, most states allow an action at law. Exceptions are: Morgan v. Clowes Co., 73 Conn. 396, 47 Atl. 658, 51 L. R. A. 653; White v. Mill Corp., 172 Mass. 462, 52 N. E. 632; Bliss v. Plummer's Estate, 103 Mich. 181, 61 N. W. 263. The United States Supreme Court, Maryland, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, and Wyoming are undecided. Mortgage cases are in a class by themselves. Massachusetts, England, Ireland and Canada are the only jurisdictions which do not allow the mortgagee to sue the grantee of the mortgagor who has assumed the payment of the mortgage. The fundamental idea is that the promise to pay the debtor-promisee's debt is an asset of the debtor of which the creditor can avail himself. This reasoning has gone so far as to allow the holder of a check a right of action against the bank on which it was drawn; Poll. Contr. 3d Am. Ed. 267. Such a promise is an asset of a peculiar sort, however, and can be gotten at only by the creditor for whose benefit the contract is made; Coleman v. Hatcher, 77 Ala. 217; Clinton N. Bk. v. Studemann, 74 Ia. 104, 37 N. W. 112; Edgell v. Tucker, 40 Mo. 523; Baker & Smith v. Eglin, 11 Ore. 333, 8 Pac. 280; Vincent v. Watson, 18 Pa. 96; Putney v. Farnham, 27 Wis. 187, 9 Am. Rep. 459. When these conditions are not fulfilled, the creditor is denied a right of action. So when a mortgagor conveys to one who does not assume the mortgage, who in turn conveys to one who does assume it, the mortgagee cannot sue the latter; Ward v. De Oca, 120 Cal. 102, 52 Pac. 130; Brown v. Stillman, 43 Minn. 126, 45 N. W. 2; Mount v. Van Ness, 33 N. J. Eq. 262; Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 280, 25 Am. Rep. 195; contra, Dean v. Walker, 107 Ill. 541, 47 Am. Rep. 467; Crone v. Stinde, 156 Mo. 262, 55 S. W. 863, 56 S. W. 907; Brewer v. Maurer, 38 Ohio St. 543, 43 Am. Rep. 436; Merriman v. Moore, 90 Pa. 78; Enos v. Sanger, 96 Wis. 150, 70 N. W. 1069, 37 L. R. A. 862, 65 Am. St. Rep. 38. The result reached is right in theory since the original transferee of the mortgaged property was never liable to the creditor, and it is unlikely that the ultimate transferee intends to make a gift to the mortgagee.

When a contract is only incidentally for the benefit of the plaintiff, that is, when he can neither be regarded as realizing on an asset of his debtor nor enforcing his right as sole beneficiary, he is denied relief. In Durnherr v. Rau, 135 N. Y. 219, 32 N. E. 49, A and his wife had mortgaged his farm to X, the wife releasing her dower. Later A conveyed his equity to defendant, who agreed to pay the mortgage, the wife's dower being expressly reserved. Defendant failed to pay, and the farm was sold on foreclosure. It was held that the wife was not intended to be benefited, and could not sue. Hatters who agree to close their shops on Sundays, and in case of a breach to pay $100 to a charitable corporation, do not subject themselves to a suit by the charitable corporation in case of breach; New Orleans St. Joseph's Ass'n v. Magnier, 16 La. Ann. 338.

As to revocation between the promisor and promisee, it is generally held in the sole beneficiary contracts that the promisee may revoke before collection; the question is whether the gift is executed or still in action; see Biddel v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354, 30 Pac. 609; Smith v. Flack, 95 Ind. 116; Emmitt v. Brophy, 42 Ohio St. 82; allowing revocation; contra, Waterman v. Morgan, 114 Ind. 237, 16 N. E. 590; Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 116 Wis. 517, 93 N. W. 440, 61 L. R. A. 509, 96 Am. St. Rep. 1003. As to cases of the debtor and creditor type, since even an insolvent debtor must be allowed to change the form of his property, releases are held valid if for good consideration. In general, the debtor may effect such releases unless it constitutes a fraud on his creditors; Youngs v. Trustees, 31 N. J. Eq. 290; Willard v. Worsham, 76 Va. 392.

The question whether the promisor in the second type of cases can set up questions as to the validity of the original debt depends upon the nature of the promise. Usually the promisor is denied the right to set up defenses of which the debtor might have availed himself; see Poll. Contr. 3d Am. ed. 275.

A creditor, who sues on a contract made by a third person with the debtor to assume and pay the debt, does so subject to all the equities existing between the original parties to the contract; Fish v. Bank, 157 Fed. 87, 84 C. C. A. 502.

For a full and learned treatment of the subject, see Poll. Contr. 3d Am. ed. ch. 5, and note by Prof. Williston. The view there taken is that in all cases the third person should bring a bill in equity joining the promisor and promisee as defendants. Since the promisee has a vital interest in the performance of the contract, he should have his day in court. Most states allow suits both by the promisee and the third party; Poll. Contr. 3d Am. ed. 269, and this frequently results in injustice to the promisor.

THIS. When referring to different things before expressed, "this" refers to the thing last mentioned, and "that" to the thing first mentioned. Russell v. Kennedy, 66 Pa. 251. It is a simple word of relation and its ordinary grammatical meaning will not be extended so as to include something else than that to which it relates. 14 Q. B. D. 720.

THOROUGHFARE. A street or way opening at both ends into another street or public highway, so that one can go through and get out of it without returning. It differs from a cul de sac, which is open only at one end.

Whether a street which is not a thoroughfare is a highway was held not fully settled;

1 Vent. 189. In a case tried in 1790 where the locus in quo had been used as a common street for fifty years, but was no thoroughfare, Lord Kenyon held that it would make no difference; for otherwise the street would be a trap to make people trespassers; 11 East 375. This decision in several subsequent cases was much criticised, though not directly overruled; 5 B. & Ald. 456; 1 Camp. 260; 4 Ad. & E. 698; but was affirmed by the unanimous opinion of the court of queen's bench holding that it is a question for the jury on the evidence, whether a place which is not a thoroughfare is a highway or not; 14 E. L. & E. 69. And see 28 id. 30. The United States authorities seem to follow the English; Danforth v. Durell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 242; People v. Kingman, 24 N. Y. 559 (overruling Holdane v. Trustees, 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 103); Sheaff v. People, 87 Ill. 189, 29 Am. Rep. 49; contra, Simmons v. Mumford, 2 R. I. 172.

Where a lane originally established as a private way was a cul de sac, it was not incumbent on the owners of the fee to place obstructions therein or to notify persons using it that the license pursuant to which the travel was first permitted was revocable, the burden was on the users to notify the owners that they claimed an adverse right of use; Bohrnstedt Co. v. Scharen, 60 Or. 349, 119 Pac. 337.

See HIGHWAY; STREET; CUL DE SAC; WAY.

THOUSAND. This word may by custom or usage of trade acquire a peculiar meaning, as when applied to rabbits it has been held to denote one hundred dozen; 3 B. & Ad. 728.

THREAD. A figurative expression used to signify the central line of a stream or watercourse. See FILUM AQUÆ; WATERCOURSE; RIVER.

THREAT. A menace of destruction or injury to the person, character, or property of those against whom it is made.

A declaration of an intention or determination to injure another by the commission of some unlawful act. If the act intended to be done is not unlawful, then the declaration is not a threat in law, and the effect thereof is not intimidation in a legal sense; Payne v. R. Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666.

To extort money under threat of charging the prosecutor with an unnatural crime has been held to be robbery; People v. McDaniels, 1 Park. Cr. R. (N. Y.) 199; but to extort money or other valuable thing by threat of prosecution for passing counterfeit money, or any prosecution except that for an unnatural crime, is not robbery; Britt v. State 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 45; though it is a criminal offense; 11 Mod. 137; United States v. Ravara, 2 Dall. 299, n., 1 L. Ed. 388. It must be under such circumstances as to operate, to some extent at least, on the mind of the one whom it is expected to influence. The meaning of the word implies that it is a menace of some kind, which in some manner comes to the knowledge of the one sought to be affected; State v. Brownlee, 84 Ia. 473, 51 N. W. 25. See THREATENING LETTER.

Threats to commit suicide are not admissible unless part of the res gestæ, in a case where one is on trial for murder of the person who made the threats; State v. Fitzgerald, 130 Mo. 407, 32 S. W. 1113; but they were admitted in such a case when made the day before the death; Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 180, 31 N. E. 961, 24 L. R. A. 235; or where there were successive declarations more or less contemporaneous with the taking of a life insurance policy, and efforts to borrow money on it, which tended to show a concerted scheme of fraud; Smith v. Benefit Soc., 123 N. Y. 85, 25 N. E. 197, 9 L. R. A. 616; but not when made two years before the issuing of the policy; Hale v. Inv. Co., 65 Minn. 548, 68 N. W. 182.

In Evidence. Menace. See CONFESSION.

THREATENING LETTER. Sending threatening letters to persons for the purpose of extorting money is said to be a misdemeanor at common law. 4 Bla. Com. 126. The threat must be of a nature calculated to overcome a firm and prudent man; but this rule has reference to the general nature of the evil threatened, and not to the probable effect of the threat on the mind of the particular party addressed; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 512. The party who makes a threat may be held to bail for his good behavior. See Com. Dig. Battery (D).

By act of congress of Sept. 26, 1888, the sending of any postal card or mail matter with threatening language on the outside thereof is forbidden and made punishable by fine and imprisonment; R. S. 1 Supp. 621. Postal cards held within the act were: One from a creditor threatening to "place the claim with our law agency for collection;" U. S. v. Bayle, 40 Fed. 664, 6 L. R. A. 742; demanding payment and threatening to place it in the hands of a lawyer for collection; id.; so of the deposit in the mails of a stamped envelope on the face of which was printed in large red letters: "$1,000 reward will be paid to any person who kidnaps Ex-Gov. Taylor and returns him to Kentucky authorities;" Warren v. U. S., 183 Fed. 718, 106 C. C. A. 156, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800; and of letters threatening to accuse certain persons to whom they were sent of crimes and disgraceful matters; U. S. v. Horman, 118 Fed. 780. But a newspaper without a wrapper, though containing scurrilous and defamatory matter marked with blue pencil and so folded as to expose the same, is not non-mailable matter within section 12, Cr. Code; U. S. v. Higgins, 194 Fed. 539. Held not within the act: notice that a debt is past due and that a collector has called several times; U. S. v. Bayle, supra; and notice that rent was due and if not paid would be placed in the hands of an officer; U. S. v. Elliott, 51 Fed. 807. Extraneous evidence is not admissible to show that the language of a postal card on its face threatening or abusive, was not so intended by the sender, and not so understood by the recipient; Griffin v. Pembroke, 2 Mo. App. Repr. 980.

Statutes exist in many of the states, though they vary somewhat in their provisions, some of them requiring the threatening to have been done "maliciously," others "knowingly." The indictment for this offence need not specify the crime threatened to be charged, for the specific nature of the crime which the prisoner intended to charge might intentionally be left in doubt; State v. Morgan, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 262; Biggs v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 547. The threat need not be to accuse before a judicial tribunal; 2 M. & R. 14; People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 460. A person whose property has been stolen has himself no power to punish the thief without process of law, and cannot claim the right to obtain compensation for the loss of his property by maliciously threatening to accuse him of the offence, or to do an injury to his person or property, with intent to extort property from him; State v. Bruce, 24 Me. 71; Com. v. Coolidge, 128 Mass. 55. A mere threat that the prosecutor would be indicted or complained of has been held to be within the statute, even though no distinct crime was spoken of in the letter, because of the likelihood of threatening letters being written with as much disguise and artifice as possible, but still being sufficient to accomplish the purpose intended; State v. Patterson, 68 Me. 473; State v. Linthicum, 68 Mo. 66.

See LETTER.

THREE-DOLLAR PIECE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of three dollars.

The three-dollar piece was authorized by the seventh section of the act of Feb. 21, 1853. 10 Stat. at L. It was of the same fineness as the other gold coins of the United States. The weight of the coin was 77.4 grains.

Its coinage was discontinued by act of Sept. 26, 1890. See LEGAL TENDER.

THREE ESTATES. See ESTATES OF THE REALM.

THREE-MILE LIMIT. See SEAL FISHERIES; TERRITORIAL WATERS.

THREE-WEEKS COURT. In the Kentish custom of gavellet, it was the lord's court. 18 Harv. L. R. 40.

THRITHING. The third part of a county consisting of three or more hundreds. Cowell. Corrupted to the modern "riding," which is still used to designate a subdivision of Yorkshire. 1 Bla. Com. 116.

THROAT. In Medical Jurisprudence. The anterior part of the neck. Dunglison, Med. Dict.; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 97, n.

The word throat, in an indictment which charged the defendant with murder by cutting the throat of the deceased, does not mean, and is not to be confined to, that part of the neck which is scientifically called the throat, but signifies that which is commonly called the throat. 6 C. & P. 401.

THROUGH. It has been held to be equivalent to "over" in a statute providing for laying out the road through certain grounds; Hyde Park v. Cemetery Ass'n, 119 Ill. 147, 7 N. E. 627; and it may mean within; Provident L. & T. Co. v. Mercer County, 170 U. S. 593, 18 Sup. Ct. 788, 42 L. Ed. 1156.

THROW OUT A BILL. A phrase used to indicate the action of a grand jury in refusing to find a "true bill."

THURINGIAN CODE. See CODE.

TICK. Colloquially used for credit; as, if a servant usually buy for the master upon tick, and the servant buy something without the master's order, yet if the master were trusted by the trader he is liable; 10 Mod. 111.

TICKET. A railroad ticket is a receipt or voucher, rather than a contract; 5 L. R. A. 818, note; Logan v. R. Co., 77 Mo. 663; Frank v. Ingalls, 41 Ohio St. 560; it is the evidence of a contract, but does not constitute the whole contract; 34 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 219; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Rodebaugh, 38 Kan. 45, 15 Pac. 899, 5 Am. St. Rep. 715; it may contain some condition or limitation which becomes a part of the contract; Terry v. R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 359; Lake S. & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Rosenzweig, 113 Pa. 519, 6 Atl. 545. The actual contract may be shown by parol testimony; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60, 12 Sup. Ct. 356, 36 L. Ed. 71; Peterson v. Ry. Co., 80 Ia. 92, 45 N. W. 573; and that, not the ticket, which is merely evidence of it, controls the rights and duties of carriers and passengers; C. N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Harris, 115 Tenn. 501, 91 S. W. 211, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779. The ticket has been termed a contract between the purchaser and the company; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Wright, 18 Ind. App. 125, 47 N. E. 491; but one purchased by a husband for his wife is not a contract between him and the company for her safe transportation; Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. v. Brown, 120 Ga. 380, 47 S. E. 942.

As between the passenger and the carrier the ticket is a mere memorandum of the contract, but as between the passenger and the conductor it is conclusive evidence of the passenger's rights; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Fleming, 148 Ky. 473, 146 S. W. 1110, 1112.

It is subject to the statute of limitations, running from the date of issue; Cassiano v. R. Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 806.

Ejection of the passenger is not lawful when the ticket is defective or void without his fault, and he cannot be required to pay a second fare to prevent it; O'Rourke v. R. Co., 103 Tenn. 124, 52 S. W. 872, 46 L. R. A. 614, 76 Am. St. Rep. 639; Georgia R. & E. Co. v. Baker, 125 Ga. 562, 54 S. E. 639, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103, 114 Am. St. Rep. 246, 5 Ann. Cas. 484; contra, Norton v. R. Co., 79 Conn. 109, 63 Atl. 1087, 118 Am. St. Rep. 132, 6 Ann. Cas. 943; Maxson v. R. Co., 49 Misc. 502, 97 N. Y. Supp. 962; Montgomery T. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 149 Ala. 511, 43 South. 136, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851; Cleveland C. R. Co. v. Conner, 74 Ohio St. 225, 78 N. E. 376, 6 Ann. Cas. 941; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Gortikov, 90 Miss. 787, 45 South. 363, 122 Am. St. Rep. 324, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 464, and note; but it is otherwise when the passenger has bought a ticket and lost or mislaid it; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 128; Nicholson v. R. Co., 118 App. Div. 13, 103 N. Y. Supp. 310. See 43 L. R. A. 706, note, and 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695, note.

The purchaser of a railroad ticket has a right to rely upon the statements of the agent; Peabody v. Nav. Co., 21 Or. 121, 26 Pac. 1053, 12 L. R. A. 823; Poulin v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 197, 3 C. C. A. 23; Maroney v. R. Co., 106 Mass. 153, 8 Am. Rep. 305; but agents at intermediate stations and gatekeepers cannot vary the terms of the contract; Murdock v. R. Co., 137 Mass. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 307; Johnson v. R. Co., 63 Md. 106.

Railroad companies may make reasonable regulations as to tickets, such as to keep and show a coupon ticket undetached; Delucas v. R. Co., 38 La. Ann. 930; or require the purchase of tickets before entering the car; Harris v. Stevens, 31 Vt. 79, 73 Am. Dec. 337; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. W. Co. v. Vandyne, 57 Ind. 576, 26 Am. Rep. 568; to charge additional fare if paid on the train; St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. South, 43 Ill. 176, 92 Am. Dec. 103; Crocker v. R. Co., 24 Conn. 249; State v. Goold, 53 Me. 279; McGowen v. S. S. Co., 41 La. Ann. 732, 6 South. 606, 5 L. R. A. 817, 17 Am. St. Rep. 413; provided that an opportunity was given to procure tickets; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Flagg, 43 Ill. 364, 92 Am. Dec. 133; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Rogers, 38 Ind. 116, 10 Am. Rep. 103; or restrict holders of a certain class of tickets to special trains, provided that, if the ticket does not show it, the rule must be brought to the notice of the passenger; Maroney v. R. Co., 106 Mass. 153, 8 Am. Rep. 305; indeed, knowledge or notice of any condition not apparent on the face of the ticket must be brought home to the passenger, otherwise the railroad company is liable for his expulsion; Erie R. Co. v. Littell, 128 Fed. 546, 63 C. C. A. 44; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60, 12 Sup. Ct. 356, 36 L. Ed. 71; Murdock v. R. Co. 137 Mass. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 307; a passenger was held bound by a condition that the carrier should not be liable for delay; 84 L. T. 774, following [1901] 1 C. P. Div. 286. As to what constitutes notice of conditions to holders of tickets, see 23 L. R. A. 746, note. See as to what are reasonable regulations, 5 L. R. A. 817, note; and as to the validity of an extra charge when fare is paid on the train, and what is reasonable, Phettipiece v. R. Co., 84 Wis. 412, 54 N. W. 1092, 20 L. R. A. 483.

When the passenger separates the two parts of a round trip ticket, a tender is good if both parts are shown, although it is marked not good if detached; Wightman v. R. Co., 73 Wis. 169, 40 N. W. 689, 2 L. R. A. 185, 9 Am. St. Rep. 778; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 180, 42 Am. Rep. 668, but if, while detaching it, his attention is called by the conductor to his duty not to do so, he should desist; id.

There is a conflict of authority whether it is the duty of a passenger of whom fare is wrongfully demanded to pay it to avoid expulsion in order to lessen damages. The weight of authority is that he need not do so, but may stand on his rights, and need not pay an extra fare to avoid expulsion; Sprenger v. Traction Co., 15 Wash. 660, 47 Pac. 17, 43 L. R. A. 706; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bray, 125 Ind. 229, 25 N. E. 439; Krueger v. R. Co., 68 Minn. 445, 71 N. W. 683, 64 Am. St. Rep. 487; Ellsworth v. R. Co., 95 Ia. 98, 63 N. W. 584, 29 L. R. A. 173; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60, 12 Sup. Ct. 356, 36 L. Ed. 71; English v. Canal Co., 66 N. Y. 454, 23 Am. Rep. 69; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Rice, 64 Md. 63, 21 Atl. 97; unless the passenger is at fault or negligent; Weaver v. R. Co., 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 270; Zagelmeyer v. R. Co., 102 Mich. 214, 60 N. W. 436, 47 Am. St. Rep. 514; Murdock v. R. Co., 137 Mass. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 307; Ellsworth v. R. Co., 95 Ia. 98, 63 N. W. 584, 29 L. R. A. 173; Hufford v. R. Co., 64 Mich. 631, 31 N. W. 544, 8 Am. St. Rep. 859; Cherry v. R. Co., 191 Mo. 489, 90 S. W. 381, 109 Am. St. Rep. 830, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695, and note, in which are cited as contra many cases, but on examination most, if not all, of them are cases in which the passenger had not a ticket or evidence of payment, good on its face; such are Peabody v. Nav. Co., 21 Or. 121, 26 Pac. 1053, 12 L. R. A. 823 (in which the opinion and the note cite many such cases); Townsend v. R. Co., 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419. In other cases it is held to be the passenger's duty to pay the fare or submit to ejection; Monnier v. R. Co., 175 N. Y. 281, 67 N. E. 569, 62 L. R. A. 357, 96 Am. St. Rep. 619; and recover it back without aggravation; Van Dusan v. R. Co., 97 Mich. 439, 56 N. W. 848, 37 Am. St. Rep. 354; Gibson v. R. Co., 30 Fed. 904; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connell, 112 Ill. 295, 54 Am. Rep. 238. The cases, which are numerous, are collected in 43 L. R. A. 706, note. When the passenger expects and desires to be ejected, he is limited to actual damages; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Trimble, 54 Ark. 354, 15 S. W. 899; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Cole, 29 Ohio St. 126, 23 Am. Rep. 729; and he cannot recover when a transfer is demanded in order to lay a foundation for a suit; Johnston v. R. Co., 54 Misc. 642, 104 N. Y. Supp. 812; nor where he has not acted in good faith; Nicholson v. R. Co., 118 App. Div. 858, 103 N. Y. Supp. 695. A condition in case of dispute to pay and apply for reimbursement is unreasonable and void; O'Rourke v. R. Co., 103 Tenn. 124, 52 S. W. 872, 46 L. R. A. 614, 76 Am. St. Rep. 639; Cherry v. R. Co., 191 Mo. 489, 90 S. W. 381, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695, 109 Am. St. Rep. 830.

The passenger need not tender the exact fare, but the sum tendered for change must be reasonable, and what is reasonable is a question of law for the court; Barker v. R. Co., 151 N. Y. 237, 45 N. E. 550, 35 L. R. A. 489, 56 Am. St. Rep. 626; a rule fixing $2 as the maximum to be changed on a street car is reasonable; id.; Burge v. Electric Co., 133 Ga. 423, 65 S. E. 879, 18 Ann. Cas. 42; a $20 gold coin for a fare of $1.25 is unreasonable; 17 U. C. Q. B. 428; a $5 bill for a five cent fare is unreasonable; id.; Muldowney v. B. T. Co., 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 335; Barker v. R. Co., 151 N. Y. 237, 45 N. E. 550, 35 L. R. A. 489, 56 Am. St. Rep. 626; contra, Barrett v. R. Co., 81 Cal. 296, 22 Pac. 859, 6 L. R. A. 336, 15 Am. St. Rep. 61; and see 35 L. R. A. 489, note; it is a question of law; Knoxville Traction Co. v. Wilkerson, 117 Tenn. 482, 99 S. W. 992, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579, 10 Ann. Cas. 641; but he cannot demand change before giving up the money; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cottengim, 104 S. W. 280, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 871, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, and note.

A stipulation that a return coupon shall be presented to and signed in the presence of the agent is reasonable; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wright, 18 Ind. App. 125, 47 N. E. 491; but if the company fails to provide an agent to stamp the ticket as required, the purchaser has a right, on explanation to the conductor, to ride on any train, and has a right of action for expulsion; Southern R. Co. v. Wood, 114 Ga. 140, 39 S. E. 894, 55 L. R. A. 536. So where a ticket agent refused to sell a ticket to a point, thinking that the train would not stop there, and the passenger refused to pay more than the regular fare, his ejection was held unlawful; Phillips v. R. Co., 114 Ga. 284, 40 S. E. 269; and when the first conductor took up a ticket on which there was a right to stop over, the second conductor had no right to eject the passenger, whose right to go on without a ticket could be founded on a parol agreement; Scofield v. Pennsylvania Co., 112 Fed. 855, 50 C. C. A. 553, 56 L. R. A. 224.

Where a ticket provided that it should be forfeited if used for any other station than the one named, it was held that a passenger who rode on it to a point beyond the station named, paying his fare for the additional distance, was liable for the fare for the entire distance traveled; [1895] 1 Q. B. 862. One who takes the wrong train by mistake can leave it at the first stopping-place, without payment of fare; this rule does not apply to one who has a season ticket and takes a train believing that it is good on that train; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Feely, 163 Mass. 205, 40 N. E. 20. Where a mileage book purchased by one person is sold to another who presents it, the conductor cannot take it up, but may collect full fare; Morton v. R. Co., 10 Ohio Dec. 812. As between a conductor and a passenger, a ticket is conclusive as to the right of the latter to travel; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bannerman, 15 Ill. App. 100; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 50 Fed. 496, 1 C. C. A. 544; Callaway v. Mellett, 15 Ind. App. 366, 44 N. E. 198, 57 Am. St. Rep. 238. As a rule a passenger has a right to presume that a ticket agent will perform his whole duty and is not bound to examine his ticket to see that it is correct, unless put upon his inquiry; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Pauson, 70 Fed. 585, 17 C. C. A. 287, 30 L. R. A. 730; Laird v. Traction Co., 166 Pa. 4, 31 Atl. 51; Georgia R. Co. v. Olds, 77 Ga. 673. When a carrier has notified a connecting carrier that it will not recognize the tickets of the latter, it may refuse to accept such tickets; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. R. Co., 157 U. S. 225, 15 Sup. Ct. 576, 39 L. Ed. 682.

A passenger presenting the wrong transfer, received by the agent's mistake, may recover damages for ejection on refusal to pay fare; Lawshe v. Power Co., 29 Wash. 681, 70 Pac. 118, 59 L. R. A. 350; Jacobs v. R. Co., 71 App. Div. 199, 75 N. Y. Supp. 679; contra, as to the remedy in tort and held that the suit must be for breach of contract of carriage; Bradshaw v. R. Co., 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481; and see comments on these cases, 16 Harv. L. Rev. 139; where the passenger demands and pays for a ticket to one station, and the agent by mistake gives him a ticket to another station, it was held that on explanation to the conductor he had a right to ride to his destination; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Cates, 14 Ind. App. 172, 41 N. E. 712; Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Dougherty, 86 Ga. 744, 12 S. E. 747, 22 Am. St. Rep. 499. These cases are criticized as against the weight of authority, but no authority is given for that statement; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 353. He cannot be ejected because he refused to pay additional fare, where the ticket agent was in fault; Richardson v. R. Co., 71 S. C. 444, 51 S. E. 261; Head v. R. Co., 79 Ga. 358, 7 S. E. 217, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434; Murdock v. R. Co., 137 Mass. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 307; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Breckinridge, 99 Ky. 1, 34 S. W. 702; and evidence is admissible to show good faith in acting upon the information of the ticket agent; Vankirk v. R. Co., 76 Pa. 66, 18 Am. Rep. 404; he was held to be required to pay the extra fare in Pennsylvania Co. v. Lenhart, 120 Fed. 61, 56 C. C. A. 467; Sprenger v. Traction Co., 15 Wash. 660, 47 Pac. 17, 43 L. R. A. 766; Peabody v. Nav. Co., 21 Or. 121, 26 Pac. 1053, 12 L. R. A. 823; in such case, if he leaves the train he may sue, but not if he goes on; Lake S. & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277, 11 N. W. 157. A statement of the agent that the train would stop at a certain station binds the company only when made contemporaneously with the sale of the ticket; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cameron, 66 Fed. 709, 14 C. C. A. 358.

The plaintiff, an illiterate, showed the defendant's ticket agent a slip of paper, and asked for a railroad ticket to the place named thereon; the agent gave him a ticket to a different place; held that the defendant's agent in selling tickets is bound to use only ordinary care; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Wiggins (Tex.) 156 S. W. 1131.

A ticket defaced by a passenger so as to be unintelligible, may be refused; Northern C. R. Co. v. O'Conner, 76 Md. 207, 24 Atl. 449, 16 L. R. A. 449, 35 Am. St. Rep. 422. A carrier may specify upon what trains a ticket is good; Thorp v. R. Co., 61 Vt. 378, 17 Atl. 791; or charge fare for the actual distance travelled if a passenger takes a wrong train; Columbus, C. & I. C. R. Co. v. Powell, 40 Ind. 37; it must stop at a station for which it has sold a ticket; Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Ashby, 79 Va. 130, 52 Am. Rep. 620. A purchaser for value and without notice, of a ticket fraudulently obtained from a carrier, acquires no title thereto; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Campbell, 36 Ohio St. 647, 38 Am. Rep. 617. A passenger who accepts a ticket and signs it is bound by the conditions expressed in it; Boylan v. R. Co., 132 U. S. 146, 10 Sup. Ct. 50, 33 L. Ed. 290; Terre H. & I. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 47 Ind. 79; if such conditions are reasonable; New York C. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. Ed. 531; but not if he is unable to read, and no explanation is made by the agent who sells it; Mauritz v. R. Co., 23 Fed. 765; or if he is misled by the carrier; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Nicholai, 4 Ind. App. 119; 30 N. E. 424, 51 Am. St. Rep. 206. There is no presumption that the passenger has read a notice on his ticket; Malone v. R. Corp., 12 Gray (Mass.) 388, 74 Am. Dec. 598; Rawson v. R. Co., 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 543; but see 46 L. J. C. P. 768.

A passenger having lost his ticket cannot show by others that he purchased it; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 128. The rule which requires the production of a ticket is reasonable; Vah Dusan v. R. Co., 97 Mich. 439, 66 N. W. 848, 37 Am. St. Rep. 354; Hibbard v. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 455; [1896] 1 Q. B. 253; reasonable time to produce one should be given; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Willard, 31 Ill. App. 435; a conductor is not bound to search the pockets of a passenger to find his ticket; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 128. A passenger may be required to exhibit his ticket before entering a train; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Boger, 1 Ill. App. 472; and if he exhibits his ticket and demands a seat he has a right to a seat before he surrenders it; Davis v. R. Co., 53 Mo. 317, 14 Am. Rep. 457.

A passenger cannot stop over at an intermediate station unless such right is conferred by his contract; Drew v. R. Co., 51 Cal. 425; State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671; Terry v. R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 359; McClure v. R. Co., 34 Md. 532, 6 Am. Rep. 345; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Klyman, 108 Tenn. 304, 67 S. W. 472, 56 L. R. A. 769, 91 Am. St. Rep. 755; Dixon v. R. Co., 179 Mass. 242, 60 N. E. 581. A purchaser of a limited ticket over connecting lines is only bound to make a continuous trip over the part of the route covered by each coupon of the ticket, but must complete the trip within the time limited in the ticket; Little Rock & F. S. Ry. v. Dean, 43 Ark. 529, 51 Am. Rep. 584; Churchill v. R. Co., 67 Ill. 393; Nichols v. Southern Pac. Co., 23 Or. 123, 31 Pac. 296, 18 L. R. A. 55, 37 Am. St. Rep. 664.

Expulsion for refusing to pay the fare when the ticket tendered had passed the time limit was held not actionable although the passenger paid full fare and should have received an unlimited ticket; Shelton v. R. Co., 73 N. J. L. 558, 66 Atl. 403, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727, 118 Am. St. Rep. 704, 9 Ann. Cas. 883. Where a train was chartered for an excursion, a passenger had a right to be carried upon it upon tender of the regular fare, if he had no notice that passengers on that train were required to purchase round trip tickets; Kirkland v. Ry. Co., 79 S. C. 273, 60 S. E. 668, 128 Am. St. Rep. 848.

When a commuter is unable to show his ticket, when requested by the conductor, according to one of its conditions, his ejection, because he cannot find it, is unlawful, as he is entitled to a reasonable time to find it; here the ticket was on his person but could not be found at the time; Naples v. R. Co., 38 Conn. 557, 9 Am. Rep. 434; but when the commuter had left his ticket at home and refused to pay the extra fare, he was lawfully ejected; Downs v. R. Co., 36 Conn. 287, 4 Am. Rep. 77.

When a carrier furnishes facilities, it may require a passenger to purchase a ticket before entering a train; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Reed, 75 Ill. 125, 20 Am. Rep. 232; Swan v. R. Co., 132 Mass. 116, 42 Am. Rep.

432. It must keep a ticket office open for a reasonable time before the departure of trains; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cunningham, 67 Ill. 316.

A statute regulating the issuance and taking up of tickets by carriers is an exercise of the police power; Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 552, 30 Am. Rep. 238; and does not impair the obligation of contracts nor interfere with commerce between the states; id.

The Michigan supreme court held that a railroad company could be compelled to sell mileage books, goods only within the state, at a flat two-cent rate; Smith v. R. Co., 114 Mich. 460, 72 N. W. 328; but on appeal it was held that it was not a regulation of rates and that the statutes compelling the sale of mileage railroad ticket books are unconstitutional; Lake S. & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 19 Sup. Ct. 565, 43 L. Ed. 858. This decision (the Chief Justice and Gray and McKenna, JJ., dissenting), though the subject of much criticism, was impliedly followed and construed in Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194. In some cases the authority of the case is acknowledged though without approval of the reasoning; Beardsley v. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 230, 56 N. E. 488. A like statute is valid as to railroads incorporated or reorganized after its passage; Purdy v. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 42, 56 N. E. 508, 48 L. R. A. 669; but see Tiedm. Lim. Pol. Pow. 293.

A ticket sold at a reduced rate on condition that it is not transferable is not valid in the hands of a transferee; Levinson v. R. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 617, 43 S. W. 901.

The holder of a ticket from Trenton to Elmira was injured in Pennsylvania through defendant's negligence; it was held that his right to recover was governed by the law of Pennsylvania; Burnett v. R. Co., 176 Pa. 45, 34 Atl. 972.

See BAGGAGE; PASSENGER; COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; RATES; THEATRE.

Ticket Brokerage. In most of the jurisdictions where the question has arisen, statutes prohibiting the business of ticket brokerage are held to be constitutional; Com. v. Keary, 198 Pa. 500, 48 Atl. 472; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 59 N. W. 317, 24 L. R. A. 498; Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 552, 30 Am. Rep. 238; Burdick v. People, 149 Ill. 600, 36 N. E. 948, 24 L. R. A. 152, 41 Am. St. Rep. 329; In re O'Neill, 41 Wash. 174, 83 Pac. 104, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558, 6 Ann. Cas. 869; State v. Bernheim, 19 Mont. 512, 49 Pac. 441; State v. Thompson, 47 Or. 492, 84 Pac. 476, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 8 Ann. Cas. 646; Samuelson v. State, 116 Tenn. 470, 95 S. W. 1012, 115 Am. St. Rep. 805 (cited with approval as one "where the subject is elaborately reviewed"; Bitterman v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 205, 28 Sup. Ct. 91, 52 L. Ed. 171, 12 Ann. Cas. 693); contra, People v. Warden, 157 N. Y. 116, 51 N. E. 1006, 43 L. R. A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763; and see Jannin v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 631, 51 S. W. 1126, 62 S. W. 419, 96 Am. St. Rep. 821; Tiedm. Lim. Pol. Pow. 293. The Illinois case above cited has been challenged in the circuit courts of that state as being a collusive case and therefore not binding; 3 Chic. L. J. 337; id. 504; 4 id. 75; 31 Chic. L. N. 293; and see In re Burdick, 162 Ill. 48, 44 N. E. 413, where the fictitious character of the former case is conceded and it is said to be binding only between the parties; but the question is not further considered. So also an ordinance for the same purpose is constitutional; Ex parte Lorenzen, 128 Cal. 431, 61 Pac. 68, 50 L. R. A. 55, 79 Am. St. Rep. 47.

An injunction may issue to restrain the sale of return coupons of non-transferable round trip tickets issued and to be issued; Bitterman v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 205, 28 Sup. Ct. 91, 52 L. Ed. 171, 12 Ann. Cas. 693; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bay, 150 Fed. 770; Kinner v. R. Co., 69 Ohio St. 339, 69 N. E. 614 (although in that case the tickets were issued under an unlawful combination with other companies, on which ground an injunction was refused in Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Frank, 110 Fed. 689); Lytle v. R. Co., 41 Tex. Civ. App. 112, 90 S. W. 316 (where the injunction was restricted to tickets announced and offered for sale though not actually issued); Schubach v. McDonald, 179 Mo. 163, 78 S. W. 1020, 65 L. R. A. 136, 101 Am. St. Rep. 452 (where the jurisdiction was based on a local statute); contra, New York C. & H. R. Co. v. Reeves, 41 Misc. 490, 85 N. Y. Supp. 28, a decision of a trial court much referred to as standing alone and as to which White, J., in the United States Supreme Court case above cited says, "The reasoning there relied on, in our opinion, is inconclusive."

Where a railroad sells non-transferable excursion tickets at a reduced rate, the non-transferability and forfeiture embodied therein binds the buyer and any one subsequently acquiring them; also, the railroad is bound by the act to regulate commerce to prevent the wrongful use of such tickets; Bitterman v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 205, 28 Sup. Ct. 91, 12 Ann. Cas. 693; not so much for the protection of the railroad company as for the protection of the public; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. McCrary, 182 Fed. 401.

Where the contract of the company with the original purchaser was that the ticket should be non-transferable, one who ordered the breaking of the contract was held liable to the injured party; Angle v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 240, 38 L. Ed. 55.

In California an act prohibiting the sale of tickets to theatres and other places of amusement, at more than the regular price, was held invalid as conflicting with the state constitution securing the right of property;

Ex parte Quarg, 149 Cal. 79, 84 Pac. 766, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, 117 Am. St. Rep. 115, 9 Ann. Cas. 747. A former act making such tickets "property" when sold unconditionally (but excepting those on which any condition was printed or written) was held constitutional; Greenberg v. Turf Ass'n, 140 Cal. 360, 73 Pac. 1050.

The right of the original vendor to make the ticket non-transferable was upheld; Collister v. Hayman, 183 N. Y. 250, 76 N. E. 20, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188, 111 Am. St. Rep. 740, 5 Ann. Cas. 344.

TICKET OF LEAVE. A term first invented in the days of Australian penal transportation. It was a "pass" given to a convict who has completed the second stage of his sentence, and has entered on the third, conditional liberation, in which he goes at large to earn his own livelihood. He is required to report at fixed times to the nearest police station. The "pass" may be forfeited for disobedience or neglect of certain conditions. It filled a place analogous to the modern "probation" system. In 1910 it was proposed in parliament to abolish the English system. Encycl. Br.

As to a similar practice in the United States, see PABOLE.

TIDE LANDS. Lands covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the tide. The United States may grant, for appropriate purposes, titles or rights in the soil below high-water mark of tide waters. But they have never done so by general laws, and, unless in some case of international duty or public exigency, have acted upon the policy of leaving the administration and disposition of the sovereign rights in navigable waters, and in the soil under them, to the control of the states, respectively, when organized and admitted into the Union; Mann v. Land Co., 153 U. S. 273, 14 Sup. Ct. 820, 38 L. Ed. 714. See STATE LANDS.

Those wholly subject to the tidal action of the waters of a bay, which overflow them at high tide. Sawyer v. Osterhaus, 212 Fed. 765.

The words "public lands," as used in legislation, mean such as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws, and not tide lands; Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769; Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 618, 8 Sup. Ct. 1228, 31 L. Ed. 844. Tide lands are not subject to the location of land scrip under the act of 1872; Mann v. Land Co., 153 U. S. 273, 14 Sup. Ct. 820, 38 L. Ed. 714; Baer v. Moran Bros. Co., 153 U. S. 287, 14 Sup. Ct. 823, 38 L. Ed. 718.

TIDE-WATER. Water which flows and reflows with the tide. All arms of the sea, bays, creeks, coves, or rivers, in which the tide ebbs and flows, are properly denominated tide-waters.

That current is running down stream is not conclusive that it was ebb tide; it might be flood tide lower down; The Bangor, 212 Fed. 706.

The term tide-water is not limited to water which is salt, but embraces, also, so much of the water of fresh rivers as is propelled backwards by the ingress and pressure of the tide; 5 Co. 107; Attorney General v. Woods, 108 Mass. 436, 11 Am. Rep. 380; which might be said to be within the ebb and flow; Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324, 8 L. Ed. 700. The flowing, however, of the waters of a lake into a river do not constitute such a river a tidal or, technically, navigable river; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 98, 11 Am. Dec. 249.

The bed or soil of all tide-waters belongs, in England, to the crown, and in this country to the state in which they lie; and the waters themselves are public; so that all persons may use the same for the purpose of navigation and fishery, unless restrained by law; 5 B. & A. 304; 1 Macq. Hou. L. 49; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331. See Bowlby v. Shively, 22 Or. 410, 30 Pac. 154. In England, the power of parliament to restrain or improve these rights is held to be absolute; 4 B. & C. 598. In this country, such a power is subject to the limitations of the federal constitution; and while both the general and state governments may adopt measures for the improvement of navigation; Lehigh Bridge Co. v. Nav. Co., 4 Rawle (Pa.) 9, 26 Am. Dec. 111; Hollister v. Union Co., 9 Conn. 436, 25 Am. Dec. 36; and the states may grant private rights in tide-waters, provided they do not conflict with the public right of navigation; Rowe v. Bridge Corp., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 344; yet neither the general nor the state governments have the power to destroy or materially impair the right of navigation. See BRIDGE; FISHERY; RIVER; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; TERRITORIAL WATERS; WHARF.

TIE. When two persons receive an equal number of votes at an election, there is said to be a tie. Neither is elected. When the votes are given on any question to be decided by a deliberative assembly, and there is a tie, the question is lost. See MAJORITY.

TIEL. An old manner of spelling tel; such as, nul tiel record, no such record.

TIEMPO INHABIL. In Louisiana. A time when a man is not able to pay his debts.

TIERCE. A liquid measure, containing the third part of a pipe, or forty-two gallons.

TIGNI IMMITTENDI. See SERVITUS.

TIMBER. The body, stem, or trunk of a tree, or the larger pieces or sticks of wood which enter the frame-work of a building or other structure, excluding the plank, boards, shingles, or lath which may be used to complete the structure. Babka v. Eldred, 47 Wis. 192, 2 N. W. 102, 559. The term now seems to include all sorts of wood from which any useful articles can be made or which may be used to advantage in any class of manufacture or construction; U. S. v. Stores, 14 Fed. 824. Timber means generally such trees as are fit to be used in buildings or ships. Trees too small to be used for these purposes are not, strictly speaking, timber; Broad River L. Co. v. Middleby, 194 Fed. 817, 114 C. C. A. 521. Railroad ties are held to be timber; Kollock v. Parcher, 52 Wis. 393, 9 S. W. 67; fence rails are not; McCauley v. State, 43 Tex. 374; nor are trees, when suitable only for firewood; Nash v. Drisco, 51 Me. 417.

A federal act of 1897 makes it a penal offence to set fire to timber on the public domain.

See WOODS AND FORESTS.

TIMBER TREES. Oak, ash, elm, in all places, and, by local custom, such other trees as are used in building. 2 Bla. Com. 281; also beech, chestnut, walnut, cedar, fir, aspen, lime, sycamore, and birch trees; 6 George III. ch. 48; and also such as are used in the mechanical arts. Lewis, Cr. L. 506. Timber-trees, both standing, fallen, and severed and lying upon the soil, constitute a portion of the realty, and are embraced in a mortgage of the land; 1 Washb. R. P. 13; Gore v. Jenness, 19 Me. 53; and pass, by a judicial sale under such mortgage, to the purchaser; Hutchins v. King, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 53, 17 L. Ed. 544; Brackett v. Goddard, 54 Me. 313; Pattison's Appeal, 61 Pa. 294, 100 Am. Dec. 637. Some contracts for the sale of timber trees are contracts for the sale of an interest in lands; McGregor v. Brown, 10 N. Y. 117; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203; Hostetter v. Auman, 119 Ind. 7, 20 N. E. 506; and, as such, within the statute of frauds; Hirth v. Graham, 50 Ohio St. 57, 33 N. E. 90, 19 L. R. A. 721, 40 Am. St. Rep. 641. When both the land and standing timber are vested in one person, the latter are real estate; France v. Logging Co., 140 Pac. 361.

The interest of a grantee of growing timber to be removed within a certain period is a determinable fee in real estate and will pass to his heirs and not to his administrator; Midyette v. Grubbs, 145 N. C. 85, 58 S. E. 795, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 278. It is held that an oral contract for the sale of standing timber, to be cut at once and removed in a reasonable time, relates to personal property; Strause v. Berger, 220 Pa. 367, 69 Atl. 818.

The right of a grantor of land who reserves to himself timber standing thereon, to be removed within a specified time, terminates at the expiration of such time; Adkins v. Huff, 58 W. Va. 645, 52 S. E. 773, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649, 6 Ann. Cas. 246. Where only the timber is granted, it is incumbent on the grantee to cut and remove it within a reasonable time; McRae v. Stillwell, 111 Ga. 65, 36 S. E. 604, 55 L. R. A. 513. A parol sale of standing timber is but a license to enter, cut and remove, which may be revoked; Hodsdon v. Kennett, 73 N. H. 225, 60 Atl. 686, 111 Am. St. Rep. 607. Where timber is sold and no time is fixed for cutting and removing, such sale passes an equitable interest in the real estate; McCoy v. Fraley (Ky.) 113 S. W. 444.

The better action for damages for cutting and carrying away timber trees seems to be that of trespass quare clausum fregit et de bonis asportatis (unless otherwise designated by statute); 2 Greenl. 173, 387. See WASTE; SALE; TREE; TIMBER.

TIME. The measure of duration. Lapse of time often furnishes a presumption, stronger or weaker according to the length of time which has passed, of the truth of certain facts, such as the legal title to rights, payment of or release from debts.

Time in Great Britain, in any statute or legal instrument, means, by statute, Greenwich mean time, and in Ireland, Dublin time. The only standard of time recognized by the courts is the meridian of the sun; not any arbitrary standard; Henderson v. Reynolds, 84 Ga. 159, 10 S. E. 734, 7 L. R. A. 327; 3 H. & N. 866.

Greenwich time is also in use in Holland and Belgium; France follows Paris time; Switzerland, Italy and Central Germany use mid-European time, which is one hour in advance of Greenwich time. A 24-hour system is adopted in Italy and Canada.

Where a policy of insurance expires at twelve o'clock noon, the exact time of noon will be determined by the common or solar time, unless it is shown that a different time was intended by the parties; Jones v. Ins. Co., 110 Ia. 75, 81 N. W. 188, 46 L. R. A. 860, contra, Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Gaubert Co., 120 Ky. 752, 87 S. W. 1115, 89 S. W. 3, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364, 9 Ann. Cas. 324, where a custom of reckoning by standard time was shown. The termination of a term of court is determined by sun time; Texas T. & L. Co. v. Hightower, 100 Tex. 126, 96 S. W. 1071, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046, 123 Am. St. Rep. 794.

A time restriction in a statute refers to local or actual, and not conventional, time; 7 S. C. (So. Africa) 115.

The general rule of law is that the performance of a contract must be completed at or within the time fixed by the contract; Leake, Contr. 772. Wherever, in cases not governed by particular customs of trade, the parties bind themselves to the performance of duties within a certain number of days, they have to the last minute of the last day to perform their obligations; 6 M. & G. 593. See PERFORMANCE.

In legal documents the primary meaning of month is lunar month; [1904] 1 Ch. 305.

A requirement for publication of a notice twice a week refers to two publications in each successive seven days and it is not necessary to count the week from Sunday to Saturday; Leach v. Burr, 188 U. S. 510, 23 Sup. Ct. 393, 47 L. Ed. 567.

Generally, in computing time, the first day is excluded and the last included; Owen v. Slatter, 26 Ala. 547, 62 Am. Dec. 745; see State v. Elson, 77 Ohio St. 489, 83 N. E. 904, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686; excluding the day on which an act is done, when the computation is to be made from such an act; 15 Ves. Ch. 248; 16 Cow. 659; Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 485; Kimm v. Osgood's Adm'r, 19 Mo. 60; including it, according to Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193; except where the exclusion will prevent forfeiture; 2 Camp. 294; Windsor v. China, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 298. The rule which excludes the terminus a quo is not absolute, it may be included when necessary to give effect to the obvious intention; Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 640, 13 Sup. Ct. 549, 37 L. Ed. 313. Time from and after a given day excludes that day; Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 485; Weld v. Barker, 153 Pa. 465, 26 Atl. 239. But see Dutcher v. Wright, 94 U. S. 560, 24 L. Ed. 130. A policy of insurance includes the last day of the term for which it is issued; L. R. 5 Exch. 296. Particular words, e. g. at, on, or upon a certain time, will be construed according to a reasonable interpretation of the contract; 10 A. & E. 370. The use of the word until generally implies an intention to exclude the day to which it refers, unless it appears otherwise from the context; Ryan v. Bank, 10 Neb. 524, 7 N. W. 276; Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94; till is held to include the day referred to; Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 352.

Whether the expiration of a policy was by standard railroad time was left to the jury, the burden being on the insurance company to prove that such time was customarily used at that place; Jones v. Ins. Co., 110 Ia. 75, 81 N. W. 188, 46 L. R. A. 860. In a notice of a foreclosure sale, "two o'clock" means standard time; Orvik v. Casselman, 15 N. D. 34, 105 N. W. 1105. If, at the opening of a term of court, the court clock is set by sun time, that governs the closing of the term; Ex parte Parker, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 12, 29 S. W. 480, 790.

Sunday is a dies non, and a power that may be exercised up to and including a given day of the month may generally, when that day happens to be Sunday, be exercised on the succeeding day; Street v. U. S., 133 U. S. 299, 10 Sup. Ct. 309, 33 L. Ed. 631. Sunday is said to be included in the computation when the time exceeds, and excluded when less than, seven days; Snell v. Scott, 2 Mich. N. P. 108.

Where the last day wherein an act is to be performed falls on a Sunday, the act may be done on the succeeding day; Pressed S. C. Co. v. R. Co., 121 Fed. 609, 57 C. C. A. 635.

Sundays cannot be excluded in computing the time for signing bills of exception; American Tobacco Co. v. Strickling, 88 Md. 500, 41 Atl. 1083, 69 L. R. A. 909. A statute which declares that a holiday should be considered as Sunday applies only to public business, and where an option for stock expires on New Year's Day, the time was not extended to the succeeding day; Page v. Shainwald, 169 N. Y. 246, 62 N. E. 356, 57 L. R. A. 173.

See SUNDAY; DIES NON.

Deeds, bills of exchange, letters, and other written instruments are generally construed to have been made and issued at the time of their date, but the execution of a deed may be averred and proved according to the fact; 10 Exch. 40. Courts will always adopt that construction in the computation of time which will uphold and enforce, rather than destroy, bona fide transactions and titles, and whenever it is necessary to prevent a forfeiture or to effectuate the clear intention of the parties, the dies a quo will be included; otherwise it will be excluded; Taylor v. Brown, 5 Dak. 335, 40 N. W. 525.

The law will take account of the fraction of a day when justice so requires; Gallagher v. Pub. Co., 75 N. J. Eq. 171, 71 Atl. 741, 138 Am. St. Rep. 514; Tower v. Stimpson, 175 Fed. 130.

The construction of contracts with regard to the time of performance is the same in equity as at law; but in case of mere delay in performance, a court of equity will in general relieve against the legal consequences and decree specific performance upon equitable terms notwithstanding the delay, if the matter of the contract admits of that form of remedy. In such cases it is said that in equity time is not considered to be of the essence of the contracts; L. R. 3 Ch. 67. Ordinarily time is not of the essence of the contract, but it may be made so by express stipulation of the parties; see Brown v. Trust Co., 128 U. S. 403, 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 32 L. Ed. 468; or it may be so by implication, because of the nature of the property involved; Waterman v. Banks, 144 U. S. 394, 12 Sup. Ct. 646, 36 L. Ed. 479; or because of the avowed object of the seller or purchaser; Cheney v. Libby, 134 U. S. 68, 10 Sup. Ct. 498, 33 L. Ed. 818; Waterman v. Banks, 144 U. S. 394, 12 Sup. Ct. 646, 36 L. Ed. 479; or from the nature of the contract itself; or by one party giving the other notice that performance must be made within a certain reasonable time fixed in the notice; Kirby v. Harrison, 2 Ohio St. 326, 59 Am. Dec. 677; Bullock v. Adams' Ex'rs, 20 N. J. Eq. 367; time is always of the essence of unilateral contracts; Maughlin v. Perry, 35 Md. 352; Smith v. Gillett, 50 Ill. 298. Completion of a contract within a reasonable time is sufficient, if no time is stipulated; Minneapolis Gas Light Co. v. Mfg. Co., 122 U. S. 300, 7 Sup. Ct. 1187, 30 L. Ed. 1190.

Time is of the essence of the contract where land is to be paid for in monthly installments and after three months default the contract is to be void and the money paid is to be forfeited to the vendor; Axford v. Thomas, 160 Pa. 8, 28 Atl. 443; and so where the contract shows an intention of the parties to limit it to a certain period; Hull C. & C. Co. v. Coke Co., 113 Fed. 260, 51 C. C. A. 213; Scarlett v. Stein, 40 Md. 512.

In determining whether stipulations as to the time of performance of a contract of sale are conditions precedent, the court will seek to discover the real intention of the parties in deciding whether time is of the essence of the contract; Benj. Sales § 593. If a thing sold is of greater or less value according to the lapse of time, stipulations with regard to it must be literally complied with both at law and in equity; Gale v. Archer, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 320; Goldsmith v. Guild, 10 Allen (Mass.) 239.

When notice is to be given "immediately" under an employers' liability policy, it means reasonable notice; John B. Stevens & Co. v. Ins. Co., 207 Fed. 757, 125 C. C. A. 295, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214.

Stat. 43 & 44 Vict. c. 9, was passed to "remove doubts as to the meaning of expressions relative to time in acts of parliament and other legal instruments."

See YEAR; IDES; FROM; DAY; REGNAL YEARS; OLD STYLE.

In Pleading. A point in or space of duration at or during which some fact is alleged to have been committed.

In criminal actions, both the day and the year of the commission of the offence must appear; but there need not be an express averment, if they can be collected from the whole statement; Jacobs v. Com., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 315. The prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any day which is previous to the finding of the indictment; Jacobs v. Com., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 316; but a day subsequent to the trial must not be laid; Pennsylvania v. McKee, Add. (Pa.) 36.

In mixed and real actions, no particular day need be alleged in the declaration; 3 Chitty, Pl. 620; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 99.

In personal actions, all traversable affirmative facts should be laid as occurring on some day; Steph. Pl. 292; but no day need be alleged for the occurrence of negative matter; Com. Dig. Pleader (C 19); and a failure in this respect is, in general, aided after verdict; 13 East 407. Where the cause of action is a trespass of a permanent nature or constantly repeated, it should be laid with a continuando, which title see. The day need not, in general, be the actual day of commission of the fact; Amory v. McGregor, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 287; Drown v. Smith, 3 N. H. 299; if the actual day is not stated, it should be laid under a videlicet; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 63. The exact time may become material, and must then be correctly laid; 10 B. & C. 215; Jordan v. Cooper, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 564; Eastman v. Bodfish, 1 Stor. 528, Fed. Cas. No. 4,255; as, the time of execution of an executory written document; Gould, Pl. § 67. The defence must follow the time laid in the declaration, if time is not material; 1 Chitty, Pl. 509; 1 Saund. 14, 82; need not when it becomes material; 2 Saund. 5 a, b (n. 3); or in pleading matter of discharge; 2 Burr. 944; or a record; Gould, Pl. § 83.

The Christian era was first adopted in Italy in the 6th, and accepted by England in the 8th, century. It commenced originally on March 25, but in England Christmas day was adopted as the beginning of the year, from the 7th to the 12th century, after which March 25 prevailed until January 1 was adopted in 1752, when the calendar was reformed, omitting 11 days from the year in order to connect the civil and astronomical years. Thereafter the New Style was adopted, and the previous period was known as the Old Style; the difference between them is now 13 days. The Eastern Church retains the Old Style (Greek and Russian).

Jewish. In the 15th century the Jews adopted as their epoch the Creation of the World, which was placed in a year called in the Christian chronology 3760 B. C. The year 1914 A. D. is 5675 in the Jewish calendar.

Mohammedan. This epoch is the Hejira, or the flight of Mahomet from Mecca to Medina in 622 A. D.; the first day of the first month of that era corresponds with July 16, 622 A. D.

Roman. The Roman epoch was the foundation of Rome. It was assumed to fall in the year 753 B. C. It is indicated by the abbreviation A. U. C. (ab urbe condita).

Chinese. In 1913 China adopted the calendar of Western Europe.

Macedonian. This epoch was the occupation of Babylon in 311 B. C., and this prevailed in all Greek countries until the Middle Ages, and among the Jews until the 15th century.

Greek. The ancient Greeks recorded time by the four-year periods of the Olympic games, called Olympiads. The first recorded Olympiad is 776 B. C.

TIME BARGAIN. An agreement to buy or sell stock at a future time or within a fixed time at a certain price. See FUTURES; OPTION; MARGIN.

TIME CHARTER. A charter under which the ship is at the disposal of the charterer for a specified time.

TIME CLOCK. Where a workman was injured while running to punch a time clock, it was held to be "in the course of his employment"; Rayner v. Furniture Co. (Mich.) 146 N. W. 665. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

A workman who had admittedly done his work is entitled to his pay, although he did not punch the time clock as required; Matthews v. Lumber Co., 91 S. C. 568, 75 S. E. 170, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 644, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 45.

TIME IMMEMORIAL. Time beyond legal memory.

See 14 L. R. A. 120, n.; OLD STYLE; PRESCRIPTION; MEMORY; LIMITATIONS; MONTH; DAY; STATUTE.

TIME-TABLES. A time-table is a proposal or part of a proposal, addressed to all intending passengers and sufficiently accepted by tender of the fare at the station in time for the advertised train. 5 E. & B. 860; 25 L. J. Q. B. 129. See PUNCTUALITY.

TIPPING. An immigrant employed as a boot-black received tips and paid them to the employer at night. After two years he sued to recover the payments. The jury found that there was no contract between the parties and that they belonged to the plaintiff; Zappas v. Roumelote, 156 Iowa, 709, 137 N. W. 935; in the absence of a contract to the contrary, tips belong to the employee; Polites v. Barlin, 149 Ky. 376, 149 S. W. 828, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1217. Acts forbidding tipping have been passed in England and New York.

TIPPLING-HOUSE. A place where spirituous liquors are sold and drunk in violation of law. Sometimes the mere selling is considered as evidence of keeping a tippling-house. Patten v. Centralia, 47 Ill. 370.

A public drinking-place, where liquor or other intoxicating drink is sold, to be drunk on the premises. Harris v. People, 1 Colo. App. 289, 28 Pac. 1133.

TIPSTAFF. An officer appointed by the marshal of the court of king's bench, to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipped with silver.

In the United States, the courts sometimes appoint an officer who is known by this name, whose duty it is to attend on the court. Similar officers employed in the courts of Pennsylvania are so called.

TITHES. In English Law. A right to the tenth part of the produce of lands, the stock upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants. These tithes are raised for the support of the clergy. Almost all the tithes of England and Wales are now commuted into rent charges, under 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, and the various statutes since passed; 3 Steph. Com. 731. In the United States there are no tithes.

A form of taxation, secular and ecclesiastical, usually, as the name implies, consisting of one-tenth of a man's property or produce. The custom was almost universal in antiquity. They were generally regarded, up to the 17th century, as existing jure divino, and as having been payable to the support of the church ever since the earliest days of Christiarity. Various acts have been passed on the subject. The act of 1891 places the burden on the landowner, who cannot contract otherwise with the tenant. If a tenant is in possession, a receiver is appointed for the rents and profits. Neither the owner nor the tenant is personally liable. Encycl. Br.

See Phillimore, Eccl. Law; Selborne, Ancient Facts and Fictions Concerning Churches and Tithes; Lansdell, The Sacred Tenth.

TITHING. In English Law. A group of ten, twelve or more persons, under the superintendence of a tithingman, mutually responsible for one another's misdeeds. In some places the roll is the tithing. This system is called the Frithborh or Frankpledge. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. S.

TITHINGMAN. In Saxon Law. The head or chief of a tithing or decennary of ten families: he was to decide all lesser causes between neighbors. Now tithingmen and constables are the same thing. Jacob, Law Dict.

In New England, a parish officer to keep good order in church. Webster, Dict.

TITLE. Estates. The means whereby the owner of lands hath the just possession of his property. Co. Litt. 345; 2 Bla. Com. 195. See Courcier v. Graham, 1 Ohio 349. This is the definition of title to lands only.

A bad title is one which conveys no property to the purchaser of an estate.

A doubtful title is one which the court does not consider to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser, nor so defective as to declare it a bad title, but only subject to so much doubt that a purchaser ought not to be compelled to accept it; 1 J. & W. 568; Sebring v. Mersereau, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 344.

A good title is that which entitles a man by right to a property or estate, and to the lawful possession of the same.

A marketable title is one which a court of equity considers to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser.

The doctrine of marketable titles is purely equitable and of modern origin; Atk. Tit. 26. At law every title not bad is marketable; 5 Taunt. 625; 6 id. 263.

There are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands and tenements. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title is a presumptive title or the mere possession, or actual occupation of the estate, without any apparent right to hold or continue such possession: this happens when one man disseises another. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession, which may reside in one man while the actual possession is not in himself, but in another. This right of possession is of two sorts: an apparent right of possession, which may be defeated by proving a better, and an actual right of possession, which will stand the test against all opponents. The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or the right of possession. 2 Bla. Com. 195.

Title to real estate is acquired by two methods, namely, by descent and by purchase; also under the statute of limitations; Montoya v. Gonzales, 232 U. S. 375, 34 Sup. Ct. 413, 58 L. Ed. —.

Prescription, in the Roman law, gave the possessor a perfect title. The statute of limitations provides, not that the adverse possessor shall acquire title, but that one who neglects for a given time to assert his right shall not thereafter enforce it. Still, as in the Roman law, title is gained by prescription. James Barr Ames, Lect. on Leg. Hist. 197, 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. Hist. 567, where he notes a contrary view held by Prof. Langdell in Summary of Eq. Pl. § 122.

See ADVERSE POSSESSION; LAND TITLE AND TRANSFER.

Proceedings by the United States against a corporation for the condemnation of land, in which the state of the title and pending litigation as to it is set up in the pleadings, is not a concession that title is in such corporation; U. S. v. Water Power Co., 229 U. S. 53, 33 Sup. Ct. 667, 57 L. Ed. 1063.

Title to personal property may accrue in three different ways: by original acquisition; by transfer by act of law; by transfer by act of the parties.

Title by original acquisition is acquired by occupancy, see OCCUPANCY; by accession, see ACCESSION; by intellectual labor, see PATENT; COPYRIGHT; TRADE-MARK.

The title to personal property is acquired and lost by transfer by act of law, in various ways: by forfeiture; succession; marriage; judgment; insolvency; intestacy.

Title is acquired and lost by the act of the party, by gift, by contract or sale.

In general, possession constitutes the criterion of title of personal property (q. v.), because no other means exist by which a knowledge of the fact to whom it belongs can be attained. A seller of a chattel is not, therefore, required to show the origin of his title, nor, in general, is a purchaser, without notice of the claim of the owner, compellable to make restitution; but it seems that a purchaser from a tenant for life of personal chattels will not be secure against the claims of those entitled in remainder; Cowp. 432; 1 Bro. C. C. 274.

Ordinarily possession of personal property constitutes the indicia of title thereto. It is, however, at best but prima facie evidence of ownership; Miller Piano Co. v. Parker, 135 Pa. 208, 26 Atl. 303, 35 Am. St. Rep. 873. One who is not the owner cannot in general pass the title. The chief exception is under the doctrine of market overt, which see. There are exceptions also in cases where one in possession has evidences of title which enable him to commit a fraud on a third party, in which cases the law may protect the third party. One in possession of stolen money or negotiable securities may pass title to them.

See SALES; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES; POSSESSION; MARKET OVERT; MARKETABLE TITLE; FINDER; VESSEL; F. O. B.

As an exception to the rule that possession is the criterion of title of property may be mentioned the case of ships, the title of which can be ascertained by the register; 15 Ves. Ch. 60; 8 Price 256.

In Legislation. That part of an act of the legislature by which it is known and distinguished from other acts; the name of the act. While the title of a statute cannot be used to add to or take from the body thereof, yet in cases of doubt, it may be referred to as a help to the interpretation; Church of Holy Trinity v. U. S., 143 U. S. 457, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 36 L. Ed. 226. See CONSTRUCTION.

Formerly the title was held to be no part of a bill, though it could be looked to when the statute was ambiguous; Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 23 Sup. Ct. 821, 47 L. Ed. 1002; Cornell v. Coyne, 192 U. S. 418, 24 Sup. Ct. 383, 48 L. Ed. 504; Smith v. Scott, 31 Wis. 431; but it could not enlarge or restrain the provisions of the act itself; Hadden v. The Collector, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 18 L. Ed. 518. In later years constitutional provisions have required that the title of every legislative act shall correctly indicate the subject-matter of the act; Cooley, Const. Lim. 172. The object of this was mainly to prevent surprise in legislation.

An act must have but one general object, which is fairly indicated by the title; a title may be general if it does not cover incongruous legislation; Endl. Interp. Stat. 59; Indiana C. Ry. Co. v. Potts, 7 Ind. 681; People v. Briggs, 50 N. Y. 553; the use of the words "other purposes" have no effect; Town of Fishkill v. Road Co., 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 642; Board of County Com'rs v. Smelting Co., 3 Colo. App. 223, 32 Pac. 717. It is said that the courts will construe these provisions liberally rather than embarrass legislation by a construction, the strictness of which is unnecessary to the attainment of the beneficial purposes for which they were adopted; Cooley, Const. Lim. 178. In construing an act, the court will strike from it all that relates to the object not indicated by the title, and sustain the rest if it is complete in itself; id. 181; Ex parte Cowert, 92 Ala. 94, 9 South. 225. These provisions are usually considered mandatory, though they were held to be directory in Washington v. Page, 4 Cal. 388. In Pennsylvania, where an act of assembly is entitled a supplement to a former act, and the subject thereof is germane to that of the original act, its subject is sufficiently expressed; State Line & J. R. Co.'s Appeal, 77 Pa. 429.

Where the constitution requires that the subject of every act shall be clearly expressed in its title, if the title of an act is materially changed after its passage and before enrollment and approval, the act is invalid; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Smyth, 103 Fed. 376.

The inclusion in a statute of a section foreign to the subject of the act and not mentioned in the title does not invalidate the remainder of the act, though it may itself be void; Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725.

In England the title was formerly held to be no part of a statute, but was commonly framed by the clerk after the bill had passed; Eby's Appeal, 70 Pa. 314, per Sharswood, J. It is now held to be a part of a statute; [1899] 1 Ch. 3.

Personal Relations. A distinctive appellation denoting the rank to which the individual belongs in society. See RANK; NOBILITY.

Titles are assumed by foreign princes, and among their subjects they may exact these marks of honor; but in their intercourse with foreign nations they are not entitled to them as a matter of right; Wheat Int. Law, 3d Eng. ed. § 159.

In Pleading. The right of action which the plaintiff has. The declaration must show the plaintiff's title, and if such title be not shown in that instrument the defect cannot be cured by any of the future pleadings. Bacon, Abr. Pleas, etc. (B 1).

In Rights. The name of a newspaper, a book, and the like. See TRADE-MARK.

TITLE, COVENANTS FOR. See COVENANT.

TITLE DEEDS. Those deeds which are evidences of the title of the owner of an estate. The person who is entitled to the inheritance has a right to the possession of the title-deeds; 1 Carr. & M. 653.

A pledge of title deeds is as effectual as the pledge of any other chattel. They are, it is true, so far an accessory of the title to the land as to pass with it to the grantee, although not mentioned in the conveyance. But they are not inseparably attached to the title, and the owner of the land may sever them and dispose of them as chattels; Ames, Lectures on Leg. Hist. 256.

As to a lien created by deposit of title-deeds, see LIEN.

TITLE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

TITLE OF A CAUSE. The peculiar designation of a suit, consisting usually of the name of the court, the venue, and the parties. The method of arranging the names of the parties is not everywhere uniform. The English way, and that formerly in vogue in this country, and still retained in many of the states, is for the actor in each step of the cause to place his name first, as if he were plaintiff in that particular proceeding, and his adversary's afterwards. Thus the case of Upton v. White would, if taken from a county court to the supreme court on a writ of error by defendant, be entitled White v. Upton. In New York and many other states which have enacted codes of procedure, the rule now is that the original order of names of parties is retained throughout. See AD SECTAM.

TITLE OF ENTRY. The right to enter upon lands. Cowell. See ENTRY.

TITULUS. In the Civil Law. Title; the source or ground of possession.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A temple or church.

TO. A term of exclusion, unless by necessary implication it is manifestly used in a different sense. Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 201, 29 Am. Dec. 501; Montgomery v. Reed, 69 Me. 514; State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 460, 24 Atl. 940.

An order extending the time for signing a bill of exceptions to a certain day, is inclusive of such day: Gottlieb v. Wolf Co., 75 Md. 126, 23 Atl. 198; but "from" an object "to" an object excludes the terminus referred to: State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 459, 24 Atl. 940. See FROM.

TO WIT. That is to say; namely; scilicet; videlicet.

TOBACCO. An ordinance prohibiting using or carrying tobacco on any street of a city was held an unwarrantable interference with the private rights of the citizen; Zion v. Behrens, 262 Ill. 510, 104 N. E. 836.

See ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

TOFT. A place or piece of ground on which a house formerly stood, which has been destroyed by accident or decay. 2 Broom & H. Com. 17.

TOGATI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Under the empire, when the toga had ceased to be the usual costume of the Romans, advocates were nevertheless obliged to wear it whenever they pleaded a cause. Hence they were called togati.

TOKEN. A document or sign of the existence of a fact.

Tokens are either public or general, or privy tokens. They are either true or false. When a token is false and indicates a general intent to defraud, and is used for that purpose, it will render the offender guilty of the crime of cheating; People v. Johnson, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 292; but if it is a mere privy token, as, counterfeiting a letter in another man's name, in order to cheat but one individual, it would not be indictable; People v. Stone, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 182; Respublica v. Powell, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 47, 1 L. Ed. 31.

TOKEN-MONEY. Originally used to designate the counters issued by traders to meet the lack of small change. Now used by economists to denote the smaller money that circulates at a nominal value higher than its cost. Encycl. Br. See TOKEN.

TOLERATE. To allow so as not to hinder; to permit as something not wholly approved of; to suffer; to endure. Gregory v. U. S., 17 Blatchf. 330, Fed. Cas. No. 5,803.

TOLERATION. In some countries, where religion is established by law, certain sects who do not agree with the established religion are nevertheless permitted to exist; and this permission is called toleration. They are permitted and allowed to remain rather as a matter of favor than a matter of right. By the Toleration Act of 1 W. & M. c. 18, and subsequent statutes down to the 35 & 36 Vict. c. 26, enabling any person to take any degree (other than a divinity degree) in the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham, the disabilities of the Roman Catholics, Jews, and Dissenters have been almost wholly removed; 2 Steph. Com. 707. See CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION ACT.

In the United States there is no such thing as toleration; all men have an equal right to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences. See CHRISTIANITY; RELIGION; RELIGIOUS TEST.

TOLL. A sum of money for the use of something, generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, bridge, or the like, of a public nature.

The compensation paid to a miller for grinding another person's grain. Quoted in Lake S. & M. R. Co. v. U. S., 93 U. S. 458, 23 L. Ed. 965.

The rate of taking toll for grinding is regulated by statute in most of the states. See 2 Washb. R. P.; 6 Q. B. 31. See RATES.

A state has no power to regulate tolls upon a bridge connecting it with another state without the assent of congress and without the concurrence of such other state in the proposed tariff; Willamette I. B. Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 811, 31 L. Ed. 629.

In Anglo-Saxon, the right to take tallage of one's villeins. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 11.

To bar, defeat, or take away: as, to toll an entry into lands is to deny or take away the right of entry.

To toll the statute of limitation is to show facts which remove its bar of the action.

TOLL-GATE. A gate on a bridge or a turnpike where toll is collected for the right of traveling on them.

The right to obstruct a public road by means of a toll-gate and to demand payment of toll for passing must be given by an act of the legislature,—either a general incorporation act or special charter. In the absence of legislation authorizing it, such gate is a public nuisance as is any other purpresture. The maintenance of it may be punished by indictment or prevented by injunction; Wales v. Stetson, 2 Mass. 143, 37 Am. Dec. 39; Maysville & Mt. S. T. Co. v. Ratliff, 85 Ky. 244, 3 S. W. 148; Craig v. People, 47 Ill. 487.

The granting of a franchise to construct a turnpike road implies the right to erect toll-gates and collect tolls for the use of the road, and also to change the location of the gate from time to time; Com. v. Turnpike

Road Co., 5 S. W. 743, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 538; Fowler v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 369; but it has been held that after once locating a gate there is no power to change it, the power of location having been exhausted; Gourley v. Turnpike Co., 104 Tenn. 305, 56 S. W. 855; Griffen v. House, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 397; Hartford, N. L., W. & T. C. Soc. v. Hosmer, 12 Conn. 361; but this view is criticised as being without either sense or justice; Thomps. Corp. § 5913; the power of location cannot be exercised so as to create a nuisance; Snell v. Buresh, 123 Ill. 151, 13 N. E. 856; and a provision in the charter against the erection of gates within city limits does not require a company to remove gates brought within the limits of a city by subsequent extension thereof; Detroit v. R. Co., 43 Mich. 140, 5 N. W. 275.

TOLL-TRAVERSE. A toll for passing over a private man's ground; a toll for passing over the soil of another or over soil which though now a public highway was once private and which was dedicated subject to a toll. It can be claimed by prescription. 37 L. J. Q. B. 209; 3 Q. B. 521.

TOLLBOOTH. A prison; a customhouse; an exchange; also the place where goods are weighed; a place where merchants met; a local tribunal for small civil cases held at the Guild Hall, Bristol. Whart.

TOLLS. In a general sense, tolls signify any manner of customs, subsidy, prestation, imposition, or sum of money demanded for exporting or importing of any wares or merchandise, to be taken of the buyer. Co. 2d Inst. 58.

TOLT. A writ whereby a cause depending in a court baron was taken and removed into a county court. O. N. B. 4.

TOLZEY COURT. An inferior court of record having civil jurisdiction, still existing at Bristol, England.

TOMBSTONE. A gift or bequest to keep perpetually, a tombstone in repair offends against a rule as to perpetuities and is void, but such a condition to that effect attached to a bequest to a charity in case of failure to comply with condition is good. L. R. 3 Ch. 252. See MONUMENT; HEARSAY.

TON. Twenty hundredweight, each hundredweight being one hundred and twelve pounds avoirdupois. Such is the meaning of the word in the administration of federal law concerning customs duties; U. S. Comp. St. p. 1941. See MEASURE.

TONLIEU (Fr.). See TAILLE.

TONNAGE. The capacity of a ship or vessel.

This term is most usually applied to the capacity of a vessel in tons as determined by the legal mode of measurement; in England reckoned according to the number of tons burden a ship will carry, but here to her internal cubic capacity; and, as a general rule, in the United States the official tonnage of a vessel is considerably below the actual capacity of the vessel to carry freight. Roberts v. Opdyke, 40 N. Y. 259.

The duties paid on the tonnage of a ship or vessel. For the rule for determining tonnage in the United States, see R. S. § 4150 et seq.; 3 U. S. Comp. St. 2812, and amendments in Suppt. (1911) 1190.

A foreign built vessel purchased by a citizen of the United States and brought into the waters thereof was held not taxable under the tariff laws of the United States; The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 41 L. Ed. 937. The tariff act of August 5, 1909, imposed an annual tonnage tax of $7 per gross ton on foreign-built yachts and pleasure boats, owned or chartered for more than six months by citizens of the United States, which could be commuted by paying a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem. It was held that this tax was an excise, not on the actual use, but on the privilege of using, and was collectible if a yacht had been out of commission during the entire preceding year. But it must be shown that a foreign-built yacht had been used, to some extent at least, in the United States, especially where the owner, although a citizen of the United States, was domiciled in a foreign country. The tax is imposed on the owners of yachts, etc., or on charterers for a period of more than six months; U. S. v. Billings, 190 Fed. 359 (an opinion covering five cases). Four of these cases were before the supreme court and the judgments were affirmed, except that it was held that there was no liability where the yacht (which was laid up at Brooklyn) had not been used at all during the preceding year; Billings v. U. S., 232 U. S. 261, 34 Sup. Ct. 421, 58 L. Ed. —; U. S. v. Billings, 232 U. S. 289, 34 Sup. Ct. 428, 58 L. Ed. —; Pierce v. U. S., 232 U. S. 290, 34 Sup. Ct. 427, 58 L. Ed. —; U. S. v. Goelet, 232 U. S. 293, 34 Sup. Ct. 431, 58 L. Ed. —. The act was repealed by the tariff act of Oct. 3, 1913. In U. S. v. Blair, 190 Fed. 372, it was held that a yacht which had burned and sunk, and been expensively repaired, remained "foreign-built."

The constitution provides, art. 1, s. 10, n. 2, that no state shall, without the consent of congress, lay any duty on tonnage; State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 204, 20 L. Ed. 370; Inman S. S. Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 238, 24 L. Ed. 118. But a municipal corporation situated on a navigable river can, consistently with the constitution of the United States, charge and collect from the owner of licensed steamboats, which moor at a wharf constructed by it, wharfage proportioned to their tonnage; Keokuk N. L. P. Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80, 24 L. Ed. 377; Keokuk v. Packet Co., 45 Ia. 196. See COMMERCE.

The duty of tonnage prohibited by the constitution is a charge upon a vessel according to its tonnage as the instrument of commerce, for the privilege of entering or leaving a port or navigating public waters; Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 7 Sup. Ct. 313, 30 L. Ed. 487.

By act of March 24, 1908, to carry out the International Convention of December 21, 1904, hospital ships in time of war are exempted from all dues and taxes under United States laws, and from all pilotage charges in waters of the United States.

TONNAGE-RENT. Rent reserved by a mining lease consisting of a royalty on every ton of minerals.

TONNAGE TAX. A small tax per ton on vessels entering a port. It has not been levied in Great Britain, nor, it is believed, in any European country except Spain; Cent. Dict. It was first in force in the United States in the early part of the last century. It is now (Act Aug. 5, 1909) two cents per ton (but not to exceed ten cents per ton in any one year) on entries from ports in North America, Central America, West India Islands, Bahamas, Bermudas, coast of South America bordering on the Caribbean Sea, and Newfoundland, and six cents on entries from all other ports (not to exceed 30 cents in any one year). It is, however, sometimes varied from this act under treaties. See TONNAGE; OYSTERS; YACHT.

TONNAGIUM. A custom or impost upon wines and other merchandise exported or imported. Cowell.

TONNETIGHT. The quantity of a ton in a ship's freight or bulk. Cowell.

TONTINE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

TOOK AND CARRIED AWAY. Technical words necessary in an indictment for simple larceny. Bac. Abr. Indictment (G 1). See CEPIT ET ASPORTAVIT; LARCENY.

TOOLS. The implements which are commonly used by the hand of one man in some manual labor, necessary for his subsistence. Oliver v. White, 18 S. C. 241. It includes patterns used in manufacturing; Adams v. Ins. Co., 85 Ia. 6, 51 N. W. 1149; a mill-saw; 1 Fairf. 135; an instrument called a billy and jennie; Hoar v. Com'rs of Jail Delivery, 2 Vt. 402; a gin and grist mill; Cullers v. James, 66 Tex. 494, 1 S. W. 314; a threshing machine; Meyer v. Meyer, 23 Ia. 359, 92 Am. Dec. 432. As used in exemption laws, it includes any instrument necessary for the prosecution of trade, including a lathe; In re Robb, 99 Cal. 202, 33 Pac. 890, 37 Am. St. Rep. 48; sewing machines; Cronfeldt v. Arrol, 50 Minn. 327, 52 N. W. 857, 36 Am. St. Rep. 648; a piano; Amend v. Murphy, 69 Ill. 337; a violin; Goddard v. Chaffee, 2 Allen (Mass.) 395, 79 Am. Dec. 796; a cornet; Baker v. Willis, 123 Mass. 195, 25 Am. Rep. 61; a gun; Choate v. Redding, 18 Tex. 581; a net and boat; Sammis v. Smith, 1 Th. & C. (N. Y.) 444; cheese rats, presses, and knives; Fish v. Street, 27 Kan. 270; the surgical instruments of a physician; In re Robinson, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 466; and the office furniture of a lawyer; Abraham v. Davenport, 73 Ia. 111, 34 N. W. 767, 5 Am. St. Rep. 665; an iron safe used by an insurance agent; Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 33 S. W. 710; Estate of McManus, 87 Cal. 292, 25 Pac. 413, 10 L. R. A. 567, 22 Am. St. Rep. 250. It does not include the apparatus of a printing office; Danforth v. Woodward, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 423, 20 Am. Dec. 531. See TRADE; EXEMPTION; SIMPLE TOOLS.

TORRENS SYSTEM. See LAND TITLE AND TRANSFEE.

TORT (Fr. tort, from Lat. torquere, to twist, tortus, twisted, wrested aside). A private or civil wrong or injury. A wrong independent of contract. 1 Hill. Torts 1. The breach of a legal duty. Big. Torts 3. In admiralty it includes wrong suffered in consequence of the negligence or malfeasance of others, where the remedy at common law is by an action on the case; Mills v. U. S., 46 Fed. 738, 12 L. R. A. 673; Smith v. Burnett, 10 App. D. C. 469.

The right of action is very broad in France. Thus:

"Tout fait quelconque de l'homme, qui cause à autrui un dommage, oblige celui par la faute duquel il est arrivé à le réparer.

"Chacun est responsable du dommage qu'il a causé non seulement par son fait, mais encore par sa négligence ou par son imprudence." Civil Code of France, secs. 1382, 1383.

The law recognizes certain rights as belonging to every individual, such as the right to personal security, to liberty, to property, to reputation, to the services of a daughter or servant, to the companionship of a wife, etc. Any violation of one of these rights is a tort. In the like manner the law recognizes certain duties as attached to every individual, as the duty of not deceiving by false representations, of not persecuting another maliciously, of not using your own property so as to injure another, etc. The breach of any of these duties coupled with consequent damages to any one is also a tort. Underhill, Torts 4.

The performance of an act forbidden by a statute or the omission or failure to perform any act specifically imposed by law, is generally equivalent to an act done with intent to cause wrongful injury; Poll. Torts 23. No action will lie for doing that which the legislature has authorized, if it be done without negligence: id. 121.

The word torts is used to describe that branch of the law which treats of the redress of injuries which are neither crimes nor arise from the breach of contracts. All acts or omissions of which the law takes cognizance may in general be classed under the three heads of contracts, torts, and crimes. Contracts include agreements and the injuries resulting from their breach. Torts include injuries to individuals, and crimes injurious to the public or state. 1 Hill. Torts 1.

This division of the redress of injuries by civil suit into actions of tort and actions of contract is not thoroughly accurate. For often the party injured has his election whether he will proceed by tort or by contract, as in the case of a fraudulent sale or the fraudulent recommendation of a third person; 10 C. B. 83; Ives v. Carter, 24 Conn. 392. But for general usage this division has been found sufficient, and is universally adopted; Cooley, Torts 2.

As the same act may sometimes constitute the breach of a contract as well as a tort, so the same act may often constitute a tort and also a crime. For a tort may amount to, or may be likely to lead to, a breach of the peace, and thus become a matter of public concern. The torts which are usually at the same time crimes are assault, libel, and nuisance. In such cases it is the general rule of law that a public prosecution and a private action for damages can both be maintained either at the same or at different times; 1 B. & P. 191; 3 Bla. Com. 122. See Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 90, 9 South. 847.

According to Sir F. Pollock, from the point of view of the plaintiff as regards the kind of damage suffered by him, actionable wrongs may be divided into four groups: 1. Of a strictly personal kind; 2. Those which affect ownership and rights analogous to ownership; 3. Those which extend to the safety, convenience and profit of life generally; 4. Those which may, according to circumstances, result in damage to person, property or estate, or any or all of them.

Personal wrongs touching a man's body or honor or assault, false imprisonment, seduction or enticing away of members of his family. Wrongs to property are trespass to lands or goods, conversion of goods, disturbance of easements and other individual rights in property not amounting to exclusive possession. Trespass is essentially a wrong to possession. Then there are infringements of incorporeal rights which, though not the subject of trespass proper, are exclusive rights of enjoyment and have many incidents of ownership. Actions (in some cases expressly given by statute) lie for the piracy of copyright, patents and trade-marks. Wrongs to a man's estate in the larger sense above noted are defamation, deceit, so-called slander of title, and fraudulent trade competition, which are really varieties of deceit, malicious prosecution and nuisance. Finally we have the results of negligence and omission to perform special duties regarding the safety of one's neighbors or customers or of the public, which may affect persons, property, or estate generally. See Encyc. Brit. v. Tort.

An action brought by a passenger against a railroad company for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the servants of the company while he was traveling on their line is an action founded on tort; [1895] 1 Q. B. 944, where it is said: "If the cause of complaint be for an act of omission or nonfeasance which, without proof of a contract to do what has been left undone, would not give rise to a cause of action (because no duty apart from the contract to do what is complained of exists), then the action complained of is founded upon contract and not upon tort. If, on the other hand, the relation of the plaintiff and the defendants be such that a duty arises from that relationship, irrespective of contract, to take due care, and the defendants are negligent, then the action is one of tort." Quoted and followed in Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 393, 17 Sup. Ct. 120, 41 L. Ed. 485.

As to the doctrine of the merger of a tort in a crime, see MERGER.

The infringement of a right or the violation of a duty are necessary ingredients of a tort. If neither of these is present the act is not a tort, although damage may have resulted.

Hence the maxim: Ex damno sine injuria non oritur actio.

The fact alone that an act of defendant was in violation of a penal statute does not afford ground for the recovery of damages by a third person, unless such act was also the proximate cause of the injury complained of; The Santa Rita, 173 Fed. 413.

The existence of contractual relations between two parties is no bar to a right of action for a tort committed, pending the contract and connected with it; Schoppel v. Daly, 112 La. 201, 36 South. 322.

One not a party to a contract cannot maintain an action of tort in respect to a breach of duty arising out of the contract; Conklin v. Staats, 70 N. J. L. 771, 59 Atl. 144.

A wrongful or malicious intent is an essential element in some torts. As, for example, deceit, slander, and libel, malicious prosecution, and conspiracy. In general, however, it may be stated as a prominent distinction between torts and crimes, that in the former the party's intent is immaterial, while in prosecutions for the latter a criminal purpose must always be alleged and proved; Cooley, Torts 688. Thus one may be made liable in damages for what is usually called a mere accident. So insane persons and minors, under the age of discernment, are in general liable for torts. See MALICE.

A tort sounding in exemplary damages is one when there is an evasion of some right of person or property, maliciously, violently, wantonly, or with reckless disregard of social or civil obligations; Samuels v. R. Co., 35 S. C. 493, 14 S. E. 943, 28 Am. St. Rep. 883.

In general, it may be said that whenever the law creates a right, the violation of such right will be a tort, and wherever the law creates a duty, the breach of such duty coupled with consequent damage will be a tort also. This applies not only to the common law, but also to such rights and duties as may be created by statute; Cooley, Torts 650.

An actionable wrong is committed by one who maliciously interferes with a contract between two parties and induces one of them to break the contract to the injury of the other. In the absence of an adequate remedy at law, equitable relief will be granted; Dr. Miles Med. Co. v. J. D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 53 L. Ed. 502.

Where a defendant corporation induced another to break a contract to furnish certain machines, plaintiff was entitled to recover from defendant damages sustained thereby without proof that defendant was actuated by actual malice or ill will; Tubular R. & S. Co. v. Shoe Co., 159 Fed. 824, 86 C. C. A. 648.

Torts may also arise in the performance of the duties of a ministerial officer, when such duties are due to individuals and not to the state; Cooley, Torts 376; but the act of a British officer in excess of his authority (burning certain barracoons in Africa and releasing slaves therefrom), when approved by the government, becomes an "act of state" and is not a ground of action against him; 2 Ex. 167.

As to torts committed against property or in the relations of master and servant, husband and wife, parent and child, bailor and bailee, landlord and tenant, mortgagor and mortgagee, see these several titles.

In order to maintain an action of tort the relation of cause and effect between the act and the injury must be clearly shown. The damage must not be remote or indirect. See CAUSA PROXIMA, etc.

All who aid, advise, command, or countenance the commission of a tort, or approve of it after it is done, are liable, if done for their benefit, in the same manner as if done with their hands; Mack v. Kelsey, 61 Vt. 399, 17 Atl. 780; Brown v. Webster City, 115 Ia. 511, 88 N. W. 1070; and joint tortfeasors are liable jointly and severally; Weather's v. R. Co., 111 Mo. App. 315, 86 S. W. 908; but where two or more are acting lawfully together to make an arrest, one is not liable for the unlawful act of another done in furtherance of the common purpose, without his concurrence; Wert v. Potts, 76 Ia. 612, 41 N. W. 374, 14 Am. St. Rep. 252. Where there are several wrongdoers, each is liable for the entire damage; all are equal. But where the injured party has elected to sue one or more and obtains judgment, he cannot sue the others, even though his judgment remains unsatisfied; L. R. 7 C. P. 547; but it is held generally in this country that a judgment without satisfaction is not a bar; Cooley, Torts 138; 11 Harv. L. Rev. A recovery by a husband for injuries sustained to himself is not a bar to a subsequent action for injuries to his wife sustained at the same time as a result of the same negligence; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Nelson, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 156, 29 S. W. 78; but judgment is held to be a bar if satisfaction has been tendered; Berkley v. Wilson, 87 Md. 219, 39 Atl. 502; contra, Lincoln Sav. Bk. v. Ewing, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 598; People v. Beebe, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 379.

A party injured cannot generally maintain an action for the injury if caused in any degree by his own contributory negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

An action to recover damages for a tort is transitory, and can, as a general rule, be maintained wherever the wrongdoer can be found; Dennick v. R. Co., 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. Ed. 439; Stewart v. R. Co., 168 U. S. 445, 18 Sup. Ct. 105, 42 L. Ed. 537.

An action for tort causing death, in a state where the statute has provided a right of action therefor, can be maintained in any other state in which the common law obstacle to such an action has been removed, if the statute of the place where the cause of action arose is not in substance inconsistent with the statutes or public policy of the state in which the right of action is sought to be enforced; Stewart v. R. Co., 168 U. S. 445, 18 Sup. Ct. 105, 42 L. Ed. 537.

A corporation of Colorado domiciled in Texas, whose line of railroad extends into Mexico, fatally injured an employé working in its yard in Mexico. An action was brought in the circuit court of the United States on the ground of diverse citizenship. The two countries concur in holding that the act complained of is the subject of legal redress, and the question was whether recovery must be defeated because the law of Mexico controlled and could not be enforced in Texas. It was held that a common law action could not be maintained where the right of recovery given by a foreign country is so dissimilar to that given by the law of the state in which the action is brought as to be incapable of enforcement in such state; Slater v. R. Co., 194 U. S. 120, 24 Sup. Ct. 581, 48 L. Ed. 900.

The term tort in reference to admiralty jurisdiction is not confined to wrongs or injuries committed by direct force, but it includes wrongs suffered in consequence of the negligence or malfeasance of others where the remedy at common law is by an action on the case; Leathers v. Blessing, 105 U. S. 626, 26 L. Ed. 1192.

Where a tort is committed partly on land and partly on water, the question whether admiralty has jurisdiction over it is determined by the locus of the damage and not that of the origin of the tort; as where the plaintiff working in the hold of a vessel was injured by a piece of lumber negligently sent down through a chute by a person working on the pier, it was held to be a case of admiralty jurisdiction; Hermann v. Mill Co., 69 Fed. 646.

Corporations are responsible for acts not strictly within their corporate powers, but done in their corporate name and by corporation officers who are competent to exercise the corporate powers. When such acts are not founded on contract, but are arbitrary exercises of power, in the nature of torts, or are quasi-criminal, the corporation may be held to a pecuniary liability for them to the party injured; Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 6 Sup. Ct. 1055, 30 L. Ed. 176; Washington G. L. Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 544, 19 Sup. Ct. 296, 43 L. Ed. 543.

A judgment of damages for a tort is not a contract within the constitutional provision against the impairment of a contract obligation; Louisiana v. Police Jury, 111 U. S. 716, 4 Sup. Ct. 648, 28 L. Ed. 574; see Sherman v. Langham, 92 Tex. 19, 40 S. W. 140, 42 S. W. 961, 39 L. R. A. 258.

For a classification of torts, see Holland, Jurispr. 316. See Torts before Bracton, Ames, Lect. in Leg. Hist. 39.

TORTFEASOR. A wrong-doer; one who commits or is guilty of a tort. See JOINT TORTFEASOR.

TORTURE. The rack, or question, or other mode of examination by violence to the person, to extort a confession from supposed criminals, and a revelation of their associates. It is to be distinguished from punishment, which usually succeeds a conviction for offences; as it was inflicted in limine, and as part of the introductory process leading to trial and judgment. It was wholly unknown to the common and statute law of England, and was forbidden by Magna Carta, ch. 29; 4 Bla. Com. 326.

It was gradually introduced throughout the Continent in the 14th-16th centuries—connected with the revival of the Roman law. Lea, Superstition and Force 371-522.

It prevailed in Scotland, where the civil law which allowed it obtained: Dig. 48. 18. It was, however, declared contrary to the claim of right, and was expressly prohibited; 7 Anne, c. 21, § 5 (1708). Several instances of its infliction may be found in Pitcairn's Criminal Trials of Scotland.

Although torture was confessedly contrary to the common law of England, it was, nevertheless, often employed as an instrument of state to wring confessions from prominent criminals,—especially in charges of treason. It was usually inflicted by warrant from the privy council. Jardine, Torture 7, 15, 42.

Mr. Jardine proves from the records of the privy council that the practice was not infrequent during the time of Elizabeth, and continued to the close of the reign of the first two Stuarts. There is positive evidence that Guy Fawkes was directed to be tortured in regard to the Gunpowder Plot, in the warrant in the king's handwriting authorizing the commissioners, of whom Coke was one, to examine him upon the rack, "using the gentler tortures first, et sic per gradus ad ima tenditur;" 1 Jardine, Cr. Tr. Int. 17; 2 id. 106. It was not given up in England till Cromwell's time; Baldwin, Mod. Pol. Inst. 119.

An attempt to torture a person to extort a confession of crime is a criminal offence; State v. Hobbs, 2 Tyl. (Vt.) 380. See Miller v. People, 39 Ill. 457; Hector v. State, 2 Mo. 166, 22 Am. Dec. 454. As to its use in suppressing the Irish rebellion in 1798, see 27 How. St. Tr. 766; see the trial of Gen. Picton, 30 St. Tr. 226; 24 L. Q. R. 484; Brown, Narrations of State Trials.

See QUESTION; PEINE FORTE ET DURE; MUTE.

This practice has never obtained in the United States, except in a few instances in New York under the Dutch rule. It is said to have been used under French law in Quebec.

TOTAL LOSS. Under a policy insuring against "absolute total loss only," a partial loss cannot be converted into a constructive total loss, and evidence of abandonment is immaterial; Monroe v. Ins. Co., 52 Fed. 777, 3 C. C. A. 280, 5 U. S. App. 179. See Loss.

TOTIDEM VERBIS. In so many words.

TOTIES QUOTIES (Lat.). As often as the thing shall happen.

TOTTED. A good debt to the crown, i. e. a debt paid to the sheriff, to be by him paid over to the king. Cowell. See FOREIGN AP-POSER.

TOUCH AND STAY. Words frequently introduced in policies of insurance, giving the party insured the right to stop and stay at certain designated points in the course of the voyage. A vessel which has the power to touch and stay at a place in the course of the voyage must confine herself strictly to the terms of the liberty so given; for any attempt to trade at such a port during such a stay, as, by shipping or landing goods, will amount to a species of deviation which will discharge the underwriters, unless the ship have also liberty to trade as well as to touch and stay at such a place; 1 Marsh. Ins. 275.

TOUJOURS ET UNCORE PRIST (L. Fr.). Always and still ready. This is the name of a plea of tender: as, where a man is indebted to another, and he tenders the amount due, and afterwards the creditor brings a suit, the defendant may plead the tender, and add that he has always been and is still ready to pay what he owes, which may be done by the formula toujours et uncore prist. He must then pay the money into court; and if the issue be found for him the defendant will be exonerated from costs, and the plaintiff made liable for them; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2923.

See TOUT TEMPS PRIST; TENDER; UNCORE PRIST.

TOUR D'ECHELLE. In French Law. A right which the owner of an estate has of placing ladders on his neighbor's property to facilitate the reparation of a party-wall or of buildings which are supported by that wall. It is a species of servitude. Lois des Bât. part 1, c. 3, sect. 2, art. 9, § 1.

The space of ground left unoccupied around a building for the purpose of enabling the owner to repair it with convenience: this is not a servitude, but an actual corporeal property.

TOURN. See SHERIFF'S TOURN.

TOUT TEMPS PRIST (L. Fr. always ready). A plea by which the defendant signifies that he has always been ready to perform what is required of him. The object of the plea is to save costs: as, for example, where there has been a tender and refusal. 3 Bla. Com. 303. So, in a writ of dower, where the plea is detinue of charters, the defendant might reply, always ready; Rast. Entr. 229 b. See TOUJOURS ET UNCORE PRIST.

TOW-BOATS. According to the weight of authority, the owners of steamboats engaged in the business of towing are not common carriers; Lawson, Carriers 3. So held in Wells v. Nav. Co., 2 N. Y. 204; Leonard v. Hendrickson, 18 Pa. 40, 55 Am. Dec. 587; Varble v. Bigley, 14 Bush (Ky.) 698, 29 Am. Rep. 435; The Fannie Tuthill, 12 Fed. 446; The Margaret, 94 U. S. 494, 24 L. Ed. 146; contra, Walston v. Myers, 50 N. C. 174; Adams v. Tow-Boat Co., 11 La. 46.

TOWAGE. The act of towing or drawing ships and vessels, usually by means of a small steamer called a tug.

Towage service is confined to vessels who have received no injury or damage; McConnachie v. Kerr, 9 Fed. 53.

Where towage is rendered in the rescue or relief of a vessel from imminent peril, it becomes salvage service, entitled to be compensated as such; 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 223.

Where a service was salvage, one claiming it to have been a towage service must plead and prove a contract; The Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604.

A tug, sometimes called towing or tow-boat, while not held to the responsibility of a common carrier, is bound to exercise reasonable care and skill in everything pertaining to its employment; The James Jackson, 9 Fed. 614; The E. V. MacCaulley, 84 Fed. 500; The City of New York, 54 Fed. 181, 4 C. C. A. 268, 14 U. S. App. 39; Vessel Owners T. Co. v. Wilson, 63 Fed. 626, 11 C. C. A. 366, 24 U. S. App. 49; The Blue Bell, 189 Fed. 824; taking into consideration the fact that it contracts as an expert and is bound to know the channel, its usual currents and dangers, and to avoid obstructions which ought to be known to men experienced in its navigation; The El Rio, 162 Fed. 567.

A tug is the dominant mind, and the tow must follow her directions; The Fort George, 183 Fed. 731, 106 C. C. A. 169.

Proof of a loss suffered by tow does not raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the tug; The Webb, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 406, 20 L. Ed. 774; The A. R. Robinson, 57 Fed. 667.

Where two vessels, each in charge of a tug, came in collision from the faulty navigation of the tugs whose masters gave directions to the vessels which were obeyed, the tugs alone were held liable; The Doris Eckhoff, 50 Fed. 134, 1 C. C. A. 494, 1 U. S. App. 129. A steamship in charge of a tug is not liable in case of accident; International M. M. Co. v. Gaffney, 143 Fed. 305, 74 C. C. A. 443. Tugs cannot abandon their tows for slight causes; The Charles Runyon, 56 Fed. 312, 5 C. C. A. 514, 14 U. S. App. 410.

The duty of a tug to tow is a continuous one from the time the service commences until it is completed, and where it becomes necessary to anchor the tow, the tug's obligation of reasonable care continues at least until it is safely anchored; The Printer, 164 Fed. 314, 90 C. C. A. 246. The vessel owner can bind the cargo owner by a contract with a tug; The Occanica, 170 Fed. 893, 96 C. C. A. 69. See TUG.

The burden of proving that a contract of towage was at the owner's risk, is on the tug; The American Eagle, 54 Fed. 1010; The Snap, 24 Fed. 292.

The use of long tow lines in New York Harbor, while not to be commended, does not render the tug liable for damages caused by her tow by collision with another vessel through the fault of the latter to which the length of the tow did not contribute; The Domingo De Larrinaga, 172 Fed. 264.

An admiralty lien for towage is inferior to a statutory lien for repairs, the towage having been performed more than six months before, without effort to collect until after the repairs; The Sleepy Hollow, 114 Fed. 367.

TOWARD. The word has been held to mean not simply "to" but to include "about." Hudson v. State, 6 Tex. App. 565, 32 Am. Rep. 593. See TO.

TOWN. A term of somewhat varying signification, but denoting a division of a country next smaller in extent than a county.

A town is a municipal corporation comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries and formed for the purpose of exercising such powers and discharging such duties of local government and administration of public affairs as have been or may be conferred or imposed upon it by law. Dunn v. Whitestown, 185 Fed. 585.

It is generic, and includes cities; State v. Craig, 132 Ind. 54, 31 N. E. 352, 16 L. R. A. 688, 32 Am. St. Rep. 237; Klauber v. Higgins, 117 Cal. 451, 49 Pac. 466.

In Pennsylvania and some other of the Middle states, it denotes a village or city, but it is not, strictly, a legal term. In the New England states, it is to be considered for many purposes as the unit of civil organization,—the counties being composed of a number of towns. Towns are regarded as corporations or quasi-corporations; Fourth School Dist. in Rumford v. Wood, 13 Mass. 193. In New York and Wisconsin, towns are subdivisions of counties; and the same is true of the townships of most of the Western states. In Ohio, Michigan, and Iowa, they are called townships. In Illinois it is synonymous with village; Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 7 Sup. Ct. 358, 30 L. Ed. 523. Town and borough, though legally distinct, are often used interchangeably; Bloomsburg Case, 33 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 137.

"Towns were of themselves corporations having perpetual succession, consisting of all persons inhabiting within certain territorial limits." Shaw, C. J., Overseers of Poor v. Sears, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 130. But see an article by A. M. Eaton in 14 Harv. L. Rev. and 15 id., and 1902 Report Am. Bar Assoc. 336. In England, the term town or vill compre hends under it the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. 1 Bla. Com. 114.

See Garland, New Engl. Town Law.

TOWN CAUSE. In English Practice. A cause tried at the sittings for London and Middlesex. 3 Steph. Com. 556.

TOWN-CLERK. A principal officer who keeps the records, issues calls for town meetings, and performs generally the duties of a secretary to the political organization.

TOWN-MEETING. A legal assembly of the qualified voters of the town held at stated intervals or on call.

TOWN-PLAT. The acknowledgment and recording of a town-plat vests the legal title to the ground embraced in the streets and alleys in the corporation of the town; therefore it is held that the proprietor who has thus dedicated the streets and alleys to the public cannot maintain trespass for an injury to the soil or freehold. The corporation alone can seek redress for such injury; Board of Trustees v. Haven, 11 Ill. 554. This is not so, however, with a highway; the original owner of the fee must bring his action for an injury to the soil; Hunter v. Middleton, 13 Ill. 54. See HIGHWAY. If the streets or alleys of a town are dedicated by a different mode from that pointed out by the statute, the fee remains in the proprietor, burdened with the public easement; Manly v. Gibson, 13 Ill. 312. See DEDICATION.

TOWN SITES. The president is authorized (Act of March 3, 1863) to reserve from the public lands, surveyed or unsurveyed, town sites on the shores of harbors, at the junction of rivers, important portages, or any natural or prospective centers of population; they are to be plotted and appraised and sold at public sale, and thereafter at private sale, but not below the appraisal. The title is made subject to mineral rights when possessed under local authority (March 3, 1865) and shall not include any mine of gold, silver, copper or cinnabar (Act of March 2, 1867).

Town site entries may be made by incorporated towns and cities in the mineral lands, but not to include the above minerals or lead, and the title is subject to possessed veins (Act of March 3, 1891). There are numerous provisions on the subject and special acts as to Oklahoma and Alaska.

TOWNSHIP. The public lands of the United States are surveyed first into tracts called townships, being in extent six miles square. The subdivisions of a township are called sections, each a mile square and containing six hundred and forty acres; these are subdivided into quarter-sections, and from that into lots of forty acres each. This plan of subdividing the public lands was adopted by act of congress of May 18, 1796.

In Pennsylvania, a subdivision of a county, having minor governmental powers. They do not, under existing laws possess municipal powers; Pennsylvania R. R. v. Pass. Ry., 167 Pa. 62, 31 Atl. 468, 27 L. R. A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659. By recent acts in that state first class townships have been created, with more complete organization.

In the old English period, the households of a township had the common and undivided use of the waste land, but this use could be limited and apportioned by the community. This waste land stretched usually over a great part of the territory assigned to the township, and the reclaiming of this land for purposes of exclusive cultivation and enjoyment was subjected to restrictive rules; the scarce and highly valued meadows were assigned under strict rules of proportionate division and redivision; the arable, which formed the most important, and the most conspicuous portion of the whole, lay in scattered strips in the various fields and spots of the village, so that every holding presented a bundle of these strips equal to other bundles of the same denomination; everybody had to conform to the same rules and methods in regard to the rotation and cultivation of crops, and when these had been gathered the strips relapsed into the state of an open field in common use. The homesteads and closes around them were kept under separate management, but had been allotted by the community and could in some cases be subjected to reallocation. If this is a correct general description of the main system in operation in the course of the thousand years from 500 till 1500 A. D., and extending many of its incidents to even later times, one can scarcely escape the conclusion that whatever inroads the individual and the state may have made upon it, and whatever bias legal theory may have shown towards more definite and individualistic conceptions, the average English householder of the Middle Ages lived under conditions in which his power of free disposal and free management was hemmed in on all sides by customs and rules converging towards the conceptions of a community of interests and rights between all the household shares of a village. Vinogradoff, Growth of the Manor 165.

The activity of the township during the 13th century, as a unit of police organization, was developed later by legislation, ending in 1235, when the constabulary and militia took the form they were to keep during the rest of the Middle Ages. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 551.

See VILL.

TOXICOLOGY. The science of poisons (q. v.).

TRACING. A tracing is a mechanical copy or fac simile of an original, produced by following its lines, with a pen or pencil, through a transparent medium, called tracing paper. Chapman v. Ferry, 18 Fed. 540.

TRACT. A lot, piece, or parcel of land, of greater or less size, the term not importing in itself any precise dimensions. Edwards v. Derrickson, 28 N. J. L. 45.

TRADAS IN BALLIUM. You deliver to bail. The name of a writ which might be issued in behalf of a party who upon the writ de odio et atia had been found to have been maliciously accused of a crime. 1 Reeve, Eng. L. 252.

TRADE. Any sort of dealings by way of sale or exchange; commerce, traffic. May v. Sloan, 101 U. S. 231, 25 L. Ed. 797; In re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89, 27 Pac. 179. The dealings in a particular business: as, the Indian trade; the business of a particular mechanic; hence boys are said to be put apprentices to learn a trade: as, the trade of a carpenter, shoemaker, and the like. Bac. Abr. Master and Servant (D 1). Trade differs from art.

In exemption laws it is usually confined to the occupation of a mechanic; Enscoe v. Dunn, 44 Conn. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 430; but in its broader sense it is generally construed as equivalent to any occupation, employment, handicraft, or business; May v. Sloan, 101 U. S. 231, 25 L. Ed. 797; In re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89, 27 Pac. 179. One cannot by multiplying his pursuits claim cumulatively several exemptions, but the fact that he carries on two or more pursuits concurrently does not deprive him of all exemptions, but the article exempted must belong to his principal business; Jenkins v. McNall, 27 Kan. 532, 41 Am. Rep. 422.

The term is also construed in cases arising under the "anti-trust" act forbidding trusts and combinations in restraint of trade, and it is held in that connection to have the broader sense; In re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89, 27 Pac. 179, where the definition of the word is much discussed.

See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

The word is held to apply to the business of insurance; id.; Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 33 S. W. 710; of a telegraph company; 3 Exch. Div. 108; transportation of merchandise for hire; The Eliza, 2 Gall. 4, Fed. Cas. No. 4,346; 7 Cra. 113; a blacksmith, who also builds wagons; Stewart v. Welton, 32 Mich. 59; a harness-maker, painter, and carriage-builder; Eager v. Taylor, 9 Allen (Mass.) 156; a dealer in ice who was also a farmer; Pierce v. Gray, 7 Gray (Mass.) 67; a tinner who owned and partly supported himself by playing a cornet; Baker v. Willis, 123 Mass. 194, 25 Am. Rep. 61; a saddle and harness-maker; Nichols v. Porter, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 302, 26 S. W. 859; keeping a home for working girls even though it appeared that no profits were made; 25 Ch. Div. 206; but maintaining a private lunatic asylum is held not a trade; 2 Ad. & El. 161.

Trade and commerce, as used in the Sherman anti-trust act, are synonymous. Their use in the first section thereof does not enlarge the statute beyond the meaning of the common law expression "contracts in restraint of trade," as they are analogous to "monopolize," which is the basis and limitation of the statute; U. S. v. Patterson, 55 Fed. 605.

TRADE COMMISSION, FEDERAL. An act of congress was passed September 26, 1914, creating a Federal Trade Commission, composed of five commissioners appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, three only to be members of the same political party. The first commissioners remain in office for terms of three, four, five, six and seven years respectively, and their successors are appointed for seven years. They shall not engage in any other occupation. The salary is $10,000 a year. Upon the organization of the commission, the Bureau of Corporations and the offices of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Corporations shall cease to exist, and its work shall be continued by the commission. Its principal office shall be in Washington, but it may meet and exercise its powers in other places.

The act provides: "That unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful," and the commission is "directed to prevent persons, partnerships or corporations, except banks, and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce."

If the commission "shall have reason to believe that any such person, etc., has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce and if it shall appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public," it shall serve upon such person, etc., a complaint stating the charges, with notice of the hearing at least thirty days after service. Such person, etc., shall be permitted to appear and show cause why an order should not be entered requiring such person, etc., to cease from a violation of the law as charged. Any person, etc., may be allowed by the commission to intervene by counsel or in person. Testimony may be taken and is to be filed with the commission. If the commission is of opinion that the method of competition is prohibited by the act, it shall make a report in writing, with findings of fact, and shall issue and serve an order requiring such person, etc., to cease from such method of competition.

Until a transcript of the record of the hearings has been filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals, the commission may modify or set aside any report or order.

If such person, etc., fails or neglects to obey such order, the commission may apply to the Circuit Court of Appeals in any circuit where the method of competition was used or where such person, etc., resides or carries on its business, to enforce such order, and file a transcript of the entire proceedings; whereupon the court, having caused notice to be served upon such person, etc., shall "have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein" and the power to enter upon the pleadings, etc., a decree affirming, modifying or setting aside the order of the commission. "Findings of fact of the commission, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive."

The court may on application of the person, etc., order additional evidence to be taken before the commission and to be adduced upon the hearing. The commission may modify its findings of facts or make new findings by reason of the additional evidence, which, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive, and shall file its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. The decree of the court shall be final, subject only to review by the Supreme Court on certiorari under Jud. Code, § 240.

Any party against whom an order is made by the commission may obtain a review of the order in the Circuit Court of Appeals upon written petition served upon the commission, whereupon the commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record, and the court shall then have the same jurisdiction to affirm, modify or set aside the order as in the case of an application by the commission for the enforcement of its order, and the findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall in like manner be conclusive.

The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive. The proceedings therein shall have precedence over other cases pending, and "shall be in every way expedited." No order of the commission or judgment of the court shall relieve any person, etc., "from any liability under the anti-trust acts."

By section 6 the commission has power (except as to banks, and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce): a. To gather and compile information concerning, and investigate, the organization, business management, etc., of any corporation, etc., engaged in commerce (but not those excepted as above), and its relation to other corporations, individuals, etc.; b. To require by general or special orders such corporations, or any class of them, to file with the commission under its forms, annual or special, or both, reports, or answers in writing to specified questions of the commission as to its organization, business, etc., and its relation to other corporations, etc. These are to be made under oath or as the commission may prescribe. c. Whenever a final decree has been entered against any defendant corporation in any suit brought by the United States under the anti-trust acts, to make investigation, upon its own initiative, of the manner in which the decree has been or is being carried out, and upon the application of the Attorney General, it shall be its duty to make such investigation; d. Upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress to report upon the alleged violation of the anti-trust acts by any corporation; e. Upon the application of the Attorney General to investigate and make recommendations for the readjustment of the business of any corporation alleged to be violating the anti-trust acts; f. To make public from time to time such portions of the information obtained by it hereunder, except trade secrets and names of customers, as it shall deem expedient; and to make annual and special reports to Congress and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation; and to provide for the publication of its reports and decisions, etc.; g. From time to time to classify corporations and to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act; h. To investigate trade conditions and with foreign countries; and report to Congress with recommendations.

Section 7. In any suit in equity brought by the Attorney General, as provided in the anti-trust acts, the court may, upon the conclusion of the testimony, if of the opinion that the complainant is entitled to relief, refer the same to the commission, as a master in chancery, to ascertain and report an appropriate form of decree therein.

The act contains drastic provisions for eliciting evidence, through the District Court, and an immunity clause to witnesses, and other details as to which reference must be made thereto. See Act of Oct. 15, 1914 (Clayton Act), discussed by Mr. Taft in Amer. Bar Assoc. Rep. (1914).

TRADE-MARK. A symbol, emblem, or mark, which a tradesman puts upon or attaches in some way to the goods he manufactures or has caused to be manufactured, so that they may be identified and known in the market. Brown, Trade-Marks, 2d ed. § 87.

"A particular mark or symbol used by a person for the purpose of indicating that the article to which it is affixed is sold or manufactured by him or his authority, or that he carries on business at a particular place." 35 L. J. Ch. 61.

A sign or symbol primarily confined exclusively to the indication of the origin or ownership of the goods to which it may be attached, and it may be composed of any name, device, line, figure, mark, word, letter, number, or combination or arrangement of any or all of these which would serve the sole purpose of a trade-mark, and which no other person can adopt or use with equal truth." Avery v. Meikle, 81 Ky. 73.

Broadly defined, a trade-mark is a mark by which the wares of the owner are known in trade. Shaw Stocking Co. v. Mack, 12 Fed. 707.

The office of a trade-mark is to point out distinctly the origin or ownership of the article to which it is affixed; or, in other words, to give notice who was the producer; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 138 U. S. 537, 11 Sup. Ct. 396, 34 L. Ed. 997; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 11 Sup. Ct. 625, 35 L. Ed. 247.

It may consist of a name, a device, or a peculiar arrangement of words, lines, or figures, or any peculiar mark or symbol not theretofore in use, adopted and used by a manufacturer, or a merchant for whom goods may be manufactured, to designate them as those which he has manufactured or sells. It may be put either upon the article itself or its case, covering, or wrapper, and is assignable with the business; Metcalf v. Brand, 86 Ky. 331, 5 S. W. 773, 9 Am. St. Rep. 282.

It may be in any form of letters, words, vignettes, or ornamental design. Newly-coined words may form a trade-mark; Brown, Trade-Marks 151.

The exclusive right to a trade-mark or device rests not on invention, but on such use as makes it point out the origin of the claimant's goods and must be early enough for that, but absolute priority of invention is not required; Tetlow v. Tappan, 85 Fed. 774.

Property in a trade-mark is acquired by the original application to some species of merchandise manufactured of a symbol or device not in actual use, designating articles of the same kind or class; Delaware & H. C. Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 322, 20 L. Ed. 581.

The use by different persons of a particular manufactured article for a short time and in a distant section of the country, of a label containing a particular word printed for the use of any purchaser, will not prevent the acquisition of the word as a trade name by one who works up under it a trade in such article in a particular section of the country; Cohen v. Nagle, 190 Mass. 4, 76 N. E. 276, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 964, 5 Ann. Cas. 553.

A number of workmen, engaged in a branch of industry, may acquire a trade-mark; Schmalz v. Wooley, 57 N. J. Eq. 303, 41 Atl. 939, 43 L. R. A. 86, 73 Am. St. Rep. 637.

"A trade-mark or trade-name is of no virtue in and of itself. It becomes of value only through use, and because by use it is an assurance to purchasers of the excellence of the article to which it is affixed as manufactured by the one whose name appears as the producer. . . . Disassociated from such manufacture, it is not an assurance of genuineness. When used by another, its use works a fraud upon the purchaser. A trade-mark is analogous to the good will of the business. . . . The good will is inseparable from the business itself. So, likewise, is a trade-mark;" Bulte v. Igleheart Bros., 137 Fed. 498, 70 C. C. A. 76. It cannot be assigned, or licensed, except as incidental to the transfer of a business or property in connection with which it has been used; Macmahan Pharmacal Co. v. Mfg. Co., 113 Fed. 468, 51 C. C. A. 302.

It can be acquired only in connection with an established business, and retained only in connection therewith; Filkins v. Blackman, 13 Blatch. 440, Fed. Cas. No. 4,786. There is no such thing as an abstract trade-mark apart from some business in which it is used; Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 25 N. E. 46, 8 L. R. A. 640; Witthaus v. Mattfeldt & Co., 44 Md. 303, 22 Am. Rep. 44; Morgan v. Rogers, 19 Fed. 596, per Colt, J. A trade-mark will pass with the transfer of the business in which it was used; Richmond Nervine Co. v. Richmond, 159 U. S. 293, 16 Sup. Ct. 30, 40 L. Ed. 155; Noera v. Mfg. Co., 158 Mass. 110, 32 N. E. 1037; whether specifically mentioned or not; Le Page Co. v. Cement Co., 51 Fed. 941, 2 C. C. A. 555, 17 L. R. A. 354; Allegretti v. Chocolate Cream Co., 177 Ill. 129, 52 N. E. 487; Morgan v. Rogers, 19 Fed. 596. The transfer of a business (in which the owner's name is used as a trade-mark) carries with it the use of the name; Horton Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 18 Fed. 816; a transfer of all the property of a business carries the right to use all the trade-marks used in it; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 52 N. W. 595, 16 L. R. A. 453, 33 Am. St. Rep. 72. Where a trade-mark indicates the product of a particular factory, it passes with the ownership of the factory, though the business formerly carried on there has gone elsewhere; 3 Myl. & C. 1; Carmichel v. Latimer, 11 R. I. 395, 23 Am. Rep. 481; Symonds v. Jones, 82 Me. 302, 19 Atl. 820, 8 L. R. A. 570, 17 Am. St. Rep. 485. In the sale of a going concern, an assignment of trade-marks, patents, trade rights, good will and all assets carries a trade-name; Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co. v. Safe Co., 208 U. S. 554, 28 Sup. Ct. 350, 52 L. Ed. 616.

A trade-mark may be part of the good will of a firm, and one who has come into an existing firm and after some years goes out, leaving it to carry on the business under the same title, does not take with him the right to use the trade-marks of the firm; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 9 Sup. Ct. 143, 32 L. Ed. 526.

A trade-mark adapted to a brand of cigars is not assignable separate from the good will of the business; Falk v. Trading Co., 180 N. Y. 445, 73 N. E. 239, 105 Am. St. Rep. 778, 2 Ann. Cas. 216, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704, with note on the assignability of trade-marks.

By the trade-mark act of April 20, 1905, a trade-mark is assignable, in connection with the good-will of the business in which it is used, by an instrument in writing, acknowledged according to the laws of the country or state in which it is executed; it is void, as against a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, unless recorded within three months from its date.

The ownership of trade-marks is considered as a right of property; Upton, Trade-Marks 10. It is on this ground that equity protects by injunction against their infringement. It is, however, not property within the meaning of the constitution requiring all property to be taxed; Com. v. Warehouse

Co., 132 Ky. 521, 116 S. W. 766, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30, 136 Am. St. Rep. 186, 18 Ann. Cas. 1156, where it is said that the only other case on this subject is People v. Kelsey, 185 N. Y. 546, 77 N. E. 1195, where it was held that the value of a trade-mark might be taken into consideration in determining the value of the franchises of a foreign corporation.

Trade names should be distinguished from trade-marks. A trade-mark owes its existence to the fact that it is affixed to a commodity; a trade name is more properly allied to the good will of a business; Browne, Tr. Marks § 91.

The trade-name of a firm, a corporate name, and the name of a publication, though not strictly trade-marks, are nevertheless a species of property of the same nature as trade-marks, and will be protected in like manner; 33 Am. Rep. 335, note; 9 Am. Rep. 331, note. See NAME.

So a tradesman may adopt a fictitious name, and sell his goods under it as a trade-mark, and the property right he thus acquires in the fanciful name will be protected; Gouraud v. Trust, 6 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 133.

Equity will protect a corporation in the exclusive possession of its name. State authorities will ordinarily not grant a charter to a new corporation under the name of an existing corporation. But equity will not restrain a corporation of the state of the forum from the use of its corporate name at the suit of a foreign corporation; Thomp. Corp. §§ 296, 7903; Hazleton Boiler Co. v. Boiler Co., 142 Ill. 494, 30 N. E. 339. See International T. Co. v. Trust Co., 153 Mass. 271, 26 N. E. 693, 10 L. R. A. 758.

In a bill by the "Sun Life Assurance Company," long established in London, to enjoin the "Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada" from doing business under that name in London, it was held that the defendant's use of its full name was lawful, but that the use of the "Sun Life" alone could be enjoined; [1894] 1 Ch. 537.

A corporation may not so use an individual's name as to imitate a prior corporate name of a company engaged in the same business, if the public is thereby deceived; Martin Co. v. Wilckes Co., 75 N. J. Eq. 39, 71 Atl. 409. A corporation cannot select a name which is the same as or similar to that of another corporation created under the laws of the same sovereignty; 44 Ch. Div. 678. It is held that priority of incorporation determines the right to a corporate name; German H. & O. C. H. Ass'n v. Coach Horse Ass'n, 46 Ill. App. 281.

The Continental Insurance Company cannot obtain an injunction against another insurance company against using "Continental" in its corporate name, where there is no attempt to deceive the public; Continental Ins. Co. v. Fire Ass'n, 101 Fed. 255, 41 C. C. A. 326. The rules governing the right to trade-marks and trade-names should not be applied with strictness to actions for infringements upon a right to an exclusive name between societies formed for patriotic and unselfish ends; Colonial Dames of America v. Colonial Dames of New York, 29 Misc. 10, 60 N. Y. Supp. 302; and in New York, on the particular facts of the case, an injunction was refused against the New York Hygeia Ice Company at the suit of Hygeia Water Ice Company; Hygeia Water Ice Co. v. Ice Co., 140 N. Y. 94, 35 N. E. 417.

Equity will interfere with the use of names; 1. Where the effort is to get an unfair and fraudulent share of another's business; 2. Where the effect of defendant's action, irrespective of his intent, is to produce confusion in the public mind and loss to the plaintiff; Suburban Press v. Pub. Co., 227 Pa. 148, 75 Atl. 1037, where "Philadelphia Suburban Life" was enjoined at the suit of the owner of "Suburban Life," to which it bore a striking resemblance in style, size, etc.

The Philadelphia Trust, Safe Deposit & Insurance Company, by usage commonly spoken of as the Philadelphia Trust Company, and doing a large business in Philadelphia, Delaware and other states, obtained an injunction against the Philadelphia Trust Company in the circuit court, district of Delaware, prohibiting the use of that name; Philadelphia T., S. D. & I. Co. v. Trust Co., 123 Fed. 534; and so did "The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks" against "The Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks," enjoining the use of that name and of similar society cards, etc.; B. & P. O. E. v. Elks, 60 Misc. Rep. 223, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1067. But "American Wine Company" cannot be appropriated as a trade-name; and the imitation is not unfair trade unless used fraudulently to deceive the public; American Wine Co. v. Kohlman, 158 Fed. 830. And it has been held that a municipal corporation has not a right to the exclusive use of its name, at least that an injunction will not be granted to restrain a railroad company from giving the same name to a new station; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Seminary, 81 Miss. 237, 32 South. 953.

The names of hotels and stores are protected; L. R. 13 Ch. D. 512; Howard v. Henriques, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 725; as, the "Mechanic's Store," against "Mechanical Store"; Weinstock L. & Co. v. Marks, 109 Cal. 529, 42 Pac. 142, 30 L. R. A. 182, 50 Am. St. Rep. 57.

In the following the titles of newspapers and periodicals have been protected (the name in italics being held to infringe): Hagerstown Almanac—Hagerstown Town and Country Almanac; Robertson v. Berry, 50 Md. 591, 33 Am. Rep. 328; The Real John Bull—The Old Real John Bull; Cox, Man. 33; Minnie—Minnie Dale and Minnie Dear

Minnie; 2 K. & J. 123; 8 De G. M. & G. 1; Payson, Dunton & Scribner's National System of Penmanship—Independent National System of Penmanship; Potter v. McPherson, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 559; Our Young Folks—Our Young Folks' Illustrated Paper; Osgood v. Allen, Fed. Cas. No. 10,603; Birthday Scripture Textbook—The Children's Birthday Textbook; L. R. 14 Eq. 431; Chatterbox—Chatterbook; Estes v. Worthington, 31 Fed. 154; Estes v. Leslie, 27 Fed. 22; The United States Investor—The Investor; Investor Pub. Co. v. Supp. 643; Bell's Life in London and Sporting Chronicle—Penny Bell's Life and Sporting News; 1 Giff. 98; The National Police Gazette—The United States Police Gazette; Matsell v. Flanagan, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 459; The Times—Times; 25 Sol. Jour. 742.

Protection has been refused in the following cases (the name in italics being held not to infringe): Old Sleuth Library—New York Detective Library; Munro v. Tousey, 129 N. Y. 38, 29 N. E. 9, 14 L. R. A. 245; Id., 129 N. Y. 619, 29 N. E. 10, reversing Munroe v. Tousey, 59 Hun, 622, 13 N. Y. Supp. 79; Electric World—Electric Age; W. J. Johnston Co. v. Pub. Co., 60 Hun 578, 14 N. Y. Supp. 803; Good Things of Life—The Spice of Life; Stokes v. Allen, 56 Hun 526, 9 N. Y. Supp. 846; The New North West—The Northwest News; Duniway Pub. Co. v. Pub. Co., 11 Ore. 322, 8 Pac. 283; Republican New Era—New Era; Bell v. Locke, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 75, 34 Am. Dec. 371; Splendid Misery or East End and West End, by C. H. Hazlewood—Splendid Misery, by the author of Lady Audley's Secret, Vixen, etc., published as a serial in periodicals; 18 Ch. D. 76; Mail—Morning Mail; 54 L. J. Ch. 1059; Morning Post—Evening Post; 37 Ch. D. 449; The Canadian Bookseller—The Canada Bookseller and Stationer; 27 Ont. 325; Punch—Punch and Judy; 39 L. J. Ch. 57; The American Grocer—The Grocer; American Grocer Pub. Ass'n v. Pub. Co., 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 402; Monthly Magazine of Fiction—Cassell's Magazine of Fiction and Popular Literature; 29 T. L. R. 272.

Where the title of a book shows that it is adopted for unfair competition with another work, though the conflicting titles are not identical, it will be restrained; Harper v. Holman, 84 Fed. 224.

The names of springs have been protected, even against those who are rightfully selling the genuine product under the true name; Congress & Spring Co. v. Spring Co., 45 N. Y. 291, 6 Am. Rep. 82; Parkland Hills B. L. W. Co. v. Hawkins & Co., 95 Ky. 502, 26 S. W. 389, 44 Am. St. Rep. 254; City of Carlsbad v. Schultz, 78 Fed. 469.

Geographical names cannot, ordinarily, be monopolized as trade-marks; Weyman v. Soderberg, 108 Fed. 63; Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. Soap Co., 122 Fed. 796, 59 C. C. A. 54; but a valid trade-mark may consist of the name of a place and a maker; Lynn Shoe Co. v. Shoe Co., 100 Me. 461, 62 Atl. 499, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960; and they may be used arbitrarily; Sanders v. Utt, 16 Mo. App. 322; Java, in connection with face powder, has been held entitled to protection; Wertheimer v. Importing Co., 185 Fed. 850; and a geographical name will be protected as against one using it so as to constitute a fraud; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Watch Case Co., 179 U. S. 665, 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 45 L. Ed. 365; the name of a French spring (Vichy) will be protected against any one whose waters were not drawn from that region; French Republic v. Spring Co., 191 U. S. 427, 24 Sup. Ct. 145, 48 L. Ed. 247; Angostura, for bitters, is held a valid trade-mark; A. Bauer & Co. v. Siegert, 120 Fed. 81, 56 C. C. A. 487.

The name of a person or town may become so associated with a particular product that the mere attaching it to a similar product would have all the effect of a falsehood; this will be enjoined except when accompanied by sufficient explanation to prevent confusion; Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co. v. Safe Co., 208 U. S. 554, 28 Sup. Ct. 350, 52 L. Ed. 616.

The plaintiff had for years manufactured and sold "Yorkshire Relish," made under a secret recipe, and the term had come to mean that particular manufacture. The defendant had made a sauce resembling the "Yorkshire Relish" and sold it as "Yorkshire Sauce." It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction prohibiting defendant from using "Yorkshire Sauce" in connection with its sauce unless clearly distinguished from the respondent's sauce; [1897] App. Cas. 710, in H. of L.

A manufacturer will be protected in the use of a geographical name as against one who does not carry on business in the district; Pike Mfg. Co. v. Stone Co., 35 Fed. 896; Metcalfe v. Brand, 86 Ky. 331, 5 S. W. 773, 9 Am. St. Rep. 282; Gebbie v. Stitt, 82 Hun, 93, 31 N. Y. Supp. 102; so of "Chicago Waists" as against one who makes similar waists in a different state; Gage-Downs Co. v. Corset Co., 83 Fed. 213.

A number of competing millers in Minneapolis can maintain a joint bill on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated, to enjoin a grocer from selling flour made in Wisconsin, and marked with his own name and the word "Best Minnesota Patent, Minneapolis, Minn."; Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. v. Eagle, 86 Fed. 608, 30 C. C. A. 386, 41 L. R. A. 162.

Where a word which is descriptive, or is the place where an article is manufactured, has acquired a secondary signification in connection with its use, protection from imposition and fraud will be afforded by the courts, although the word may not be suitable for registration as a trade-mark under the act of Congress; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Watch Case Co., 179 U. S. 665, 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 45 L. Ed. 365; if the name be used fraudulently to mislead buyers, the owner may assert an exclusive right to such name against every one not doing business within the same geographical limits, and even against them, if the name be used fraudulently to mislead buyers as to the actual origin of the article; French Republic v. Spring Co., 191 U. S. 427, 24 Sup. Ct. 145, 48 L. Ed. 247.

Where a geographic or family name (Hunyadi) becomes the name for a natural water coming from a more or less extensive district, all are free to imitate it, if there is no attempt to deceive the public; Saxlehner v. Wagner, 216 U. S. 375, 30 Sup. Ct. 298, 54 L. Ed. 525.

Generic names, or names merely descriptive of an article, are not valid trade-marks; Browne, Trade-Marks § 34. Thus: Clubhouse Gin; Corwin v. Daly, 7 Bos. (N. Y.) 222; Desiccated Codfish; Town v. Stetson, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 53; Liebig's Extract of Meat; Bining v. Wattles, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 206; New York Cough Remedy; Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 139; Rock and Rye; Van Bell v. Prescott, 82 N. Y. 630.

Names merely descriptive, which have acquired by long use a secondary distinctive meaning and have come to mean the goods of a particular trader, and where the defendant is not selling the genuine goods (as where the composition is a secret), the defendant cannot rely on the defence that the plaintiff has not a valid trade-mark. Thus "Camel-Hair Belting" has acquired a secondary meaning; [1896] App. Cas. 199; but if the primary meaning is simple and well known, it is difficult to establish a secondary meaning; thus, "Naphtha Soap;" [1904] 21 R. P. C. 373.

Nor can the name of the party be a valid trade-mark, as others may, under some circumstances, use the same name; Borden I. Co. v. Milk Co., 201 Fed. 510, 121 C. C. A. 200; see infra.

No property can be acquired in words, marks, or devices which denote the mere nature, kind, and quality of articles; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 51, 25 L. Ed. 993; L. R. 17 Eq. 29. See Colgan v. Danheiser, 35 Fed. 150; Goodyear I. R. G. Mfg. Co. v. Rubber Co., 128 U. S. 598, 9 Sup. Ct. 166, 32 L. Ed. 535; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 138 U. S. 537, 11 Sup. Ct. 396, 34 L. Ed. 997; and where a device, mark, or symbol is adopted for any purpose other than a reference to, or indication of its ownership, it cannot be sustained as a valid trade-mark; Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, 150 U. S. 460, 14 Sup. Ct. 151, 37 L. Ed. 1144.

Numerals can be used as trade-marks; Shaw Stocking Co. v. Mack, 12 Fed. 717; contra, Avery v. Meikle, 81 Ky. 73; but not if they indicate quality or grade; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 138 U. S. 537, 11 Sup. Ct. 396, 34 L. Ed. 997; and the same is true of letters when used as trade-marks. See Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 138 U. S. 537, 11 Sup. Ct. 396, 34 L. Ed. 997. A numeral, when combined with some other symbol, may become a vital part of a valid trade-mark; Goldsmith Silver Co. v. Savage, 211 Fed. 751. The use of the numerals 303 in connection with the maker's name, impressed on pens to distinguish their character from other patterns of the same maker, which has become well known and established, vests a right in the maker, and another manufacturer of pens would not be permitted to place those numerals on pens of like size, etc., if it appear that the public would be deceived; Gillott v. Esterbrook, 48 N. Y. 374, 8 Am. Rep. 553.

As to the right to protection of numerals as trade-marks, see Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co. v. Telephone Co., 31 Utah, 377, 88 Pac. 26, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153.

Marks that simply indicate the quality of articles do not constitute a valid trade-mark; so of words, etc., which indicate the peculiar excellence of goods, for instance "Ne Plus Ultra" for needles; 13 L. T. N. S. 746; "Nourishing" Stout; L. R. 17 Eq. 59. Words which indicate the purpose and character of medicines or articles cannot be exclusive property for a trade-mark, thus: "Cramp" Cure; Harris Drug Co. v. Stucky, 46 Fed. 625; "Microbe Killer;" Alff v. Radam, 77 Tex. 530, 14 S. W. 164, 9 L. R. A. 145, 19 Am. St. Rep. 792. Words which are simply descriptive of the quality or appearance of an article or the place where it was manufactured cannot be monopolized as a trade-mark; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 11 Sup. Ct. 625, 35 L. Ed. 247. Thus, "Acid Phosphate;" Rumford Chemical Works v. Muth, 35 Fed. 524, 1 L. R. A. 44; "Cherry Pectoral;" Ayer v. Rushton, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 9.

The color of a label or package does not constitute a valid trade-mark. See Coats v. Thread Co., 149 U. S. 562, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 37 L. Ed. 847; 37 Ch. Div. 112.

A trade-mark for wire rope of a red or other distinctively colored streak applied to or woven into the rope is too wide and too indefinite; A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co. v. Rope Co., 201 U. S. 166, 26 Sup. Ct. 425, 50 L. Ed. 710. But colored stripes woven into the fabric of the entire length of canvas hose (two blue lines with a red line between them, of about half an inch in width) constitute, in England, a trade-mark proper for registration; [1914] R. P. C. 147 (Ch. Div.).

A form of package cannot be a trade-mark; Fischer v. Blank, 138 N. Y. 245, 33 N. E. 1040.

The following are instances of valid trade-marks; "Celluloid;" Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Read, 47 Fed. 712; "Kaiser," beer; J. & P.

Baltz Brewing Co. v. Kaiserbrauerei, Beck & Co., 74 Fed. 222, 20 C. C. A. 402; "Royal Baking Powder," Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Raymond, 70 Fed. 376; "Bromo-Caffeine," Kearsbey v. Chemical Works, 142 N. Y. 467, 37 N. E. 476, 40 Am. St. Rep. 623; "La Favorita," flour; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 9 Sup. Ct. 143, 32 L. Ed. 526; "Star," shirts; Hutchinson v. Blumberg, 51 Fed. 829; "Saponifier," soap; Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. v. Myers, 79 Fed. 87; "Vulcan," matches; Taendsticksfabriks Aktiebolagat Vulcan v. Myers, 139 N. Y. 364, 34 N. E. 904; "Ideal," pens; Waterman v. Shipman, 130 N. Y. 301, 29 N. E. 111; "Elk," cigars; Lichtenstein v. Goldsmith, 37 Fed. 359; "Bromidia," Battle v. Finlay, 50 Fed. 106; "Swans Down," complexion powder; Tetlow v. Tappan, 85 Fed. 774; "Moxie," nerve food; Moxie Nerve Food Co. v. Beach, 33 Fed. 248; "Charter Oak," for a stove; Filley v. Child, 16 Blatchf. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 4,787; "Nickle In," cigars; Schendel v. Silver, 63 Hun 330, 18 N. Y. Supp. 1; "Valvoline," lubricating oil; Leonard v. Lubricator Co., 38 Fed. 922; "Tin Tag," tobacco; Lorillard v. Pride, 28 Fed. 434; "Sapolio," soap; Enoch Morgan's Sons' Co. v. Schwachhofer, 55 How. Pr. 37; "Syrup of Figs," of a medicinal preparation; Improved Fig Sirup Co. v. Fig Sirup Co., 54 Fed. 175, 4 C. C. A. 264; 7 U. S. App. 588; "Sunshine," stoves; Reading Store Works v. Howes Co., 201 Mass. 437, 87 N. E. 751, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979; "Uneeda," biscuits; National Biscuit Co. v. Baker, 95 Fed. 135.

The following have been held invalid; "Instantaneous," tapioca; Bennett v. McKinley, 65 Fed. 505, 13 C. C. A. 25; "Black Package Tea," Fischer v. Blank, 138 N. Y. 244, 33 N. E. 1040; "International Banking Company," Koehler v. Sanders, 122 N. Y. 65, 25 N. E. 235, 9 L. R. A. 576; "Sarsaparilla and Iron," Schmidt v. Brieg, 100 Cal. 672, 35 Pac. 623, 22 L. R. A. 790; "Taffy Tolu," chewing gum; Colgan v. Danheiser, 35 Fed. 150; "Imperial," beer; Beadleston & Woerz v. Brewing Co., 74 Fed. 229, 20 C. C. A. 405; "Acid Phosphate," Rumford Chemical Works v. Muth, 35 Fed. 524, 1 L. R. A. 44; "Goodyear Rubber Company," Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co., 128 U. S. 598, 9 Sup. Ct. 166, 32 L. Ed. 535; "Snowflake," as applied to bread; Larrabee v. Lewis, 67 Ga. 561, 44 Am. Rep. 735.

A few instances may be given of the use of words which have been held to infringe existing trade-marks: Shrimpton & Hoover is infringed by Shrimpton Turvey; 18 Beav. 164; Beats-All, on lead pencils, by Knoxall; American Lead Pencil Co. v. Gottlieb, 181 Fed. 178; Ceresota, on flour, by Cressota; Northwestern Consol. Mill. Co. v. Mauser, 162 Fed. 1004; Rameses, on cigarettes, by Radames; Stephano v. Satmatopoulos, 199 Fed. 451; Uneeda on biscuits, by Abetta (there being close imitation of cartons); Nat.

Bisc. Co. v. Pac. Bisc. Co. (not yet reported); Julleks by Josephs; L. J., Notes of Cases (1867), 134; Stephens' by Steelpen's for ink; 16 L. T. N. S. 145; Cocoaïne by Cocaine; Burnett v. Phalon, *42 N. Y. 594; The Hero by The Heroine; Rowley v. Houghton, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 39; Bovilene by Bovina; Lockwood v. Bostwick, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 521; Hostetter & Smith by Holsteter & Smyte; Hostetter v. Vowinkle, 1 Dill. 329, Fed. Cas. No. 6714; Cuticura soap by Curative (the package being also imitated); Potter D. & C. Corp. v. Miller, 75 Fed. 656; Old Homestead bread by New Homestead Bread (the stamping of the name in the bread being similar); Banzhaf v. Chase, 150 Cal. 180, 88 Pac. 704; but No-to-bac is not infringed by Baco-Curo; Sterling Remedy Co. v. Mfg. Co., 80 Fed. 105, 25 C. C. A. 314; nor is Cuticura soap infringed by Cuticle soap (the packages not being imitated); Potter D. & C. Corp. v. Soap Co., 106 Fed. 914, 46 C. C. A. 40; nor Muresco, as a wall finish, by Murafresco; Benjamin & Co. v. Auwell, 178 Fed. 543, 102 C. C. A. 53; nor Don Carlos, in connection with olives, by Don Caesar; Chance v. Gulden, 165 Fed. 624, 92 C. C. A. 58; nor Grape Nuts, a cereal, by Grain Hearts; Postum Cereal Co. v. Food Co., 119 Fed. 848, 56 C. C. A. 360; nor Union Leader by Union World; American Tobacco Co. v. Tobacco Co., 193 Fed. 1015; nor Valvoline, for oils in general, by Halvoline, for gas engine oils; Valvoline Oil Co. v. Oil Co., 211 Fed. 189.

In technical trade-mark cases, if the plaintiff proves that the defendant has used his trade-mark or a colorable imitation of it, he has established his right to relief.

Numerous cases have arisen where a party, by imitating the labels and packages used in connection with an article already on the market, has attempted to "pass off" his spurious goods on the public as the real article. In this country this is usually called unfair competition; in England, passing off, and in France, concurrence déloyale. The doctrine has been thus stated: The grounds on which unfair competition in trade will be enjoined are either that the means used are dishonest, or that, by false representation or imitation of a name or device, there is a tendency to create confusion in the trade, and work a fraud upon the public, by inducing it to accept a spurious article; Vitascope Co. v. U. S. Phonograph Co., 83 Fed. 30.

Under this doctrine will come most of the cases referred to above where geographical names were used. In this class of cases it is held that it is not necessary to show actual deception. That the defendant's method of doing business tends to deceive the public, or that there is a probability of deception, is sufficient; Drummond Tobacco Co. v. Tobacco Co., 52 Mo. App. 10; Von Mumm v. Frash, 56 Fed. 830; Tarrant & Co. v. Hoff, 76 Fed. 959, 22 C. C. A. 644; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. Ed. 828. A valid trade-mark is not essential to a right of action for unfair competition; Samson Cordage Works v. Cordage Mills, 211 Fed. 603; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Watch Case Co., 179 U. S. 665, 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 45 L. Ed. 365.

A fraudulent intent is presumed whenever a false statement is used in order to approximate the mark of the competitor; Scheuer v. Muller, 74 Fed. 225, 20 C. C. A. 161; and also when a word identical with or resembling an important word is placed in the same position on a label or wrapper of the same shape; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n v. Clarke, 26 Fed. 410; or catch words are printed in conspicuous type; L. R. 5 H. L. 508.

If the intent to deceive is established, it will be inferred that the mark is calculated to deceive; Drummond Tobacco Co. v. Tobacco Co., 52 Mo. App. 10; L. R. 18 Eq. 138.

In trade-mark cases, strictly, the wrongful intent is presumed from the fact of infringement, while, in cases of unfair competition, it must be proved; Samson Cordage Works v. Cordage Mills, 211 Fed. 603; in the latter class of cases, such circumstances must be made out as will show wrongful intent in fact, or justify that inference from the inevitable consequences of the act complained of; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Watch Case Co., 179 U. S. 665, 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 45 L. Ed. 365. That proof of a fraudulent intent is necessary, see Lynn Shoe Co. v. Shoe Co., 100 Me. 461, 62 Atl. 499, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960; that it is immaterial, see 3 App. Cas. 376; Colman v. Crump, 70 N. Y. 573. See the cases in note, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 961. It is immaterial that there was no intent to imitate plaintiff's labels; Wirtz v. Bottling Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 164, 24 Atl. 658.

Imitation which would be likely to deceive is infringement; Samson Cordage Works v. Cordage Mills, 211 Fed. 603; a manufacturer is guilty of unfair competition if he dresses his goods so as to represent those of another and assists the retailer in passing them off as such; Winterton Gum Co. v. Chocolate Co., 211 Fed. 612. The real question is held to be whether the one name so nearly resembles the name of another as to be calculated to deceive. It is perfectly immaterial whether they were fraudulent or not, or whether they intended it or not; Halsbury, C., in [1899] App. Cas. 83.

Relief is granted on the ground that plaintiff's business is injured; if the parties were in a different line of business, there is no competition; Borden Ice Cream Co. v. Milk Co., 201 Fed. 510, 121 C. C. A. 200.

The imitation by one manufacturer of the goods of another in name, appearance and marking and color of packages, even if such similarity singly would not be unlawful if accompanied by good faith, may constitute unfair competition, which will be enjoined, where there is an actual purpose to deceive and defraud purchasers; Coca Cola Co. v. Gay Ola Co., 200 Fed. 720, 119 C. C. A. 164.

Unfair competition does not necessarily involve the violation of any exclusive right to the use of a word, mark or symbol, as it may arise from the use of words, etc., which everybody may use; the test being whether what has been done tends to pass off the goods of one for those of another, or to deprive such other of his rights; Bates Mfg. Co. v. Mach. Co., 172 Fed. 892.

The basis of an action for unfair competition is fraud or deceit, inducing the public to believe that defendant's goods are those of complainants and where the likeness is in the goods themselves, because of copying the design of complainant's article, which is unpatented, and there is no attempt to deceive purchasers with respect to the manufacturer, there is no ground on which a court can grant an injunction; Keystone Type Foundry v. Pub. Co., 186 Fed. 690, 108 C. C. A. 508; Rathbone Sard & Co. v. Range Co., 189 Fed. 26, 110 C. C. A. 596, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258.

Unfair competition is distinguishable from infringement of a trade-mark in that it does not necessarily involve the question of the exclusive right of another to the use of the name, symbol or device copied or imitated. A word may be purely generic or descriptive, and so not capable of becoming an arbitrary trade-mark, and yet there may be an unfair use of it which will constitute unfair competition; G. W. Cole Co. v. Oil Co., 130 Fed. 703, 65 C. C. A. 105.

When the question is simply one of unfair competition, it is not essential that there should be any exclusive or proprietary right in the words or labels used, as, irrespective of any trade-marks, rival manufacturers have no right by imitative devices to beguile the public into buying their wares under the impression that they are buying those of their rivals; Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills v. Eagle, 86 Fed. 608, 30 C. C. A. 386, 41 L. R. A. 162.

The name of a person or a town may have become so associated with a particular product that the mere attaching of that name to a similar product, without more, would have all the effect of a falsehood; Walter Baker & Co. v. Slack, 130 Fed. 514, 65 C. C. A. 138. An absolute prohibition against using the name would carry trade-marks too far. Therefore the rights of the two parties have been reconciled by allowing its use if an explanation is attached. Of course, the explanation must accompany the use, so as to give the antidote with the bane; Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co. v. Safe Co., 208 U. S. 554, 28 Sup. Ct. 350, 52 L. Ed. 616, Holmes, J., delivering the opinion.

A manufacturer of goods may obtain a monopoly in the right to use a distinctive dress for boxes and cartons which have come to be known as designating his product; Winterton Gum Co. v. Chocolate Co., 211 Fed. 612; and color may be one of the elements; id. Even if the trade-mark be not registered, if it be well known, it is an imposition on the public to use an imitation of it; Ubeda v. Zialetta, 226 U. S. 452, 33 Sup. Ct. 165, 57 L. Ed. 296.

Where a firm has for many years used the name of its predecessors in connection with its goods, and has built up an extensive trade thereunder, such name, even if it could not be used as a trade-mark, is to be treated as a descriptive term, to the benefit of which they are entitled; Garrett v. Garrett & Co., 78 Fed. 472, 24 C. C. A. 173.

The Wamsutta Mills obtained an injunction against the defendant, who advertised "Men's Laundered Shirts, Wamsutta Cotton." They were made of cloth inferior to that from plaintiff's mills; Wamsutta Mills v. Fox, 49 Fed. 141.

In Enoch Morgan's Sons Co. v. Wendover, 43 Fed. 420, 10 L. R. A. 283, where customers came to defendant's store and asked for Sapolio, and the salesman would wrap up and sell another soap, defendant was enjoined. So also, where defendant sold threads with labels like plaintiff's; Coates v. Holbrook & Co., 2 Sand. Ch. (N. Y.) 586; and where defendants sold whiskey in bottles of the same general shape as plaintiff's bottle; Cook & B. Co. v. Ross, 73 Fed. 203. See, also, Coats v. Thread Co., 149 U. S. 562, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 37 L. Ed. 847; Charles E. Hires Co. v. Consumers' Co., 100 Fed. 809, 41 C. C. A. 71.

"National," as applied to a mail order cloak business, had become well known and had acquired a distinctive meaning, and defendant was enjoined from its use in advertisements which were likely to deceive the public; National Cloak & Suit Co. v. Londy & Friend, 211 Fed. 760.

"Hooton's Cocoa and Chocolate" Company was enjoined as infringing upon "Van Houten's Cocoa," although there was no imitation of packages, or any evidence that "Hooton's" was adopted for any dishonest purpose, but it did appear that it had a tendency to deceive and that dealers had been deceived; Van Houten v. Chocolate Co., 130 Fed. 600.

The doctrine of unfair competition in trade rests on the proposition that equity will not permit any one to palm off his goods on the public as those of another. Unfair competition in trade, as distinguished from infringement of trade-marks, does not involve the violation of any exclusive right to the use of a word, mark or symbol. The word may be purely generic or descriptive, and the mark or symbol indicative only of style, size, shape or quality, and as such open to the public, yet there may be unfair competition in trade by an improper use of such word, mark or symbol; Dennison Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 94 Fed. 651.

A manufacturer is guilty of unlawful competition if he dresses his goods to represent those of another and assists the retailer in palming them off as such; Winterton Gum Co. v. Chocolate Co., 211 Fed. 612.

The placing of spurious goods upon the market is prima facie evidence of damage to the plaintiff; 5 D. G. & S. 126; 6 Hare 325.

It is not necessary to prove that any customer or plaintiff had been deceived; it is sufficient to show that defendant knowingly put it in the power of retail dealers to deceive their customers; Williamson C. & B. Co. v. Corset Co., 70 Mo. App. 424. The fact that the defendants, who formerly used a label not imitative of complainant's, adopted a new one much resembling his, shortly after a former infringer of complainant's trade-mark came into their employ, is most suggestive of an intentional imitation; Scheuer v. Muller, 74 Fed. 225, 20 C. C. A. 161. The similarity must be such as to mislead the ordinary purchaser; Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, 150 U. S. 460, 14 Sup. Ct. 151, 37 L. Ed. 1144; the ordinary or usual buyer; Samson Cordage Works v. Mills, 211 Fed. 603. The test of infringement is whether the alleged infringing article is so dressed up as to be likely to deceive persons of ordinary intelligence, exercising the slight care ordinarily used, into purchasing one man's goods for the goods of another; Sterling Remedy Co. v. Mfg. Co., 80 Fed. 105, 25 C. C. A. 314.

Cases of passing off frequently involve the use of a person's own name on his goods.

It is generally said that every man has an inherent, natural right to the free employment of his own name in his business; Garrett v. T. H. Garrett & Co., 78 Fed. 472, 24 C. C. A. 173; Tarrant & Co. v. Hoff, 76 Fed. 959, 22 C. C. A. 644; Walter Baker & Co. v. Baker, 77 Fed. 181; 13 Beav. 209; Painter v. People, 147 Ill. 462, 35 N. E. 64; De Long v. Hook & Eye Co., 7 App. Div. 33, 39 N. Y. Supp. 903; Cigar Mfg. Co. v. Gato, 25 Fla. 886, 7 South. 23, 6 L. R. A. 823, 23 Am. St. Rep. 537. But the doctrine has its limitations. Where one uses his own name to identify the origin of his goods which are made at a particular place, no other person by the same name will be permitted to use his name on his own goods if he does it in such a way as to injure the trade and business of another, or so as to represent his goods as the goods of another; Cigar Mfg. Co. v. Gato, 25 Fla. 886, 7 South. 23, 6 L. R. A. 823, 23 Am. St. Rep. 537; Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 139. And one who uses his name in competition with an established business carried on by another of the same name, must avoid putting up his goods in such a way as to resemble the goods of the other; Walter Baker & Co. v. Sanders, 80 Fed. 889, 26 C. C. A. 220. And one is not entitled to use his name as part of the name of a corporation in order to compete with another of the same name; Rogers Co. v. Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 1017, 17 C. C. A. 576; Garrett v. T. H. Garrett & Co., 78 Fed. 473, 24 C. C. A. 173.

One who uses his name will be protected against the use of that name, even by a person bearing it, in such form as to constitute a false representation of the origin of the goods; Landreth v. Landreth, 22 Fed. 41. One cannot use his own name to deceive the public; Pillsbury v. Flour Mills Co., 64 Fed. 841, 12 C. C. A. 432; 1 Ch. App. 192. One may trade honestly in his own name, but he must be careful not to trade under his own name in such a manner as to take away that which lawfully belongs to another; he must be careful not to deceive; 4 R. P. C. 215. This right applies only to the party's own line of business; Nims, Unfair Comp. 23; thus Simplex on automobiles is not infringed by Simplex on fire extinguishers; Simplex Automobile Co. v. Kahnweiler, 162 App. Div. 480, 147 N. Y. Supp. 617.

A trader cannot be prevented from trading in his own name, if he uses it in good faith, even though it be similar to that of another trader who is well established; [1907] App. Cas. 430. A name may acquire a secondary meaning, but this does not give the party an exclusive right to it, but others would be enjoined from using it so as to pass off their goods as those of the person whose name is in question; [1906] 23 R. P. C. 348.

A personal name (an ordinary family surname such as Remington) cannot be exclusively appropriated against any one having a right to use it, and its registration as such cannot in itself give it validity. Every one has the right to use his name fairly and honestly, whether in a firm or corporation. It is not the use, but dishonesty in the use, that is condemned. One corporation cannot exclude another from using in its corporate title a name to which others have a common right. The essence of the wrong in unfair competition consists in the sale of the goods of one as that of another, and if defendant is not trying to palm off its goods as those of another, the action fails; Howe Scale Co. v. Wyckoff, S. & B., 198 U. S. 118, 25 Sup. Ct. 609, 49 L. Ed. 972.

Where Arthur A. Waterman left the employ of the complainant, L. E. Waterman Company, which had built up a business in fountain pens under the name "Waterman's Ideal," and entered into a partnership under the name of A. A. Waterman & Company to compete with the complainant, which partnership afterwards transferred its business and good will and right to use such name to defendant, and it was clearly shown that confusion was created thereby, the defendant was enjoined from using the name Waterman at all unless it substituted for its firm name on its pens the name "Arthur A. Waterman & Company" and followed it with the words "Not connected with L. E. Waterman & Company"; Waterman Co. v. Pen Co., 197 Fed. 534, 117 C. C. A. 30.

In Chickering & Sons v. Chickering, 198 Fed. 958, where Chickering & Sons (piano makers) had obtained an injunction, it was held that the use of the words "Chickering Bros., Chicago," on the fall-board of the defendant's piano, without other means of advising the purchaser that the piano was not of the original Chickering & Sons, exhibited adjacent thereto and as prominently as the name "Chickering Bros., Chicago," was unlawful and that the use in that connection of the words "The only Chickering making pianos" was not sufficient.

Where two grandsons of the original piano maker, "William Knabe," transferred their interests in the corporation manufacturing it and started a new piano company, it was held that they were entitled to make a piano having all the qualities of the first manufacturer and so to advertise, but must exercise care to prevent the public from believing that their article was that of the first manufacturer, or that they were his successors; Stix, B. & F. D. G. Co. v. Piano Co., 211 Fed. 271. When one as a stockholder and officer of a corporation joined in a sale by it of his own name, he cannot use any mark, etc., indicating that he is the successor to the original corporation, or that his goods are its product or that of his successor, nor can he interfere with the good will so sold; Donnell v. Safe Co., 208 U. S. 267, 28 Sup. Ct. 288, 52 L. Ed. 481. A retiring partner is not, in the absence of an agreement, precluded from using his surname in business because it was part of the partnership trade-mark; White v. Trowbridge, 216 Pa. 11, 64 Atl. 862.

In the absence of fraud or facts raising an estoppel, the fact that a person assists in the formation of a corporation, in the name of which his own name is used, does not preclude the use of his own name as a part of the name of another corporation in which he subsequently becomes interested; Bates Mfg. Co. v. Mach. Co., 141 Fed. 213.

There being no evidence of dishonesty, defendant could not be enjoined from placing his own name (Brinsmead) on his pianos, though it might bring him some advantage in consequence of that being the name of the piano of the plaintiff firm; 29 T. L. R. 237.

One cannot recharge and sell empty Prest-O-Lite gas tanks except after complete and permanent obliteration of the trade-mark; mere covering by a label is not enough; Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Davis, 215 Fed. 349; and where the defendant sold liquor in bulk to plaintiff's detective, and at the same time delivered to him bottles bearing plaintiff's labels to be refilled with the liquor, it was held unfair trade; Hennessy v. Wine Growers' Ass'n, 212 Fed. 308.

Where the long and successful use of a trade-mark or name is clearly established, the fact that the owner has recognized and permitted the limited use thereof by another which does not appear to have misled anybody, is not sufficient to defeat the owner's right to prevent others from using it; Tetlow v. Tappan, 85 Fed. 774.

A party may affect his right to a trade-mark by non-use, by a forbearance in suing protectively, and by adopting a new one. But the question of abandonment is always a question of intention; Brown, Trade-Marks 536; equity, however, will not in general refuse an injunction on account of delay in seeking relief where the proof of infringement is clear, even though the delay may be such as to preclude the party from any right to an account for past profits; 31 L. T. 285; 45 L. Jour. 505. Where the excuse for the intentional use of another's trade-mark is that the owner permitted such use, that excuse is disposed of by an action to stop it and no estoppel arises; Meuendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 9 Sup. Ct. 143, 32 L. Ed. 526.

A delay of two years in seeking to recover profits for the infringement of a trade-mark, partly taken up in negotiations for a settlement, will not bar a suit, at least where the defendants had express notice that they would be held accountable; Nelson v. Winchell & Co., 203 Mass. 75, 89 N. E. 180, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150. But one otherwise entitled to the exclusive use of a name, may lose his right by laches and by acquiescence for nearly thirty years in its use and allowing the name to become generic; French Republic v. Spring Co., 191 U. S. 427, 24 Sup. Ct. 145, 48 L. Ed. 247. A delay for several years in bringing suit, during which the defendant was openly selling its product and expending large sums in advertising it, bars a relief in equity and an accounting.

Acquiescence in the use by another of a certain trade name for a number of years in a wholesale shoe business does not preclude objection to its use in a retail shoe business; Nolan Bros. Shoe Co. v. Nolan, 131 Cal. 271, 63 Pac. 480, 53 L. R. A. 384, 82 Am. St. Rep. 346, where the contention that the name used was a family name was ineffectual, because used in such manner upon a sign as to deceive the public.

Acts tending to show an abandonment of a trade-mark are insufficient unless they show an actual intent to abandon; Saxlehner v. E. & M. Co., 179 U. S. 19, 21 Sup. Ct. 7, 45 L. Ed. 60.

An injunction against the use of marks which cannot be protected as trade-marks, will not be granted, where the defendant has persistently warned the public that it has no connection with the plaintiff; Goodyear I. R. G. Co. v. Rubber Co., 128 U. S. 598, 9 Sup. Ct. 166, 32 L. Ed. 535.

A foreigner selling medicinal preparations

In his own country, under a registered trade-mark, has no common-law right to such trade-mark here, as against a domestic firm which had an established business under a similar trade-mark, adopted in good faith, before the other had sold any goods in this country; Richter v. Remedy Co., 52 Fed. 455.

A trade-mark has no extra-territorial effect; see 122 Fed. 105. Certain Carthusian monks in France had made, and sold a liqueur under the name of Chartreuse, which name was registered in the United States, where it had a market. The French government having expelled them from France and confiscated their business and, as it appears, their trade-mark, they re-established the business in Spain; it was held that the action of the French government did not affect the title of the monks to the United States trade-mark; Baglin v. Cusenier Co., 156 Fed. 1016; on appeal it was held that the defendants had the right to state on their labels the place where the liqueur was made, but must clearly distinguish their product from that made by the monks, and must not, by their labels, mislead purchasers; Baglin v. Cusenier Co., 164 Fed. 25, 90 C. C. A. 499.

Where the owner of a patented article marked it as patented, and also called it by a designated name, by which it became known, upon the expiration of the patent, other manufacturers having the right to make the article have also the right to use the name, provided they take care not to have their product confused with that of the original maker; Yale & Towne Mfg. Co. v. Ford, 203 Fed. 707, 122 C. C. A. 12, following Singer Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 163 U. S. 169, 16 Sup. Ct. 1002, 41 L. Ed. 118 (the Singer Sewing Machine Case). When the right to manufacture an article becomes public, the right to use the only word descriptive of the article manufactured becomes public also; Holzappel's Compositions Co. v. Am. Composition Co., 183 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 6, 46 L. Ed. 49.

After the patent expired on "Jenkins' Valves," another could sell Jenkins' valves, but he must disclose the source of manufacture so as to prevent the public from believing that his valves were those of the successor of the patentee; Jenkins Bros. v. Kelly, 212 Fed. 328. Upon the expiration of the patent on "Castoria," the word became the property of the public; Centaur Co. v. Heinsfurter, 84 Fed. 955, 28 C. C. A. 581; so of "Linoleum"; 7 Ch. Div. 834; and of "Granite"; St. Louis Stamping Co. v. Piper, 12 Misc. 270, 33 N. Y. Supp. 443.

When the copyright of Webster's Dictionary expired, the exclusive right to the name also expired, and another publisher might use "Webster" if he printed his name on the back or cover and title page to distinguish his publication; Western Electric Co. v. Tel. Co., 148 Fed. 858; to the same effect after expiration of a patent or copyright; G. & C.

Merriam Co. v. Ogilvie, 159 Fed. 638, 88 C. C. A. 596, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, and note, 14 Ann. Cas. 796.

A word which might become a valid trade-mark when applied to an unpatented article may not be so when applied to a patented article; the patent indicates the ownership and origin; Dover Stamping Co. v. Fellows, 163 Mass. 191, 40 N. E. 105, 28 L. R. A. 448, 47 Am. St. Rep. 448.

The members of a voluntary union of cigar-makers are entitled to protection in the exclusive use of a label to designate the exclusive product of their labor, though they are only employed for wages; Hetterman v. Powers, 102 Ky. 133, 43 S. W. 180, 39 L. R. A. 211, 80 Am. St. Rep. 348; contra, McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 22 Atl. 912, 13 L. R. A. 377, 27 Am. St. Rep. 625.

The courts will not grant relief where there is a false representation, calculated to deceive the public, as to the manufacture of an article, and the place where it is manufactured; Joseph v. Macowsky, 96 Cal. 518, 31 Pac. 914, 19 L. R. A. 53. See supra. Where a complainant uses a geographical name to represent untruthfully the place of his manufacture he cannot obtain relief; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 2 Sup. Ct. 436, 27 L. Ed. 706; Connell v. Reed, 128 Mass. 477, 35 Am. Rep. 397; Pepper v. Labrot, 8 Fed. 29; [1891] 2 Ch. 166.

The doctrine that he who comes into equity must come in with clean hands does not apply to the owner of a trade-mark seeking protection where, in his trade-mark or label, no misrepresentations are made, but they are extrinsic or collateral thereto; Johnson & Johnson v. Seabury, 71 N. J. Eq. 750, 67 Atl. 36, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1007, 14 Ann. Cas. 840. The mere fact that a jobber of shoes, who has them manufactured for him by another, describes himself on his letter head as a manufacturer of shoes, will not destroy his right to equitable relief against one who infringes his trade-mark; Nelson v. Winchell & Co., 203 Mass. 75, 89 N. E. 180, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151.

Where the owner of a trade-mark, in his trade-marks or advertisements and business, is guilty of any false or misleading representation, he loses his right to the assistance of a court of equity; Worden v. Syrup Co., 187 U. S. 516, 23 Sup. Ct. 161, 47 L. Ed. 282.

Where a symbol or label claimed as a trade-mark contains a distinct assertion which is false, no right to its exclusive use can be maintained; Holzappel's Compositions Co. v. Comp. Co., 183 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 6, 46 L. Ed. 49 (here the use of the word "patent" when there has been none); so in Raymond v. Baking Powder Co., 85 Fed. 231, 29 C. C. A. 245, of a statement that the article was made in London, by "Purveyors to the Queen," when it was made in New York. In State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167, 33 N. E.

223, offensive words on a cigar box label, referring to rat-shop, filthy tenement house cigars of other makers, were held not to disentitle the label to protection.

"Imposition on the public is not a ground on which a plaintiff can come into court, but it is a very good ground for keeping him out of it;" Ubeda v. Zialcita, 226 U. S. 452, 33 Sup. Ct. 165, 57 L. Ed. 296.

It is not necessary that the owner of a trade-mark himself should manufacture the goods which the trade-mark designates; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 9 Sup. Ct. 143, 32 L. Ed. 526; Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 456, 22 N. W. 267, 24 N. W. 830, 26 N. W. 783; he may import them; Godillot v. Harris, 81 N. Y. 263; or have them made for him; Nelson v. Winchell & Co., 203 Mass. 75, 89 N. E. 180, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151.

Manufacture and sale of cards like plaintiff's, which latter are not copyrighted, is not unlawful competition; Bamforth v. Machine Co., 158 Fed. 355.

Where the plaintiff transferred baggage from landing places to hotels and placed upon the hat of each of his solicitors in conspicuous letters the word "Morton," and the defendant started a rival business and used a badge attached to his hat bearing the single word "Morton's," of the same size and appearance, there was an injunction issued; Morton v. Morton, 148 Cal. 142, 82 Pac. 664, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 660, with note.

The adoption by a telephone company for its trouble department of the number long in use by a rival company is not unlawful; Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 31 Utah, 377, 88 Pac. 26, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153.

To constitute infringement of a trade-name, it is necessary that the two places of business be in competition with each other, and if one is engaged exclusively in retailing shoes and the other in manufacturing and wholesale jobbing of shoes, there is no such competition as will warrant a restraining order, although the names of the firms have secondary import and the retail firm had legally acquired its trade-name before the wholesale company was organized; Regent Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Haaker, 75 Neb. 426, 106 N. W. 595, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 447.

A trade-mark is not subject to execution unless under authority of statute; Prince Mfg. Co. v. Paint Co., 20 N. Y. Supp. 462. It cannot be seized and sold upon execution apart from the business or article with which it has been used; 28 Am. & Engl. Encycl. L. 405.

The fact that a manufacturer has a remedy under a patent does not preclude him from bringing a suit against another manufacturer for unfair competition; Fonotipia Limited v. Bradley, 171 Fed. 951.

In a suit for infringement of a technical trade-mark, the owner is entitled, not only to an injunction, but to the recovery of profits issuing from the infringement, as incident to and a part of his property right; while in suits for unfair competition complainant is entitled to only such damages as will compensate him for the injury actually suffered; P. E. Sharpless Co. v. Lawrence, 213 F. 423. Where a decree awarding an injunction and damages was affirmed in a suit for unlawful competition, in which a recovery for infringement of a trade-mark was denied, an order for an accounting of profits made by defendant was improper; the word "damages" being limited to the indemnity recoverable for the injury sustained by complainants; id.

The federal trade-mark act of February 20, 1905, as amended in 1906, 1907, and 1908, provides for trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several states or with the Indian tribes, provided the owner shall be domiciled within the United States or reside in any foreign country which by any treaty, convention or law affords similar privileges to United States citizens.

Applicants for registration or renewal of registration, who are not domiciled within the United States, shall designate by writing filed in the patent office some person residing within the United States on whom process or notice of proceedings affecting the right of ownership may be served. Where the person has previously filed in any foreign country, which affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, an application for registration of a trade-mark, his trade-mark shall be given the same force and effect as if filed in this country, if filed within four months from the date of the application in such foreign country.

Section 5, as amended January 8, 1913, provides that "no mark by which the goods of the owner of the mark may be distinguished from other goods of the same class shall be refused registration as a trade-mark unless such mark—(a) Consists of or comprises immoral or scandalous matter. (b) Consists of or comprises the flag or coat of arms or other insignia of the United States or any simulation thereof, or of any state or municipality or of any foreign nation, or of any design or picture that has been or may hereafter be adopted by any fraternal society as its emblem, or of any name, distinguishing mark, character, emblem, colors, flag or banner adopted by any institution, organization, club or society which was incorporated in any state in the United States prior to the date of the adoption and use by the applicant: Provided, that trade-marks which are identical with a registered or known trade-mark owned and in use by another and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties, or which so nearly resemble a registered or known trade-mark owned and in use by another and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake in the mind of the public or to deceive purchasers shall not be registered: Provided, that no mark which consists merely in the name of an individual firm, corporation or association not written, printed, impressed or woven in some particular or distinctive manner, or in association with the portrait of the individual, or merely in words or devices which are descriptive of the goods with which they are used, or of the character or quality of such goods, or merely a geographical name or term, shall be registered under the terms of this act: Provided further, that no portrait of a living individual may be registered as a trade-mark except by the consent of such individual, evidenced by an instrument in writing: And provided further, that nothing herein shall prevent the registration of any mark used by the applicant or his predecessors, or by those from whom title to the mark is derived, in commerce with foreign nations or among the several states or with Indian tribes which was in actual and exclusive use as a trade-mark of the applicant, or his predecessors from whom he derived title, for ten years next preceding February 20, 1905: Provided further, that nothing herein shall prevent the registration of a trade-mark otherwise registrable because of its being the name of the applicant or a portion thereof."

Applicants for registration or renewal, when refused, or parties to an application against whom a decision has been rendered or a party has filed notice of an opposition, may appeal from the examiner in charge of trade-marks or interferences to the commissioner of patents. There is an appeal from the commissioner of patents to the court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

A registered trade-mark and a mark for the registration of which an application has been made, together with the registration, shall be assignable "in connection with the good will of the business in which the mark is used" by an instrument in writing, duly acknowledged, which assignment shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser for value without notice unless recorded in the patent office within three months from its date.

A certificate of registration remains in force for 20 years, except that trade-marks previously registered abroad shall cease to be in force on the day on which they cease to be protected abroad. They may be renewed from time to time upon payment of fees.

The registration is made prima facie evidence of ownership. Infringers are made liable to an action for damages and upon a verdict for the plaintiff the court may enter judgment for any amount in excess of the amount of the verdict not exceeding three times the amount of such verdict, together with the costs.

Under the judiciary act of March 3, 1911, the district court has original jurisdiction of all suits at law or in equity arising under the trade-mark laws. Courts may grant injunctions in equity and the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover, in addition to the profits, the damages which he has sustained, which the court may increase as above stated. No action shall be maintained where the trade-mark is used in unlawful business or on any article injurious in itself or on a mark which has been used with the design of deceiving the public or has been abandoned or upon any registration fraudulently obtained. The act does not prevent any remedy at law or in equity which any party aggrieved might have had before the act.

Registrants shall give notice of their trade-marks by affixing the words "Registered in U. S. Patent Office," or abbreviated thus, "Reg. Pat. Off.," or, if this cannot be done, then by affixing a label containing a like notice on the package. In the absence of such notice, no damages can be recovered except on proof of notice of infringement and continued infringement after such notice.

In a suit in the circuit court under the trade-mark act, where diverse citizenship does not exist, the jurisdiction extends only to the use of the registered trade-mark in commerce between the states, with foreign nations and the Indian tribes. A final decision of the circuit court of appeals can only be reviewed by the supreme court upon certiorari; Hutchinson, Pierce & Co. v. Loewy, 217 U. S. 457, 30 Sup. Ct. 613, 54 L. Ed. 838.

The International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property was held at Paris in 1883. The signatories agreed that the citizens of each should in the other states enjoy as registered trade-marks the advantages of their respective laws.

TRADE, RESTRAINT OF. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

TRADE SECRETS. The owner of a trade secret is protected against invasion of his rights therein by fraud or breach of trust or contract; Tabor v. Hoffman, 118 N. Y. 36, 23 N. E. 12, 16 Am. St. Rep. 740. So long as one keeps his secret process from disclosure, equity will enjoin any one who discovers it through fraud from disclosing or using it; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 402, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502; O. & W. Thum Co. v. Tloczynski, 114 Mich. 149, 72 N. W. 140, 38 L. R. A. 200, 68 Am. St. Rep. 469; and a purchaser from the owner acquires the same right; Vickery v. Welch, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 523 (but not the right of action against a subsequent innocent purchaser from the owner; Stewart v. Hook, 118 Ga. 445, 45 S. E. 369, 63 L. R. A. 255). He may protect himself by contract against its disclosure by one to whom it is communicated in confidence or restrict its use by such person; Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman, 153 Fed. 24, 82 C. C. A. 158, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135. Equity will enforce such a contract; National G. & M. Co. v. Braendly, 27 App. Div. 219, 51 N. Y. Supp. 93. One who has sold a secret process, for a valuable consideration, will be enjoined from revealing it to a third person and the use of the secret will be enjoined; Simmons Medicine Co. v. Simmons, 81 Fed. 163.

A bill will lie against one divulging the secret, without joining the competitor to whom he divulged it; Sanitas N. F. Co. v. Cemer, 134 Mich. 370, 96 N. W. 454.

One must not use or disclose to others trade secrets of his employer of which he gained knowledge in his employ; 14 Ch. Div. 748; Sanitas N. F. Co. v. Cemer, 134 Mich. 370, 96 N. W. 454; Fralich v. Despar, 165 Pa. 24, 30 Atl. 521; see a note in 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103. An ex-servant, confidentially employed in manufacturing under a secret process, must not use or disclose any knowledge or information as to it acquired during his employment, whether retained in his memory or existing in tangible form; an injunction may issue, although the actual details of the process are not disclosed at the trial; [1913] 2 Ch. 239, distinguishing [1910] 1 Ch. 336, and earlier cases.

If one honestly learns a trade secret, not violating any contract or confidence, no injunction will lie; Stewart v. Hook, 118 Ga. 445, 45 S. E. 369, 63 L. R. A. 255; Chadwick v. Covell, 151 Mass. 190, 23 N. E. 1068, 6 L. R. A. 839, 21 Am. St. Rep. 442; Watkins v. Landon, 52 Minn. 389, 54 N. W. 193, 19 L. R. A. 236, 38 Am. St. Rep. 560; in such case, one may sell medicines specified as made according to a secret; Chadwick v. Covell, 151 Mass. 190, 23 N. E. 1068, 6 L. R. A. 839, 21 Am. St. Rep. 442.

One who had contracted to work for five years for another and not to divulge a trade secret entrusted to him was enjoined from divulging it to a third person, as was also the third person from employing him and from using information received from him; Taylor I. & S. Co. v. Nichols, 70 N. J. Eq. 541, 61 Atl. 946; so also in Fralich v. Despar, 165 Pa. 24, 30 Atl. 521. But where a servant denies any intention to divulge the secret, no injunction will issue; S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Mitchell, 188 Fed. 1017.

An injunction lies against the superintendent of a factory, who has learned its secrets and then broken his contract of employment and become employed in another factory which at once began to manufacture the same product; Harrison v. Sugar Refin- ing Co., 116 Fed. 304, 53 C. C. A. 484, 58 L. R. A. 915; but where a steel manufacturer, using a secret process entered into a contract with an employé binding him not to divulge, during the term of the agreement or afterwards, information relating thereto, whether then had or to be acquired by him, the contract was held to be in restraint of trade and void; Taylor Iron Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. 684, 69 Atl. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 133 Am. St. Rep. 753. One employed by an optician will, after leaving his employ, be enjoined from using a list of the names of his former employer's customers whom he had personally examined; Stevens & Co. v. Stiles, 29 R. I. 399, 71 Atl. 802, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 17 Ann. Cas. 140, following 64 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 593; Loven v. People, 158 Ill. 159, 42 N. E. 82; so also Simmons Hardware Co. v. Waibel, 1 S. D. 492, 47 N. W. 514, 11 L. R. A. 267, 36 Am. St. Rep. 755. A servant who has copied his employer's list of customers, to use it in soliciting their custom after leaving his employ, was enjoined, and the list was ordered to be destroyed; 2 Q. B. 315. One who has obtained from an employer of another patterns of pumps was enjoined from using or disposing of them; Tabor v. Hoffman, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 5.

Where a corporation director, who knew a secret process of his company, became president of another company and, with the aid of discharged employees of his former company, installed the secret process for such other company, the director, the company and the discharged employees were all enjoined; Vulcan D. Co. v. Can Co., 72 N. J. Eq. 387, 67 Atl. 339, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 102, with a full note.

A secret process may be the subject of confidential communication and of sale or license to use with restriction as to territory and prices; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. J. D. Parks & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502, citing Fowle v. Park, 131 U. S. 88, 9 Sup. Ct. 658, 33 L. Ed. 67. An agreement in a sale of a secret process for manufacturing a drug, which restricts the vendor from using or divulging it to others, or selling the article, is a reasonable restriction, it being necessary for the vendee's protection, and the article not being of prime necessity for the public; Mallinckrodt C. Works v. Nemnich, 169 Mo. 388, 69 S. W. 355. So of a covenant of the vendor not to divulge it to any one else for five years; Tode v. Gross, 127 N. Y. 480, 28 N. E. 469, 13 L. R. A. 652, 24 Am. St. Rep. 475; and of a covenant not to use it or disclose it to others or to sell the article made under it; L. R. 9 Eq. 345; Vickery v. Welch, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 526.

Assumpsit will lie against one who contracted not to take advantage of the communication of a trade secret, and then obtained a patent on it; 3 Bos. & P. 630.

That cases involving a disclosure of trade secrets at the trial may be privately heard, see IN CAMERA. In Taylor Iron Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. 684, 69 Atl. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 133 Am. St. Rep. 753, a case was heard in camera and the evidence was then sealed. A disclosure of a secret necessarily made to the court at a trial does not preclude an injunction; Stone v. Goss, 65 N. J. Eq. 756, 55 Atl. 736, 63 L. R. A. 344, 104 Am. St. Rep. 794. See [1913] 2 Ch. 239.

The manufacturer of proprietary medicines under secret process cannot contract with dealers in such medicines, wholesale and retail, to control prices and fix the prices which consumers shall pay; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. J. D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

A witness may refuse to give testimony or produce documents which would disclose trade secrets and where the evidence is irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible; Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Bullock, 134 Fed. 241.

A person conducting a private enquiry business does not impliedly warrant to his client that his servants will not disclose their secrets after leaving his employ; and quære as to disclosures made while in his employ; Easton v. Hitchcock [1912] 1 K. B. 535.

See Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., 73 N. J. Eq. 387, 67 Atl. 339, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 102; Stevens & Co. v. Stiles, 29 R. I. 399, 71 Atl. 802, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 17 Ann. Cas. 140.

TRADER. One who makes it his business to buy merchandise, or goods and chattels, and to sell the same for the purpose of making a profit. See State v. Chadbourn, 80 N. C. 481, 30 Am. Rep. 94; Sylvester v. Edgecomb, 76 Me. 500. The quantum of dealing is immaterial, when an intention to deal generally exists; 2 C. & P. 135; 1 Term 572. The principal question is whether the person has the intention of getting a living by his trading; if this is proved, the extent or duration of the trading is not material; 3 Camp. 233.

Questions as to who is a trader most frequently arise under the bankrupt laws; and the most difficult among them are those cases where the party follows a business which is not that of buying and selling principally, but in which he is occasionally engaged in purchases and sales.

A farmer who, in addition to his usual business, occasionally buys a horse not calculated for his usual occupation, and sells him again to make a profit, and who in the course of two years had so bought and sold five or six horses, two of which had been sold, after he had bought them, for the sake of a guinea profit, was held to be a trader; 1 Term 537, n.; 1 Price 20. Another farmer, who bought a large quantity of potatoes, not to be used on his farm, but merely to sell again for a profit, was also declared to be a trader; 1 Stra. 513. A butcher who kills only such cattle as he has reared himself is not a trader, but if he buy them and kill and sell them with a view to profit, he is a trader; 4 Burr. 21. A brickmaker who follows the business for the purpose of enjoying the profits of his real estate merely is not a trader; but when he buys the earth by the load or otherwise, and manufactures it into bricks, and sells them with a view to profit, he is a trader; 3 C. & P. 500; so is a brewer; Hastings Malting Co. v. Heller, 47 Minn. 71, 49 N. W. 400; and one who is engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber is a trader; 1 B. R. 281; so is one engaged in buying and selling goods for the purpose of gain, though but occasionally; 2 id. 15; but the keeper of a livery stable is not; 3 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 282; nor is one who buys and sells shares; 2 Ch. App. 466.

A corporation engaged principally in operating hotels is not engaged principally in trading and mercantile pursuits under the bankruptcy act; it was so held where such a corporation conducted a small store as an incident to its hotel business; an occupation that is not trading is not a mercantile pursuit; Toxaway Hotel Co. v. Smathers & Co., 216 U. S. 439, 30 Sup. Ct. 263, 54 L. Ed. 558, where the brief of counsel cites the cases in many states. The opinion of the court quotes In re Cote, Fed. Cas. No. 3,267, where Judge Lowell said the bankruptcy act was addressed to the common usage of the country and defined tradesman as "substantially the same as shopkeeper," and cites In re U. S. Hotel Co., 134 Fed. 225, 67 C. C. A. 153, 68 L. R. A. 588, as in accord and as reviewing the cases upon the subject. A restaurateur is not a trader nor engaged in commercial pursuits; In re Excelsior Café Co., 175 Fed. 294; nor is a corporation engaged principally in the business of renting films for moving pictures; In re Imperial Film Exch., 198 Fed. 80, 117 C. C. A. 188. As to what businesses are subject to the bankruptcy act, see Mattoon Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bk., 102 Fed. 728, 42 C. C. A. 4, and note.

TRADES UNIONS. See LABOR UNION.

TRADESMAN. In England, a shopkeeper; in the United States, a mechanic or artificer of any kind, whose livelihood depends on the labor of his hands; Richie v. McCauley, 4 Pa. 472; a farmer is not a tradesman; 33 L. J. M. C. 80; a laundryman is not; Steininger v. Butler, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 43.

TRADING PARTNERSHIP. See PARTNERSHIP.

TRADING STAMPS. The current name for a method of conducting some kinds of retail business which consists of an agreement between a number of merchants and a corporation that the latter shall print the names of the former in its subscribers' dictionary and circulate a number of copies of the book, and that the merchants shall purchase of the corporation a number of so-called trading stamps, to be given to purchasers with their purchases, and by them preserved and pasted in the books aforesaid until a certain number have been secured, when they shall be presented to the corporation in exchange for the choice of certain articles kept in stock by the corporation. Lansburgh v. D. of Col., 11 App. D. C. 512. Under Act of Congress Feb. 17, 1873, which forbids the sale of real estate or any article of merchandise or taking of payment with a promise to give any article or thing, in consideration of the purchase by any person of any other article or thing, etc., it was held that the business was nothing more nor less than a gaming device; id. But later cases hold otherwise. The trading stamp business, when conducted honestly, is not contrary to public policy; S. & H. Co. v. Temple, 137 Fed. 992; and statutes which attempt to prohibit such business or which levy a license or excise tax on it as a separate business are uniformly held unconstitutional; State v. Dalton, 22 R. I. 77, 46 Atl. 234, 48 L. R. A. 775, 84 Am. St. Rep. 818; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465; Ex parte McKenna, 126 Cal. 429, 58 Pac. 916; Young v. Com., 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E. 327; Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 552, 38 South. 67, 70 L. R. A. 209; Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 82 Pac. 429, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 3 Ann. Cas. 878; O'Keeffe v. Somerville, 190 Mass. 110, 76 N. E. 457, 112 Am. St. Rep. 316, 5 Ann. Cas. 684; and so of a municipal ordinance forbidding it; Denver v. Frueauff, 39 Colo. 20, 88 Pac. 389, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1131, 12 Ann. Cas. 521; City Council of Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 552, 38 South. 67, 70 L. R. A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43; and such business is not a gift enterprise or a lottery; Winston v. Becson, 135 N. C. 271, 47 S. E. 457, 65 L. R. A. 167; State v. Dodge, 76 Vt. 197, 56 Atl. 983, 1 Ann. Cas. 47; an injunction will be granted against a competing trading stamp company whose agents exchange its stamps for partly filled books containing plaintiff's stamps which are non transferable; Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Weber & Co., 161 Fed. 219. An act forbidding the issue and distribution of trading stamps to be redeemed by any person other than the merchant who sells the goods with which such stamps are given is not a lawful exercise of the police power and is unconstitutional as being an unlawful deprivation of liberty and property; People v. Dycker, 72 App. Div. 308, 76 N. Y. Supp. 111.

TRADITIO BREVIS MANUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The delivery of a thing by the mere consent of the parties. Putting the thing so that the transferee could take it with hindrance. Voet. Com. 4. 1. 34.

TRADITIO LONGA MANU. A species of delivery which takes place where the trans-feror places the article in the hands of the transferee. Mackeld. Rom. L. § 284.

TRADITION (Lat. trans, over, do, dare, to give). The act by which a thing is delivered by one or more persons to one or more others.

The transfer of ownership by means of placing the transferee in legal possession of the object, with the intention of vesting the ownership in him.

The delivery of possession by the proprietor with an intention to transfer the property to the receiver. Two things are, therefore, requisite in order to transmit property in this way: the intention or consent of the former owner to transfer it, and the actual delivery in pursuance of that intention.

Tradition is either real or symbolical. Real tradition takes place where the ipsa corpora of movables are put into the hands of the receiver. Symbolical tradition is used where the thing is incapable of real delivery, as, in immovable subjects, such as lands and houses, or such as consist in jure (things incorporeal), as, things of fishing, and the like. The property of certain movables, though they are capable of real delivery, may be transferred by symbol. See DELIVERY; SYMBOLICAL DELIVERY.

TRADITOR. A traitor; one guilty of treason. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 21, 8.

TRAFFIC. Commerce; trade; sale or exchange of merchandise, bills, money, and the like. The passing of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money; and a trafficker is one who traffics or a trader, a merchant. Senior v. Ratterman, 44 Ohio St. 673, 11 N. E. 321.

TRAFFIC RATES. See RATES.

TRAHENS. The drawer of a bill. Story, Bills § 12.

TRAIL BASTON. See JUSTICE OF TRAIL BASTON.

TRAIN. A number of cars coupled together and moving from point to point, under an impetus imparted by a locomotive which had been detached, is a train. Caron v. R. Co., 164 Mass. 523, 42 N. E. 112.

Within the safety appliance act, it is one aggregation of cars drawn by the same engine. If the engine is changed then there is a different train; U. S. v. R. Co., 168 Fed. 148.

TRAIN-WRECKING. A conviction is not justified, where no actual wreck occurred, unless the intention of the defendant to do so is shown; Nowell v. State, 94 Ga. 588, 21 S. E. 591. The indictment need not specify the passengers who were endangered; Barton v. State, 28 Tex. App. 483, 13 S. W. 783.

TRAITOR. One guilty of treason. See TREASON.

TRAITOROUSLY. In Pleading. A technical word, which is essential in an indictment for treason in order to charge the crime, and which cannot be supplied by any other word or any kind of circumlocution. Having been well laid in the statement of the treason itself, it is not necessary to state every overt act to have been traitorously committed.

TRAJECTITIA PECUNIA. A loan to a shipper to be repaid only in case of a successful voyage. The lender could charge an extraordinary rate of interest, nauticum fœnus. Holland, Jurispr. 250. See BOTTOMRY; RESPONDENTIA.

TRAMP. One who roams about from place to place, begging or living without labor or visible means of support; a vagrant. Many of the states have adopted suitable legislation upon the subject, corresponding to the English vagrant acts. The object of these statutes is accomplished by arresting offenders and setting them to work on municipal improvements, or hiring them out to private employers, for a limited time, for which they receive food, lodging, and reasonable wages. In some states the punishment is by imprisonment. It is doubtful if mere vagrancy was indictable at common law; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 515. Where there is no statutory definition of vagrancy, it will depend upon the common-law meaning; In re Jordan, 90 Mich. 3, 50 N. W. 1087. See VAGRANT.

TRANSACT. In common parlance, equivalent to carry on, when used with reference to business. Territory v. Harris, 8 Mont. 140, 19 Pac. 286.

TRANSACTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. The settlement of a suit or matter in controversy, by the litigating parties between themselves without referring it to arbitration. Halifax, Civil Law b. 3, c. 8, no. 14. A part payment, coupled with a promise not to claim the residue; compromise. Holland, Jurispr. 260.

TRANSACTION. The doing or performing of any business; the management of an affair. Montague v. Thomason, 91 Tenn. 173, 18 S. W. 264. A group of facts so connected together as to be referred to by a single legal name; as, a crime, a contract, a wrong. Steph. Dig. Evid. art. 3. The term transaction is a broader one than contract; Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 113, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599.

Under the Elkins act the offense of accepting a concession in rates is the "transaction" that the given rebate consummates, and not the units of mere measurement of the physical thing transported; Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 164 Fed. 376, 386, 90 C. C. A. 364.

In Civil Law. An agreement between two or more persons, who, for the purpose of preventing or putting an end to a lawsuit, adjust their difference, by mutual consent, in the manner which they agree on. In Louisiana this contract must be reduced to writing. La. Civ. Code, art. 3038.

To transact, a man must have the capacity to dispose of the things included in the transaction. In the common law this is called a compromise.

TRANSCRIPT. A copy of an original writing or deed.

TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD. The printed record as made up in each case for the supreme court of the United States is so called; also in the circuit court of appeals. If a necessary part has been omitted and is subsequently presented to the appellate court, duly certified, it may be made part of the record by direct order. Jurisdiction attaches upon the filing in the court above of the writ of error and is not defeated by irregularity in the transcript or its certification; Burnham v. R. Co., 87 Fed. 168, 30 C. C. A. 594.

Substantially complete sets in the supreme court of the United States since printing was required have been preserved and may be found in the libraries of the Law Association of Philadelphia (from 1832), the Bar Association of the City of New York and of the supreme court itself.

TRANSFER. The act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another person, with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter. See Ex parte Thomason, 16 Neb. 238, 20 N. W. 312; ESTOPPEL; STOCK.

TRANSFERABLE. The word includes every means by which property may be passed from one person to another. 17 Ch. Div. 9.

TRANSFeree. He to whom a transfer is made.

TRANSFEROR. One who makes a transfer.

TRANSGRESSION. The violation of a law.

TRANSGRESSIONE. In Old English Law. A writ or action of trespass.

TRANSHIPMENT. The act of taking the cargo out of one ship and loading it in another.

When this is done from necessity, it does not affect the liability of an insurer on the goods; Abbott, Shipp. 240. But when the master transships goods without necessity, he is answerable for the loss of them by capture by public enemies; Trott v. Wood, 1 Gall. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 14,190.

TRANSIENT. Within the meaning of a poor-law a "transient person" is not exactly a person on a journey from one place to another, but rather a wanderer ever on the tramp. Goodell v. Mount Holly, 51 Vt. 423. A transient foreigner is one who visits the country, without the intention of remaining; Yates v. Iams, 10 Tex. 170. A doctor's office is not merely "transient," where he rents it by the year, and there keeps regular hours on three certain days per week; Com. v. Townley, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 413.

TRANSIRE. A warrant for the custom-house to let goods pass; a permit. Equivalent to a clearance. See, for a form of a transire, Hargr. L. Tr. 104.

TRANSITIVE COVENANT. An obligation which binds not only the covenantor, but also his representatives.

TRANSITORY ACTION. An action the cause of which might have arisen in one place or county as well as another.

In general, all personal actions, whether ex contractu; 5 Taunt. 25; New York Corp. v. Dawson, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 335; Henwood v. Cheeseman, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 500; or ex delicto; 1 Chitty, Pl. 243; for personal injuries; Gunther v. Dranbauer, 86 Md. 1, 38 Atl. 33; Myers v. R. Co., 69 Minn. 476, 72 N. W. 694, 65 Am. St. Rep. 579; for quarrying stone on defendant's land in one state and removing it to another; Phelps v. Church, 99 Fed. 683, 40 C. C. A. 72; to recover damages for a tort; Dennick v. R. Co., 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. Ed. 439; Stewart v. R. Co., 168 U. S. 445, 18 Sup. Ct. 105, 42 L. Ed. 537; are transitory, and may be maintained in a state other than the one in which the injuries were inflicted, where the cause of action is grounded on the principles of the common law, recognized in both states; Eingartner v. Steel Co., 94 Wis. 70, 68 N. W. 664, 34 L. R. A. 503, 59 Am. St. Rep. 859. Such an action may at common law be brought in any county which the plaintiff elects.

Quo warranto proceedings against a corporation must be brought in the county where its office is; State v. Hancock, 2 Pennewill, 231, 45 Atl. 850; so of an action to recover a statutory penalty for refusal to obey an order of the railroad commission; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. State, 104 Ga. 831, 31 S. E. 531, 42 L. R. A. 518, an action to enjoin railroad commissioners should be brought in a county where one or more of them reside; Railroad Commission of Georgia v. Hardware Co., 124 Ga. 633, 53 S. E. 193; an action on the case for rescue is local; Poor v. Doble, Quincy (Mass.) 86. Ordinarily actions relating to land are local; Grace v. Cox, 16 Ind. App. 150, 44 N. E. 813; so of trespass for damages to land; Du Breuil v. Pennsylvania Co., 130 Ind. 137, 29 N. E. 909; and of an action for damages to a mill privilege caused by a dam in another county; Thompson v. Crocker, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 59; and of an action to establish a trust and obtain partition; Hanna v. Clark, 189 Pa. 321, 41 Atl. 981; but not a petition for the appointment of a trustee of land; Cone v. Cone, 61 S. C. 512, 39 S. E. 748.

An exception to the venue must be taken in abatement; Davis v. Marston, 5 Mass. 199; a plea to the merits is not a waiver; Robinson v. Mead, 7 Mass. 353.

See JURISDICTION; LOCAL ACTION; TORT

TRANSITUS (Lat.). A transit. See STORAGE IN TRANSITU.

TRANSLATION. The reproduction in one language of what has been written or spoken in another.

In pleading, when a libel or an agreement written in a foreign language must be averred, it is necessary that a translation of it should also be given.

"Making a translation [of a contract in a foreign language] is not a mere question of trying to find out in a dictionary the words which are given as the equivalent of the words of the document; a true translation is the putting into English that which is the exact effect of the words used under the circumstances. To get at this in the present case you must get the words in English which in business have the equivalent meaning of the words in Brazilian, as used in Brazil, under the circumstances. Therefore you want a competent translator, competent to translate in that way, and if the words in Brazil had in business a particular meaning different from their ordinary meaning, you would want an expert to say what was that meaning. Amongst those experts you might want a Brazilian lawyer—and a Brazilian lawyer for that purpose would be an expert." [1891] 1 Q. B. 82, per Lord Esher, M. R.

In evidence, when a witness is unable to speak the English language so as to convey his ideas, a translation of his testimony must be made. In that case an interpreter should be sworn to translate to him, on oath, the questions propounded to him, and to translate to the court and jury.

See INTERPRETER.

The bestowing of a legacy which had been given to one, on another: this is a species of ademption; but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption. Bacon, Abr. Legacies (C).

The transfer of property; but in this sense it is seldom used. 2 Bla. Com. 294.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The removal from one place to another; as, the bishop was translated from the diocese of A to that of B.

In the Civil Law. The transfer of property. Clef des Lois Rom.

TRANSMISSION. In Civil Law. The right which heirs or legatees may have of passing to their successors the inheritance or legacy to which they were entitled, if they happen to die without having exercised their rights. Domat, liv. 3, t. 1, s. 10; 4 Toullier, n. 186.

TRANSPORTATION. In English Law. Transportation to the Australian colonies was a punishment inflicted by virtue of sundry statutes; it was unknown to the common law. 2 H. Blackst. 223. Abolished in 1867.

In railroad practice, the word includes cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage. Shepard v. R. Co., 184 Fed. 770; including all services in connection with the receipt, delivery and handling of property; Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 441, 32 Sup. Ct. 140, 56 L. Ed. 257.

TRAPS. See NEGLIGENCE.

TRAVAIL. The act of child-bearing.

A woman is said to be in her travail from the time the pains of child-bearing commence until her delivery. Bacon v. Harrington, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 63.

TRAVELLER. One who passes from place to place, whether for pleasure, instruction, business, or health. Lockett v. State, 47 Ala. 45; 10 C. B. N. S. 429. The term is used to designate those who patronize inns; the distance which they travel is not material. Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 185.

The question whether one is or is not a traveller is one of fact; [1893] 1 Q. B. 522. One would be a traveller if he came abroad from any legitimate motive and needed refreshment, but not if he came abroad merely to go to a public house and obtain a drink; 17 C. B. N. S. 539. Walking for exercise is not travelling; Hamilton v. Boston, 14 Allen (Mass.) 475. Within the meaning of a policy of insurance, one who has been carried by a steamboat and walked eight miles from the landing to his home is not, whilst walking, a traveller by public or private conveyance; Ripley v. Assur. Co., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 336, 21 L. Ed. 469. Within the meaning of a law allowing a person travelling to carry concealed weapons, the travelling must be on a journey beyond the ordinary habit, business, or duties of a person, and beyond the circle of his friends and acquaintances; Gholson v. State, 53 Ala. 520, 25 Am. Rep. 652; Smith v. State, 42 Tex. 464. A horse that had escaped into the highway without his owner's fault and was finding his way home is a traveller within a statute making a town liable for injuries to a traveller; Howrigan v. Bakersfield, 79 Vt. 249, 64 Atl. 1130, 9 Ann. Cas. 282. See SUNDAY.

TRAVELLING SALESMAN. One who is employed under a contract assigning to him certain territory in which to take care of the trade, who was paid by a commission on sales made and who exercised full discretion as to when and where he should travel, was held a travelling salesman within the bankruptcy act; In re Dexter, 158 Fed. 788.

TRAVERSE. To deny; to put off.

In Civil Pleading. To deny or controvert anything which is alleged in the previous pleading. Lawes, Pl. 116. A denial. Willes 224. A direct denial in formal words: "Without this, that, etc." (absque hoc). 1 Chitty, Pl. 523, n. a. A traverse may deny all the facts alleged; 1 Chitty, Pl. 525; or any particular material fact; Bradner v. Demick, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 406.

A common traverse is a direct denial, in common language, of the adverse allegations, without the absque hoc, and concluding to the country. It is not preceded by an inducement, and hence cannot be used where an inducement is requisite; 1 Saund. 103 b.

A general traverse is one preceded by a general inducement and denying all that is last before alleged on the opposite side, in general terms, instead of pursuing the words of the allegation which it denies; Pepper, Pl. 17. Of this sort of traverse the replication de injuria sua propria absque tali causa, in answer to a justification, is a familiar example; Steph. Pl. 171.

A special traverse is one which commences with the words absque hoc, and pursues the material portion of the words of the allegation which it denies; Lawes, Pl. 116. It is regularly preceded by an inducement consisting of new matter; Steph. Pl. 188. A special traverse does not complete an issue, as does a common traverse; 20 Viner, Abr. 339.

A traverse upon a traverse is one growing out of the same point or subject-matter as is embraced in a preceding traverse on the other side; Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42, n. It is a general rule that a traverse well intended on one side must be accepted on the other. And hence it follows, as a general rule, that there cannot be a traverse upon a traverse if the first traverse is material. The meaning of the rule is that when one party has tendered a material traverse the other cannot leave it and tender another of his own to the same point upon the inducement of the first traverse, but must join in that first tendered; otherwise the parties might alternately tender traverses to each other in unlimited succession, without coming to an issue; Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42. The rule, however, does not apply where the first traverse is immaterial, nor where it is material if the plaintiff would thereby be ousted of some right or liberty which the law allows; Cro. Eliz. 99, 418; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (H 4).

In Criminal Practice. To put off or delay the trial of an indictment till a succeeding term. More properly, to deny or take issue upon an indictment. 4 Bla. Com. 351.

A toll exacted for passing through a town or lordship. Baldwin's Britton 63.

TRAVERSE JURY. See JURY.

TREASON. This word imports a betraying, treachery, or breach of allegiance. 4 Bla. Com. 75. In England, treason was divided into high and petit treason. The latter, originally, was of several forms, which, by 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2, were reduced to three: the killing by a wife, of her husband; by a servant, of his master; of a prelate by an ecclesiastic owing obedience to him. These kinds of treason were abolished in 1828. In America they were unknown; here treason means high treason.

"Treason it has been said is not felony but a grade of crime by itself." Johnson v. State, 29 N. J. L. 453, 464.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, defines treason against the United States to consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. By the same article of the constitution, no person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

It is "the only crime defined by the constitution. . . . The clause was borrowed from an ancient English statute, enacted in the year 1352. Previous to the passage of that statute there was great uncertainty as to what constituted treason. Numerous offences were raised to its grade by arbitrary construction of the law. The statute was passed to remove this uncertainty and to restrain the power of the crown to oppress the subject by constructions of this character. It comprehends all treason under seven distinct branches. The framers of our constitution selected one of these branches, and declared that treason against the United States should be restricted to the acts which it designates." No other acts can be declared to constitute the offence. Congress can neither extend, nor restrict, nor define the crime. Its power over the subject is limited to prescribing the punishment. Field, J., in U. S. v. Greathouse, 4 Sawy. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254. See James C. Carter, The Law, etc., 107.

By the same article of the constitution, no "attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood except during the life of the person attainted." Every person owing allegiance to the United States who levies war against them, or adheres to their enemies giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason; R. S. § 5331. The penalty is death, or at the discretion of the court, imprisonment at hard labor for not less than five years and a fine of not less than ten thousand dollars; and every person convicted of treason is rendered incapable of holding any office under the United States; R. S. § 5332.

The term enemies, as used in the constitution, applies only to subjects of a foreign power in a state of open hostility with us. To constitute a "levying of war" there must be an assemblage of persons with force and arms to overthrow the government or resist the laws. All who aid in the furtherance of the common object of levying war against the United States, in however minute a degree, or however remote from the scene of action, are guilty of treason; U. S. v. Greathouse, 4 Sawy. 457, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254.

Treason may be committed against a state; Charge to Grand Jury—Treason, 1 Sto. 614, Fed. Cas. No. 18,275; People v. Lynch, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 549.

The words "treason, felony and breach of the peace" in section 6, art. 1, of the United States constitution should be construed in the same sense as they were commonly used and understood in England as applied to the parliamentary privilege, and as excluding from the privilege all arrests and prosecutions for criminal offences, and confining the privilege alone to arrests in civil cases; Williamson v. U. S., 207 U. S. 425, 28 Sup. Ct. 163, 52 L. Ed. 278.

Treason felony in England is a statutory offense punishable with penal servitude for life under an act of 1848, and relates to the offense of deposing the king from the style, honor or royal name of the imperial crown, or declaring war against him to compel him to change his measures or councils, or to put any force upon parliament, etc. By the Act of 1814, treason was punished by mutilation after death; by the act of 1870, by hanging, unless the king substitutes decapitation. 4 Steph. Com. 144.

Treason, or its French equivalent, "Trahison" (German, Kriegsverrath), as employed to indicate any acts on the part of the inhabitants of an invaded territory which are calculated to deceive the invader or to inform their own side of his forces or movements. Holland, War on Land 49.

See SEDITION.

TREASURE. A thing hidden or buried in the earth which no one can prove as his property, and which is discovered by chance. La. Civ. C. art. 3423, par. 2.

TREASURE TROVE. Found treasure.

This name is given to such money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, which, having been hidden or concealed in the earth, or other private place, so long that its owner is unknown, has been discovered by accident. Should the owner be found, it must be restored to him; and in case of not finding him, the property, according to the English law, belongs to the king. By the civil law, when the treasure was found by the owner of the soil he was considered as entitled to it by the double title of owner and finder; when found on another's property, one-half belonged to the owner of the estate and the other to the finder; when found on public property, it belonged one-half to the public treasury and the other to the finder. Leçons du Dr. Rom. §§ 350-352. This includes not only gold and silver, but whatever may constitute riches: as vases, urns, statues, etc.

If the owner is known it is not technically treasure trove; Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 456, 43 Am. Rep. 600. The crown is prima facie entitled to treasure trove; [1903] 2 Ch. 598; and there need not be an inquest to inform the crown of its rights; 41 W. R. 294. Gold and silver articles hidden for safe keeping, and forgotten or remaining undiscovered by reason of the death of the person who hid them, are technically known as treasure trove; Kuykendall v. Fisher, 61 W. Va. 87, 56 S. E. 48, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 11 Ann. Cas. 700; [1903] 2 Ch. 598. There is some doubt in this country as to who is entitled to the treasure trove. Danielson v. Roberts, 44 Or. 108, 74 Pac. 913, 65 L. R. A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627, holds that the finder is entitled as against the owner of the land on which the treasure is found; but a contrary case in the same volume of reports gives it to the landowner; Ferguson v. Ray, 44 Or. 557, 77 Pac. 600, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1. Another case holds that the owner of the soil acquires no title as such; Weeks v. Hackett, 104 Me. 264, 71 Atl. 858, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201, 129 Am. St. Rep. 390, 15 Ann. Cas. 1156. In the Roman law valuables hid in the earth for safety were not treasure trove, unless hid so long before that the owner was not known; Hunter, Rom. Law 256. See Murray, Arch. Surv. of the United Kingdom.

TREASURER. An officer intrusted with the treasures or money either of a private individual, a corporation, a company, or a state. See OFFICER; SURETYSHIP.

TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES. An officer in the treasury department appointed by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate. He is required to give bond, with sufficient sureties, approved by the secretary of the treasury and the first comptroller, in the sum of $150,000.

His principal duties are—to receive and keep the moneys of the United States, and disburse the same upon warrants drawn by the secretary of the treasury, countersigned by either comptroller and recorded by the register; to take receipts for all moneys paid by him; to render his account to the first comptroller quarterly, or oftener if required, and transmit a copy thereof, when settled, to the secretary of the treasury; to lay before each house, on the third day of every session of congress, fair and accurate copies of all accounts by him from time to time rendered to and settled with the first comptroller, and a true and perfect account of the state of the treasury; to submit at all times to the secretary of the treasury and the comptroller, or either of them, the inspection of the moneys in his hands. R. S. §§ 301-311.

TREASURER'S REMEMBRANCER. He whose charge was to put the lord treasurer and the rest of the judges of the exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behoof. Whart.

TREASURY. The place where treasure is kept; the office of a treasurer. The term is more usually applied to the public than to a private treasury. The word is held not to be understood in the sense of locality as descriptive of a particular building, but whenever and wherever moneys are in the official custody of the treasurer or subject to his direction they are to be considered as in the state treasury. People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 86.

TREASURY CHEST FUND. A fund in England originating in the unusual balances of certain grants of public money, and which is used for the purpose of banking and loan companies by the commissioners of the treasury. Whart.

TREASURY, FIRST LORD OF. A high office of state in Great Britain, usually held by the Prime Minister.

TREASURY NOTES. The treasury notes of the United States payable to holder or to bearer at a definite future time are negotiable commercial paper, and their transferability is subject to the commercial law of other paper of that character. Where such a paper is overdue a purchaser takes subject to the rights of antecedent holders to the same extent as in other paper bought after its maturity; Vermilye v. Express Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 138, 22 L. Ed. 609. See LEGAL TENDER.

TREATY. A compact made between two or more independent nations with a view to the public welfare. (Quoted in Altman & Co. v. U. S., 224 U. S. 583, 32 Sup. Ct. 593, 56 L. Ed. 894.) Treaties are for a perpetuity, or for a limited time. Those matters which are accomplished by a single act and are at once perfected in their execution are called agreements, conventions, and pactions, but the distinction in name is not always observed.

Personal treaties relate exclusively to the persons of the contracting sovereigns, such as family alliances, and treaties guaranteeing the throne to a particular sovereign and his family. As they relate to the persons, they expire of course on the death of the sovereign or the extinction of his family. With the advent of constitutional government in Europe these treaties have lost their importance.

Real treaties relate solely to the subject-matters of the convention, independently of the persons of the contracting parties, and continue to bind the state, although there may be changes in its constitution or in the persons of its rulers. Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law § 29.

On the part of the United States, treaties are made by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, provided two-thirds of the senators present concur. Const. art. 2, s. 2, n. 2.

No state shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation; Const. art. 1, s. 10, n. 1; nor shall any state, without the consent of congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another state or with a foreign power; id. art. 1, sec. 10, n. 2.

A treaty is declared to be the supreme law of the land, and is, therefore, obligatory on courts, whenever it operates of itself without the aid of a legislative provision; U. S. v. Peggy, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 103, 2 L. Ed. 49; Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 456, 31 L. Ed. 386; U. S. v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 7 Sup. Ct. 234, 30 L. Ed. 425; Maiorano v. R. Co., 213 U. S. 268, 29 Sup. Ct. 424, 53 L. Ed. 792; but when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, and either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not to the judicial, department, and the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule of the court; Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 314, 7 L. Ed. 415. A treaty is a law of the land whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined; In re Cooper, 143 U. S. 472, 12 Sup. Ct. 453, 36 L. Ed. 232. So an award by arbitrators under a treaty between the United States and another nation, by which the contracting nations agree that the decision of the tribunal of arbitration shall be a final settlement of all questions submitted, becomes the supreme law of the land and is as binding on the courts as an act of congress; Whitelaw v. U. S., 75 Fed. 513, 21 C. C. A. 434, reversing The La Ninfa, 49 Fed. 575.

It need hardly be said that a treaty cannot change the constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument. A treaty may supersede a prior act of congress, and an act of congress may supersede a prior treaty; and this is true both of treaties with Indians and foreign nations; Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 620, 20 L. Ed. 227; U. S. v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 427, 13 Sup. Ct. 650, 37 L. Ed. 509; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905.

A treaty is of like obligation as an act of legislation; both are the supreme law of the land, and no supreme efficacy is given to the one over the other; Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 456, 31 L. Ed. 386. As between a statute and a treaty, if the two are found to conflict, the one last in time must control; Ribas y Hijo v. U. S., 194 U. S. 315, 24 Sup. Ct. 727, 48 L. Ed. 994; Sanchez v. U. S., 216 U. S. 167, 30 Sup. Ct. 361, 54 L. Ed. 432; as far as this country is concerned; U. S. v. Lee Yen Tai, 185 U. S. 221, 22 Sup. Ct. 629, 46 L. Ed. 878.

When a treaty is inconsistent with a subsequent act of congress, the latter will prevail; the constitution does not declare that the law established by a treaty shall never be altered or repealed by congress; and while good faith may cause congress to refrain from making any change in such law, if it does so its enactment becomes the law. No person acquires any vested right to the continued operation of a treaty. Although the other party to the treaty may have ground of complaint, still every one is bound to obey the latest law passed; Rainey v. U. S., 232 U. S. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. 429, 58 L. Ed. —.

A collector of customs cannot refuse to follow the directions of a statute because it is in conflict with a prior treaty; Bartram v. Robertson, 122 U. S. 116, 7 Sup. Ct. 1115, 30 L. Ed. 1118. A treaty is a part of the law of every state; Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 616, 20 L. Ed. 227; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628. A treaty may remove the disability of aliens under state laws to inherit lands; Bahaud v. Bize, 105 Fed. 485; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642; Opel v. Shoup, 100 Ia. 407, 69 N. W. 560, 37 L. R. A. 583; Succession of Rixner, 48 La. Ann. 552, 19 South. 597, 32 L. R. A. 177, with full note. A treaty binds the courts as fully as an act of congress; U. S. v. Peggy, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 103, 2 L. Ed. 49; but it cannot deprive a citizen of a constitutional right; The Neck, 138 Fed. 144. See also, Burr, The Treaty-Making Power of the United States and the Methods of Its Enforcement as Affecting the Police Power of the States.

The question whether the United States is justified in disregarding its engagements with another nation is not one for the determination of the courts; The Chinese Exclusion Case, 130 U. S. 581, 9 Sup. Ct. 623, 32 L. Ed. 1068.

Treaties should be liberally construed, so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties to secure equality and reciprocity between them; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642. Where concessions are made, the treaty is to be construed most favorably to the conceding nation; U. S. v. De la Maza, Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691, 8 L. Ed. 547.

So far as a treaty can be made the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such acts as congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal; Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 456, 31 L. Ed. 386; The Chinese Exclusion Case, 130 U. S. 581, 9 Sup. Ct. 623, 32 L. Ed. 1068; Horner v. U. S., 143 U. S. 570, 12 Sup. Ct. 522, 36 L. Ed. 266.

Treaties are agreements between nations of a general nature bearing upon political or commercial questions, and are distinguished from conventions which are agreements relating to minor or specific subjects, such as consular conventions and postal conventions. The right to negotiate treaties is one of the tests of sovereignty. The king is usually the treaty-making power in a monarchy, subject to the advice of his ministers in constitutional governments, and in a republic, the chief executive or some part of the legislature. After treaties have been negotiated and signed they must be ratified by the proper authorities of each state.

Treaties usually provide for their own termination, but independently of that it has been held that when a treaty becomes dangerous to the life or incompatible with the independence of a state or a permanent obstacle to the development of its constitution or the rights of its people, it can be abrogated, and also when the condition of affairs which formed the basis of the treaty has become so modified by time that its execution has become contrary to the nature of things and the original intention of the parties; Hooper v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls. 408. See REBUS SIC STANTIBUS. See also Hall, Int. L. § 116.

A treaty with a state is considered by the United States as abrogated when such state is conquered by or incorporated into another state. But England has taken an opposite position. War may affect existing treaties in various ways, but only those binding upon one or both belligerents; where they expressly provide for matters that relate only to a condition of war, they are not affected. Such was the Geneva Convention, 1864, as to the treatment of the wounded. Similarly those which create some permanent state affairs by an act done once for all; e. g. the settlements made by the Treaty of Vienna, 1815. So of a treaty ceding territory. But treaties which regulate commercial and social relations between the belligerents are at least suspended and possibly annulled by a war between them. That which relates to a continuous course of conduct, binding upon one or more belligerents and one or more third powers, will be continued, suspended, or annulled, according to the provisions. Risley, Law of War 85. But the practice has been so various and inconsistent that there is no basis for any general rule as to the effect of war on treaties; id. All treaties do not become so extinguished; where they stipulate for a permanent arrangement of territorial and other national rights, they are at most suspended during war and revive at peace; Society for Propagation of Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 464, 5 L. Ed. 662.

On breach of a treaty by one party to it, the other may declare a breach, or waive the breach and let the treaty remain in force; 1 Opp. Int. L. § 547. Unless otherwise stipulated the breach of any one article of a treaty is a violation of the whole; 1 Kent 175. Private rights may be sacrificed by treaty, for the public safety, but the government should compensate the individuals whose rights are affected; 1 Kent 167; Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 199, 1 L. Ed. 568.

"All treaties, as well those for the cessions of territory as for other purposes, are binding upon the contracting parties, unless otherwise provided in them, from the day they are signed. The ratification to them relates back to the time of signing;" Davis v.

Concordia Parish, 9 How. 280, 13 L. Ed. 138; meaning, of course, "treaties made by plenipotentiaries having full powers to do so and . . . afterwards ratified;" id. The exchange of ratifications is retroactive, except where the treaty operates on individual rights, as to which it is not "concluded" until the exchange of ratification; Haver v. Yaker, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 32, 19 L. Ed. 571.

When the senate amended the Hay-Pauncefote treaty before ratification, it was the object of some criticism on the ground that it had arrogated to itself a power foreign to its constitutional rights. The treaty-making power is defined in article 2, § 2, of the Constitution as follows: "He [the president] shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the senators present concur." It is contended that the power given to the senate by this provision, like that conferred upon it to concur in the appointment of federal officials, is one of veto purely, giving no right to amend. This position has been characterized as untenable by Senator Henry C. Lodge in an article on "The Treaty-Making Powers of the Senate," published January, 1902, in Scribner's Magazine (Sen. Doc. 104, 57 Congr. 1 Sess.), where he cites in support of his view sixty-eight treaties which have been amended by the senate before ratification. The senate's right to amend has also been affirmed in an unequivocal dictum in Haver v. Yaker, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 32, 35, 19 L. Ed. 571; 1 Bryce, Amer. Commonwealth 104.

If the senate amends a treaty, it is then, as amended, submitted to the other contracting power, and if it be accepted as amended, neither further action by the senate nor resigning is required; 5 Moore, Int. L. Dig. 201. Where a senate amendment to a treaty with Cuba provided that it should not take effect until approved by congress, such approval (with the consent of Cuba) fixed the date when it should operate; U. S. v. Refining Co., 202 U. S. 563, 26 Sup. Ct. 717, 50 L. Ed. 1149.

Whether it is within the treaty-making power to provide by treaty for administration of property of foreigners dying within a state, and to commit such administration to consuls of the nation of the deceased, was considered, but not decided, in Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 453 (where the Argentine treaty under consideration was held to provide only for "intervention" in the administration of intestate aliens, and to give no absolute right to administer), the opinion citing In re Lobrasciano's Estate, 38 Misc. 415, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1044, and Carpigiani v. Hall, 172 Ala. 287, 55 South. 248, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 651, as holding that it is within the treaty-making power, and contra, Succession of Thompson, 9 La. Ann. 96 (but going off on another point). See INTERVENE.

Treaties should be liberally construed, so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties to secure equality and reciprocity between them; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642. When made with an Indian tribe its words are to be construed as an Indian would understand them; Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 1, 44 L. Ed. 49. A liberal construction is to be preferred; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628. A strict construction was adopted in The Neck, 138 Fed. 144. A treaty is to be construed by the same rules of decision as a statute; Maiorano v. R. Co., 216 Pa. 402, 65 Atl. 1077, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 271, 116 Am. St. Rep. 778. While they are to be liberally construed, they are to be read in the light of conditions existing when entered into, with a view to effecting the objects of the parties; Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 453.

Where a treaty is made in two languages and each version is "original," neither version controls the other; U. S. v. De La Maza Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691, 8 L. Ed. 547. In the treaty between the United States and the kingdom of Tonga, two copies were signed as originals, one in English and the other in Tongan, and as the American commissioner did not understand the Tongan language, while the Tongan commissioner understood both languages, a provision was inserted that in case of difference in meaning the English version should control.

In B. Altman & Co. v. U. S., 224 U. S. 583, 32 Sup. Ct. 593, 56 L. Ed. 894, the question was raised but not decided, as to whether under the provisions of the constitution of the United States an agreement is a treaty unless made by the president and ratified by two-thirds of the senate.

TREATY OF PEACE. A treaty of peace is an agreement or contract made by belligerent powers, in which they agree to lay down their arms, and by which they stipulate the conditions of peace and regulate the manner in which it is to be restored and supported. Vattel, b. 4, c. 2, § 9.

Peace may be restored between belligerents by the cessation of hostilities; by the submission of one belligerent to another; and by a treaty of peace between the belligerents; 3 Phill. Int. L. 772; a formal declaration that war has ceased is not necessary; id. The belligerents may agree that territory and other property shall be restored as they were before the war, that is, according to the status quo ante bellum; or that they shall remain as they were at the end of the war, which is expressed by the formula, uti possidetis (q. v.).

Overtures of peace may be made by either belligerent; or by a neutral; or by a state acting as a passive ally of either belligerent; or a neutral power may act as a mediator or interpose its good offices; 3 Phill. Int. L. 775.

Peace renders unlawful every act of force or violence between the states, and a capture, though made by a person ignorant of the completion, must be restored; 3 Phill. Int. L. 777; territory occupied after the treaty of peace must be evacuated, prisoners must be liberated, and contributions imposed must be repaid; 2 Opp. § 272. Where a period has been fixed by the treaty of peace for the cessation of hostilities, there is a difference of opinion as to whether a capture made before that period, but with knowledge of the peace, is lawful; that it is, see 1 Kent *172; 3 Phill. Int. L. 779. Where a capture was made before the period fixed for a cessation of hostilities, and in ignorance of the peace, and after the period, but in ignorance of the peace, there was a recapture, the recapture was held unlawful; the intervention of peace barred the title of the owner; 1 Kent 173; 6 C. Rob. 138.

TREBLE COSTS. In England, the taxed costs and three-fourths of the same added thereto. It is computed by adding one-half for double costs, and in addition one-half of one-half for treble costs. 1 Chitty, Pr. 27.

In American Law. In Pennsylvania the party is allowed three times the usual costs, with the exception that the fees of the officers are not to be trebled when they are not regularly or usually payable by the defendant; Shoemaker v. Nesbit, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 201.

TREBLE DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

TREBUCKET. The name of an engine of punishment, said to be synonymous with tumbrel.

TREE. A woody plant, the branches of which spring from, and are supported upon, a trunk or body. It may be young or old, small or great. Clay v. Tel. Co., 70 Miss. 411, 11 South. 658.

Trees are part of the real estate while growing and before they are severed from the freehold; but as soon as they are cut down they are personal property. Some trees are timber trees, while others do not bear that denomination. See TIMBER.

Trees belong to the owner of the land where they grow. When the roots grow into the adjoining land, the owner of such land may lawfully claim a right to hold the tree in common with the owner of the land where it was planted; but if the branches only overshadow the adjoining land, and the roots do not enter it, the tree wholly belongs to the owner of the estate where the roots grow; 1 Ld. Raym. 737. See Rehoboth & Seekonk v. Hunt, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 224; Putney v. Day, 6 N. H. 430, 25 Am. Dec. 470. When the tree grows directly on the boundary-line, so that the line passes through it, it is the property of both owners, whether it be marked as a boundary or not; Musch v. Burkhart, 83 Ia. 301, 48 N. W. 1025, 12 L. R. A. 484, 32 Am. St. Rep. 305; Relyea v. Beaver, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 547; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645. As to sales of standing timber, see TIMBER; SALE.

The owner of trees in a highway is held, in Hazlehurst v. Mayes, 84 Miss. 7, 36 South. 33, 64 L. R. A. 805, to have no right of action for the necessary trimming of them for the installation of an electric-lighting system for the municipality; contra, Moore v. Light Co., 163 N. C. 300, 79 S. E. 596; Norman M. & G. Co. v. Bethurem (Okla.) 139 Pac. 830. An abutting owner has an equitable interest in a tree grown by him on the street, the fee of which is in the city, and may sue for an injury thereto; id.; he has a property in shade trees on the sidewalk, subject to the city's right; Moore v. Light Co., 163 N. C. 300, 79 S. E. 596.

A street commissioner may remove trees standing within the limits of a street, if reasonably necessary to the proper construction of the sidewalk which the city council has directed him to build; Wilson v. Simmons, 89 Me. 242, 36 Atl. 380.

Where the branches of a tree growing upon the land of one person overhang that of his neighbor, one may, without notice, cut off so much of a tree as overhangs his land, if he can do so without going upon the land of the owner, and such owner cannot acquire, either by prescription or the statute of limitations, the right to overhang his neighbor's land; [1895] App. Cas. 1, affirming [1894] 3 Ch. 1; and where a tree stands on the dividing line between adjoining lots, either owner may cut off branches or roots extending over his own land; Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L. R. A. 582, distinguishing Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; but it has been held that an injunction will lie to restrain an adjoining owner of a rural lot from destroying a tree growing on the division line; Comfort v. Everhardt, 35 W. N. C. Pa. 364. The owner of land on which a partially decayed tree is permitted to stand in such position that by falling it would damage the house of another, is liable for damages caused by its falling after he has been notified that it was dangerous; Gibson v. Denton, 4 App. Div. 198, 38 N. Y. Supp. 554.

TRESAILE, or TRESAYLE. The grandfather's grandfather. 1 Bla. Com. 186.

TRESPASS. An unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, causing injury to the person, property, or relative rights of another.

Any unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, to the person, property, or rights of another.

Any unauthorized entry upon the realty of another to the damage thereof.

The wanton and unnecessary destruction of the property of another in removing it where there is a right to do so, as, for example, in abating a nuisance or putting out of the way an obstruction of a highway, constitutes a trespass; Beardslee v. French, 7 Conn. 125, 18 Am. Dec. 86. "Throughout the Middle Ages, trespass is regarded as a crime;" Maitland, 2 Sel. Essays Anglo Amer. Leg. Hist. 589.

In determining the nature of the act, neither the amount of violence or the intent with which it is offered, nor the extent of the damage accomplished or the purpose for which the act was committed, are of any importance: since a person who enters upon the land of another without leave, to lead off his own runaway horse, and who breaks a blade of grass in so doing, commits a trespass; Heermance v. Vernoy, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 5.

It is said that some damage must be committed to make an act a trespass. It is undoubtedly true that damage is required to constitute a trespass for which an action will lie; but, so far as the tort itself is concerned, it seems more than doubtful if the mere commission of an act affecting another, without legal authority, does not constitute trespass, though until damage is done the law will not regard it, inasmuch as the law does not regard trifles. See infra.

The distinction between the different classes of trespass is of importance in determining the nature of the remedy.

A trespass committed with force is said to be done vi et armis; one committed by entry upon the realty, by breaking the close.

In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for the injury sustained by the plaintiff, as the immediate consequence of some wrong done forcibly to his person or property, against the person committing the same.

The action of trespass, properly so called, is distinguished from trespass on the case, which is an action for injuries committed without force, and is usually termed simply case (q. v.). In states where common law forms of actions are still used, the distinction between trespass and trespass on the case is generally abolished by statute and a declaration good for either is good for both. In other states, either action is known merely as an action of tort and in others as a civil action.

The action lies for injuries to the person of the plaintiff, as, by assault and battery, wounding, imprisonment, and the like; Beecher v. Parmele, 9 Vt. 352, 31 Am. Dec. 633; Andre v. Johnson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 375.

It lies, also, for forcible injuries to the person of another, whereby a direct injury is done to the plaintiff in regard to his rights as parent, master, etc.; Akerley v. Haines, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 292; Hornketh v. Barr, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 36, 11 Am. Dec. 568. It does not lie for mere non-feasance, nor where the matter affected was not tangible.

An action of trespass at common law will lie in a state court by the owner of one vessel against the owner of another for damages by fire at a wharf; Chappell v. Bradshaw, 128 U. S. 132, 9 Sup. Ct. 40, 32 L. Ed. 369.

The action lies for injuries to personal property, which may be committed by the several acts of unlawfully striking, chasing if alive, and carrying away to the damage of the plaintiff, a personal chattel; 1 Wms. Saund. 84; of which another is the owner and in possession; Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97; and for the removal or injury of inanimate personal property; Robinson v. Mansfield, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 139; Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 348, 4 Am. Dec. 368; of which another has the possession, actual, or constructive; Daniels v. Pond, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 369, 32 Am. Dec. 269; Hoyt v. Gelston & Schenck, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 141; Dallam v. Fitler, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 323; without the owner's assent. A naked possession or right to immediate possession is sufficient to support this action; Carter v. Simpson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 535; Hower v. Geesaman, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 251; Whitney v. Ladd, 10 Vt. 165.

An action lies for an unintentional act of trespass, even if there is no malice; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234; but a man who accidentally shoots another, without negligence, is not liable in an action of trespass; [1891] 1 Q. B. 86. See Wilson v. Live Stock Co., 153 U. S. 39, 14 Sup. Ct. 768, 38 L. Ed. 627; TRESPASSER.

The action lies also for injuries to the realty consequent upon entering without right upon another man's land (breaking his close). The inclosure may be purely imaginary; Dougherty v. Stepp, 18 N. C. 371; but reaches to the sky and to the centre of the earth; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234.

Where the rightful owner of land, entitled to the immediate possession, attempts to recover it, he is not liable in a civil action of trespass for assault upon a trespasser, if he used no more force than was necessary for the expulsion of the intruder; Souter v. Codman, 14 R. I. 119, 51 Am. Rep. 364; Low v. Elwell, 121 Mass. 310, 23 Am. Rep. 272; Bristol v. Burr, 120 N. Y. 427, 24 N. E. 937, 8 L. R. A. 710; Walker v. Chanslor, 153 Cal. 118, 94 Pac. 606, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, and note, 126 Am. St. Rep. 61. But in such case, where the question of criminal liability is raised, it is held that the owner has no right to resort to force to regain his possession, Com. v. Haley, 4 Allen (Mass.) 318; State v. Bradbury, 67 Kan. 808, 74 Pac. 231; Terrell v. State, 37 Tex. 442; Hickey v. U. S., 168 Fed.

536, 93 C. C. A. 616, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728; and the same rule was said to apply with respect to recovering possession of real or personal property; Corey v. People, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 262. But as to the use of force by the owner to recover possession of them, there is not unanimity of decision. The right to use such force as is reasonably necessary was upheld in Hamilton v. Arnold, 116 Mich. 684, 75 N. W. 133; Wright v. So. Exp. Co., 80 Fed. 85; Heminway v. Heminway, 58 Conn. 443, 19 Atl. 766; Hopkins v. Dickson, 59 N. H. 235; at least short of wounding or the use of a dangerous weapon; Com. v. Donahue, 148 Mass. 529, 20 N. E. 171, 12 Am. St. Rep. 591, 2 L. R. A. 623, and note. In that case the transaction involved but a momentary parting with the possession of money tendered on condition that it was to be accepted as payment in full, and the other party having taken the money and then repudiated the condition, it was retaken by force, which Holmes, J., said was justified "by ancient and modern authority," citing among others two cases in that court. The case of Churchill v. Hulbert, infra, was entirely different, turning on the right to enter upon the freehold of the other party under an irrevocable license and it can scarcely be considered as deciding the precise point under consideration. The same is true of Drury v. Hervey, infra, which was a case of default on a conditional sale, and it was held that possession of the chattel could not be forcibly resumed. Among the cases which deny the right to use force are Churchill v. Hulbert, 110 Mass. 42, 14 Am. Rep. 578; Drury v. Hervey, 126 Mass. 519; Bliss v. Johnson, 73 N. Y. 529; Monson v. Lewis, 123 Wis. 583, 101 N. W. 1094; Stanley v. Payne, 78 Vt. 235, 62 Atl. 495, 112 Am. St. Rep. 911, 6 Ann. Cas. 501, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251, and note citing cases on both sides of the question.

In an action of trespass, or trespass on the case, on land, the courts cannot try the title to the land; Johnson v. Gravel Co., 86 Fed. 269, 30 C. C. A. 35. An action for trespass on land is a local action and can be brought only within the state in which the land lies; Ellenwood v. Chair Co., 158 U. S. 105, 15 Sup. Ct. 771, 39 L. Ed. 913.

An injunction will lie to restrain a trespass when the injury is irreparable, or when the trespass is a continuing one, as by cutting trees on forest land; King v. Stuart, 84 Fed. 546; Pom. Eq. Jur. 165, § 1357; or repeated trespasses upon a door yard for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a fence there; Miller v. Hoeschler, 121 Wis. 558, 99 N. W. 228, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, with note on injunctions to compel or prevent the erection, maintenance or removal of fences or gates. See INJUNCTION.

The plaintiff must be in possession with some title; 5 East 485; Stuyvesant v. Tompkins, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 61; Bigelow v. Lehr, 4 Watts (Pa.) 377; Kempton v. Cook, 4 Pick.

(Mass.) 305; Zell v. Ream, 31 Pa. 304; Adkinson v. Simmons, 33 N. C. 417; though mere title is sufficient where no one is in possession; Buck v. Aiken, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 466, 19 Am. Dec. 535; Goodrich v. Hathaway, 1 Vt. 485, 18 Am. Dec. 701; as in case of an owner to the centre of a highway; Avery v. Maxwell, 4 N. H. 36; and mere possession is sufficient against a wrongdoer; State v. Blackwell, 9 Ala. 82; or a stranger; Witt v. R. Co., 38 Minn. 122, 35 N. W. 862; Bayington v. Squires, 71 Wis. 276, 37 N. W. 227; and the possession may be by an agent; Davis v. Clancy, 3 McCord (S. C.) 422; but not by a tenant; Lienow v. Ritchie, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 235; other than a tenant at will; Hingham v. Sprague, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 102. But a person holding lands under a contract of sale without any possessory rights before payment, cannot maintain an action; Des Jardins v. Boom Co., 95 Mich. 140, 54 N. W. 718.

An action will not lie unless some damage is committed; but slight damage only is required; Cortelyou v. Van Brundt, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 357, 3 Am. Dec. 439; Bragg v. Laraway, 65 Vt. 673, 27 Atl. 492. Some damage must have been done to sustain the action; Massey v. Trantham, 2 Bay (S. C.) 421; though it may have been very slight: as, breaking glass; Coolidge v. Williams, 4 Mass. 140; Jeffries v. Hargis, 50 Ark. 65, 6 S. W. 328; Little Pittsburg C. M. Co. v. Min. Co., 11 Colo. 223, 17 Pac. 760, 7 Am. St. Rep. 226.

But "with respect to damages as an essential the common law recognizes two kinds of actions. In the first class there is a direct invasion of another's person or property without permission, which is actionable per se, or which gives rise to a presumption of at least some damage, without proof of any actual damage. Unpermitted contact with the person constitutes assault and battery. Unpermitted invasion of premises constitutes a trespass quare clausum fregit. In the second class, actions on the case, in which the damages are indirect and consequential, there can be no recovery, unless the plaintiff shows, as an essential part of his case, that damages, pecuniary in kind, proximate in sequence and substantial in extent have resulted"; Whittaker v. Stangvick, 100 Minn. 386, 111 N. W. 295, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921, 117 Am. Rep. 703, 10 Ann. Cas. 528; and see TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT.

The action will not lie where the defendant has a justification sufficient to excuse the act committed, though he acted without authority from the owner or the person affected; 8 Law Rep. 77. See JUSTIFICATION; TRESPASSER.

Necessarily exceptions have from time to time been recognized to the rule that any entry upon the land of another without his consent is a trespass. An entry may be justified in the course of legal proceedings as where an officer is required to make a levy under an execution; Haggerty v. Wilber, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 287, 8 Am. Dec. 321; an execution; Bell v. Douglass, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 397; Fullerton v. Mack, 2 Aikens (Vt.) 415; or an arrest; State v. Oliver, 2 Houst. (Del.) 585; Com. v. Reynolds, 120 Mass. 190, 21 Am. Rep. 510; State v. Smith, 1 N. H. 346. Indeed with respect to the right to enter upon land the public necessity and convenience is a justification as in so many other cases, as, for example, where the destruction of property in time of war is required for the public defence; U. S. v. R. Co., 120 U. S. 227, 7 Sup. Ct. 490, 30 L. Ed. 634; Respublica v. Sparhawk, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 357, 1 L. Ed. 174; Salt Peter Case, 12 Rep. 12; or safety, as to prevent a general conflagration; Metallic C. C. Co. v. R. Co., 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 69, 58 Am. Dec. 385; or the spread of a contagious disease; Seavey v. Preble, 64 Me. 120.

In many cases there is held to be an implied license as from habitual use of a foot path without objection; Driscoll v. Cement Co., 37 N. Y. 637, 97 Am. Dec. 761; or space under a sidewalk; West Chicago Masonic Ass'n v. Cohn, 192 Ill. 210, 61 N. E. 439, 55 L. R. A. 235, 85 Am. St. Rep. 327, reversing 94 Ill. App. 333. A private owner may enter without force seeking the recovery of land; Fort Dearborn Lodge v. Klein, 115 Ill. 177, 3 N. E. 272, 56 Am. Rep. 133; or of personal property; Madden v. Brown, 8 App. Div. 454, 40 N. Y. Supp. 714; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moline Plow Co., 13 Ind. App. 225, 41 N. E. 480; or to abate a nuisance; Lancaster Turnpike Co. v. Rogers, 2 Pa. 114, 44 Am. Dec. 179; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Goodale, 46 N. H. 53. In some cases accident may excuse trespass but it must be unintentional, unavoidable and without fault on the part of the trespasser; Jennings v. Fundeburg, 4 McCord (S. C.) 161; and mere mistake is not a justification; Hobart v. Hagget, 12 Me. 67, 28 Am. Dec. 159. So also an entry which would ordinarily be a trespass is sometimes justified on the ground of necessity as where the highway is impassable and one travelling over it must go upon private property around the obstruction; Morey v. Fitzgerald, 56 Vt. 487, 48 Am. Rep. 811; Campbell v. Race, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 408, 54 Am. Dec. 728; though he must go upon it near the highway and use as little as possible; White v. Wiley, 59 Hun, 618, 13 N. Y. Supp. 205; other cases which have been recognized as sufficient to prevent an entry from being a trespass are, saving goods of the owner or of a third person from destruction by water or fire; Proctor v. Adams, 113 Mass. 376, 18 Am. Rep. 500; 20 Vin. Abr. Trespass (H. a. 4), pl. 24; ibid (K. a.) pl. 3; (though this was a case of trespass to personal property); the preservation of life; Mouses' Case, 12

Rep. 63; see Respublica v. Sparhawk, supra; crossing another's land when in flight for safety from an attack; 6 Bacon, Abr. Trespass, 674; or mooring to a dock for safety in a storm; Ploof v. Putnam, 81 Vt. 471, 71 Atl. 188, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1072, 15 Ann. Cas. 1151; and such necessity was held sufficient to justify a violation of the embargo act; The Brig William Gray, 1 Paine, 16, Fed. Cas. No. 17,694. But where a right of entry is claimed by reason of necessity, it must be some such overruling one as indicated by those enumerated, and it must arise without fault in the trespasser; 6 Bacon, Abr. Trespass, 674; Anon., Y. B. 6 Ed. IV, 7 pl. 18. Such excuses are not sufficient as family affection or charity; Neilson v. Brown, 13 R. I. 651, 43 Am. Rep. 58; Parlet v. Bowman, 2 Rolle, Abr. 567; or the pursuit of wild animals or game; Glenn v. Kays, 1 Ill. App. 479; Paul v. Summerhayes, 4 Q. B. D. 9.

The declaration must contain a concise statement of the injury complained of, whether to the person, personal or real property, and it must allege that the injury was committed vi et armis and contra pacem. See CONTINUANDO.

The plea of not guilty raises the general issue, and under it the defendant may give in evidence any facts which show that the property was not in possession of the plaintiff rightfully as against the defendant at the time of the injury, or that the injury was not committed by the defendant with force. Other matters must, in general, be pleaded specially. See TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM. Matters in justification, as, authority by law; Burton v. Sweaney, 4 Mo. 1; defence of the defendant's person or property, taking a distress on premises other than those demised, etc.; 1 Chitty, Pl. 439; custom to enter; Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 145, 16 Am. Dec. 333; right of way; Strout v. Berry, 7 Mass. 385; etc., must be specially pleaded. In trespass at common law the declaration need not describe the close on which the trespass was committed; Meixsell v. Feezor, 43 Ill. App. 180.

Judgment is for the damages assessed by the jury when for the plaintiff, and for costs when for the defendant.

Where debt in trespass pays the judgment, title passes as by analogy to sale; Williston, Sales, sec. 4. See JUSTIFICATION.

As to the early history of trespass, see 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 307, where it is called the "Fertile mother of actions." See 3 Harv. L. Rev. 177, by Maitland.

TRESPASS DE BONIS ASPORTATIS (Lat. de bonis asportatis, for goods which have been carried away).

A form of action brought by the owner of goods to recover damages for unlawfully taking and carrying them away. Ricker v. Kelly, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 117, 10 Am. Dec. 33. It is no answer to the action that the defendant has returned the goods; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 36 (II). See Ames' Lect. on Leg. Hist. 56.

TRESPASS FOR MESNE PROFITS. A form of action supplemental to an action of ejectment, brought against the tenant in possession to recover the profits which he has unlawfully received during the time of his occupation. 3 Bla. Com. 205; 4 Burr. 1668. See MESNE PROFITS.

TRESPASS ON THE CASE. The form of action by which a person seeks to recover damages caused by an injury unaccompanied with force or which results indirectly from the act of the defendant. It is more generally called, simply, case. See CASE.

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT (Lat. quare clausum fregit, because he had broken the close). The form of action which lies to recover damages for injuries to the realty consequent upon entry without right upon the plaintiff's land.

Close means the interest a person has in any piece of ground, whether enclosed or not; when the plaintiff had not an interest in the soil, but an interest in the profits only, trespass may be maintained; 2 Wheat. Selw. [1340].

Mere possession is sufficient to enable one having it to maintain the action; Gault v. Jenkins, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 488; Branson v. Studabaker, 133 Ind. 147, 33 N. E. 98; Langdon v. Templeton, 61 Vt. 119, 17 Atl. 839; except as against one claiming under the rightful owner; Harris v. Gillingham, 6 N. H. 9, 23 Am. Dec. 701; Webb v. Sturtevant, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 181; Richardson v. Murrill, 7 Mo. 333; Marks v. Sullivan, 8 Utah, 406, 32 Pac. 668, 20 L. R. A. 590; and no one but the tenant can have the action; Holmes v. Seely, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 507; except in case of tenancies at will or by a less secure holding; Woodruff v. Halsey, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 333, 19 Am. Dec. 329. It cannot be maintained if defendant was in possession of the locus in quo at the time of the alleged trespass, and for some years before; Collins v. Beatty, 148 Pa. 65, 23 Atl. 982. See CLOSE.

The action lies where an animal of the defendant breaks the plaintiff's close, to his injury; Dolph v. Ferris, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 367, 42 Am. Dec. 246.

"In trespass quare clausum fregit, it is immaterial whether the quantum of harm suffered be great, little, or unappreciable;" Whittaker v. Stangvick, 100 Minn. 386, 111 N. W. 295, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921, 117 Am. St. Rep. 703, 10 Ann. Cas. 528; where it was held that shooting guns over another's land was a wrong which, being planned to be repeated or continuous, would be prevented by injunction. As to damages as an essential in trespass. See TRESPASS.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE. The name of the action used in South Carolina for the recovery of the possession of real property and damages for any trespass committed upon the same by the defendant.

TRESPASS VI ET ARMIS (Lat. with force and arms). The form of action which lies to recover damages for an injury which is the immediate consequence of a forcible wrongful act done to the person or personal property; Caldwell v. Julian, 2 Mill. Const. (S. C.) 294. It is distinguished from case in this, that the injury in case is the indirect result of the act done. See CASE.

TRESPASSER. One who does an unlawful act, or a lawful act in an unlawful manner, to the injury of the person or property of another. Any act which is injurious to the property of another renders the doer a trespasser, unless he has authority to do it from the owner or custodian; Bradley v. Davis, 14 Me. 44, 30 Am. Dec. 729; or by law; Ludington v. Peck, 2 Conn. 700; Warner v. Shed, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 138; and in this latter case any defect in his authority, as, want of jurisdiction by the court; Allen v. Gray, 11 Conn. 95; Adkins v. Brewer, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 206, 15 Am. Dec. 264; defective or void proceedings; Baldwin v. Whittier, 16 Me. 33; Allen v. Greenlee, 12 N. C. 370; misapplication of process; Wickliffe v. Sanders, 6 T. B. Mour. (Ky.) 296; renders him liable as a trespasser.

So, too, the commission of a legal act in an illegal manner, as, the execution of legal process illegally; Case v. Shepherd, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 27; abuse of legal process; Ragsdale v. Bowles, 16 Ala. 62; exceeding the authority conferred by the owner; Abbott v. Wood, 13 Me. 115; or by law; Oystead v. Shed, 13 Mass. 520, 7 Am. Dec. 172; Kuhn v. North, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 399; renders a man a trespasser. A ministerial officer, where it is his duty to act, cannot be made a trespasser; Harding v. Woodcock, 137 U. S. 43, 11 Sup. Ct. 6, 34 L. Ed. 580; and acting in obedience to process regular on its face, and issued by a tribunal having jurisdiction and power to issue the process, is not liable for its regular enforcement, although errors may have been committed by the tribunal which issued it; Stutsman Co. v. Wallace, 142 U. S. 293, 12 Sup. Ct. 227, 35 L. Ed. 1018. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

In all these cases where a man begins an act which is legal by reason of some authority given him, and then becomes a trespasser by subsequent acts, he is held to be a trespasser ab initio (from the beginning), q. v.

A person may be a trespasser by ordering such an act done as makes the doer a trespasser; Blake v. Jerome, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 406; or by subsequently assenting, in some cases; Floyd v. Browne, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 121, 18 Am. Dec. 602; or assisting, though not present; Prince v. Flynn, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 240.

It seems that a verdict for the plaintiff in quare clausum fregit does not operate as an estoppel in a subsequent action of ejectment; Stevens v. Hughes, 31 Pa. 381.

TRESPASSER AB INITIO. A term applied to denote that one who has commenced a lawful act in a proper manner, has performed some unlawful act, or some lawful act in an unlawful manner, so connected with the previous act that he is to be regarded as having acted unlawfully from the beginning. See 6 Carpenters' Case, 8 Co. 146; s. c. 1 Sm. L. C. *216; Webb's Poll. Torts. See AB INITIO; Ames' Lect. on Leg. Hist. 56.

TRIAL. In Practice. The examination before a competent tribunal, according to the laws of the land, of the facts put in issue in a cause, for the purpose of determining such issue. U. S. v. Curtis, 4 Mas. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 14,905.

The examination of the matter of fact in issue in a cause. The decision of the issue of fact; Steph. Pl. 77; Deane v. Bridge Co., 22 Or. 167, 29 Pac. 440, 15 L. R. A. 614.

The final examination and decision of matter of law as well as facts for which every antecedent step is a preparation; Carpenter v. Winn, 221 U. S. 533, 31 Sup. Ct. 683, 55 L. Ed. 842.

"Trial," as used in the acts of congress of July 27, 1866, and March 2, 1867, appropriately designates a trial by the jury of an issue which will determine the facts in an action at law; and "final hearing," in contradistinction to hearings upon interlocutory matters, the hearing of a cause upon its merits by a judge sitting in equity; Galpin v. Critchlow, 112 Mass. 343, 17 Am. Rep. 176; Home L. Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 214, 22 L. Ed. 68.

Undoubtedly the word "trial" in the common law meant the examination and determination of the case upon the facts, and the word was usually applied to a trial by jury; "hearing" was used with respect to cases in equity. The word "trial" is now used not only colloquially but by courts, with a more comprehensive signification, and it has been defined to be "the examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts or law put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining such issue"; Finn v. Spagnoli, 67 Cal. 330, 7 Pac. 746; In re Chauncey, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 429, 431; Second N. Bk. of Grand Forks v. Bank, 8 N. D. 50, 76 N. W. 504; including all the steps in the case from the submission to the jury to the rendering of the judgment; Castellaw v. Blanchard, 106 Ga. 97, 31 S. E. 801; or before a judge who has jurisdiction of it; Bullard v. Kuhl, 54 Wis. 544, 11 N. W. 801 (citing Jacob's Law Dict. Tit. "Trial"). In many cases it is said to be a judicial examination of the issues in a case; Tingley v. Dolby, 13 Neb. 371, 14 N. W. 146, 148; Miller v. King, 32 App. Div. 349, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1041; or in an action; Spencer v. Thistle, 13 Neb. 227, 229, 13 N. W. 214; Trustees of Swan Tp. v. McClannahan, 53

Ohio St. 403, 42 N. E. 34; or of the issues between parties, whether of law or fact; Vertrees' Adm'r v. Newport News & M. V. R. Co., 95 Ky. 314, 25 S. W. 1 (and this is the expression in many state codes and statutes); and the "trial" is not concluded until finally submitted to the court, referee or jury; Mygatt v. Wilcox, 35 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 410; or until the decision is reduced to writing and signed by the judge; Connolly v. Ashworth, 98 Cal. 205, 33 Pac. 60. The word has been applied to the decision of issues arising on demurrer; Alley v. Nott, 111 U. S. 472, 4 Sup. Ct. 495, 28 L. Ed. 491; Hume v. Woodruff, 26 Or. 373, 38 Pac. 191; Pratt v. Lincoln County, 61 Wis. 62, 20 N. W. 726; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 118 Ind. 170, 20 N. E. 711; to an inquest which was said to be by a trial of issue of fact where the plaintiff alone introduced testimony; Haines v. Davis, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 118; or a feigned issue out of chancery as to the amount due on a land contract; Parks v. Andrews, 56 Hun, 391, 10 N. Y. Supp. 344.

"Trial" has been held not to include a decision on demurrer that the plea in abatement was bad; Winet v. Berryhill, 55 Ia. 411, 7 N. W. 681; the taking of proof before a master to dispose of a motion for an injunction pendente lite; Doughty v. W. Bradley & C. Mfg. Co., 8 Blatchf. 107, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,030; the hearing of a case on appeal where the object is to correct errors of the trial court; Eldridge v. Strenz, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 295; the granting of an allowance in a divorce case; Stewart v. Stewart, 28 Ind. App. 378, 62 N. E. 1023; a hearing before a mayor for the removal of a city official; Avery v. Studley, 74 Conn. 272, 50 Atl. 752; a question of taxation of costs of the marshal, before the United States supreme court, on a certificate of division; Bank of U. S. v. Green, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 26, 8 L. Ed. 307; or the presentation or determination of a motion for a new trial; McDermott v. Halleck, 65 Kan. 403, 69 Pac. 335.

The precise meaning of the word "trial" has become material in the construction of statutes regulating appeal or error costs, criminal procedure, voluntary non-suits, the removal of causes and official fees. The trial was held to be used, not in its limited and restricted, but in its general, sense, including all the steps of a criminal case from its submission to the court or jury to the rendering of the judgment; Hotsenpiller v. State, 144 Ind. 9, 43 N. E. 234. In such a statute it includes as well an issue of law as an issue of fact; Redington v. Cornwell, 90 Cal. 49, 27 Pac. 40; but pleading is not a part of the trial; it does not commence until an issue of fact is joined, so that an error in overruling a demurrer is not an error in law occurring at the trial; Mechanics' Sav. Bank v. Harding, 65 Kan. 655, 70 Pac. 655; but it includes the impanelling of a jury;

Palmer v. State, 42 Ohio St. 596; and commences at last immediately after they are sworn; Wagner v. State, 42 Ohio St. 537.

Within statutes authorizing extra allowances, there is no trial where no issue is joined on the pleadings; Randolph v. Foster, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 648; but there was a trial where the plaintiff voluntarily submitted to a non-suit after evidence had been taken on both sides and the summing up was begun; Allaire v. Lee, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. 609. In a criminal case the trial does not include the arraignment and other preliminary proceedings before the jury is sworn; Com. v. Soderquest, 183 Mass. 199, 66 N. E. 801; Byers v. State, 105 Ala. 31, 16 South. 716; nor the holding to bail upon an examination; State v. Gerry, 68 N. H. 495, 38 Atl. 278, 38 L. R. A. 228; it does not extend to the act of pronouncing a sentence; Reed v. State, 147 Ind. 41, 46 N. E. 135.

Trial by certificate is a mode of trial allowed by the English law in those cases where the evidence of the person certifying is the only proper criterion of the point in dispute.

Trial by grand assize is a peculiar mode of trial allowed in writs of right. See ASSIZE; GRAND ASSIZE.

Publicity. To insure fairness a trial must be in public. Where an order was made to admit to a trial, where the testimony was known to be of a decidedly loathsome and disgusting character, none except jury, counsel, members of the bar, newspaper men and one witness, it was held on appeal to infringe the constitutional right to "a speedy and public trial," and failure to protest at the time would not constitute a waiver of it, which could not be done by mere silence; State v. Hensley, 75 Ohio St. 255, 79 N. E. 402, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277, 116 Am. St. Rep. 734, 9 Ann. Cas. 108; People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276, 50 N. W. 995, 14 L. R. A. 809, 28 Am. St. Rep. 294; contra, State v. Callahan, 100 Minn. 63, 110 N. W. 342. The similar provision in the federal constitution is contained in the 6th amendment, which is one of those held to apply only to the federal government and not to judicial proceedings in the state courts, and hence that requirement of a public trial is held to affect only the United States courts; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 166, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 L. Ed. 80. The court may discriminate as to the unlimited admission into the court room of persons whose presence as a class, for any reason will endanger the security of the administration of justice, or prevent the policing of the court; U. S. v. Buck, Fed. Cas. No. 14,680, 4 Phila. 161.

In dealing with this question the courts have ranged in at least three classes their decisions authorizing exclusion: (1) Excluding all persons excepting jury, officers, defendant and counsel; Grimmett v. State, 22 Tex. App. 38, 2 S. W. 631, 58 Am. Rep. 630.

The trial court was justified in ordering the court room cleared because part of the audience laughed and thereby embarrassed the witness, a girl of fourteen, and the testimony was of a vulgar or indecent character, or where the county attorney requested that ladies in attendance should leave the court room as he was about to refer to evidence unfit for them to hear; State v. McCool, 34 Kan. 617, 9 Pac. 745; see note to State v. Hensley, supra, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277. (2) In addition to the persons admitted in the first class, permission was given to the accused to name any special friends he desired to have present. As to sustaining this exclusion there is conflict. In favor of it: People v. Hall, 51 App. Div. 57, 64 N. Y. Supp. 433; but in People v. Yeager, 113 Mich. 228, 71 N. W. 491, it was held that a statute was unconstitutional in denying the right to a public trial which authorized the presiding judge to exclude persons from the court room who were not necessarily in attendance, where it appeared that evidence of licentious, lascivious, degrading or immoral acts or conduct would be given; and in People v. Hartman, 103 Cal. 242, 37 Pac. 153, 42 Am. St. Rep. 108, an order excluding from the court room all persons except those necessary in attendance on account of the character of the testimony was held error. But it has been held that a public trial, when that word is used in the constitution, means not secret, and the right is not violated where all persons were excluded except judge, jurors, witnesses and persons connected with the case; People v. Swafford, 65 Cal. 223, 3 Pac. 809. That a public trial does not necessarily contemplate that every person shall be enabled to gratify a morbid curiosity for indecent detail by being permitted to listen to the recital of disgusting facts, see Benedict v. People, 23 Colo. 126, 46 Pac. 637. (3) To exclude a part of the audience, consisting of children, court loungers, and the like. In supporting this degree of exclusion there are to be found only dicta in some cases, as in State v. Hensley, supra, and two authoritative text writers; Cooley, Prin. Const. L. 320; Wig. Ev. § 1834.

See OPEN COURT.

In Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 27 Sup. Ct. 556, 558, 51 L. Ed. 879, 10 Ann. Cas. 689, it was said by Mr. Justice Holmes: "The theory of our system is that the conclusions to be reached in a case will be induced only by evidence and argument in open court, and not by any outside influence, whether of private talk or public print. What is true with reference to a jury is true also with reference to a court."

Presence of Accused. The rule that in a criminal trial, certainly in case of felony, the accused must be present during the entire proceedings, was a fundamental principle of the common law, repeated in constitutional or statutory provisions, probably in nearly every state, and while the necessity for its strict enforcement may be less urgent than in former times, it is still stringently enforced; French v. State, 85 Wis. 400, 55 N. W. 566, 21 L. R. A. 402, 39 Am. St. Rep. 855; Maurer v. People, 43 N. Y. 1.

A person indicted for a misdemeanor is entitled to be present throughout the trial and particularly to plead at the arraignment; Rose v. State, 20 Ohio 31; but if absent because he cannot be brought into court on account of insanity, or his misbehavior interferes with the trial, it may be conducted in his absence; U. S. v. Davis, 6 Blatchf. 464, Fed. Cas. No. 14,923; Rex v. Mary Browne, 70 J. P. 472, where the defendant was twice removed from the court for misbehavior, and informed that if it was persisted in she should be tried in her absence, and the proof showed that she was capable of behaving otherwise, a plea of not guilty was entered and she was tried and convicted. Where the defendant stands mute at his arraignment, the common law proceeding was to empanel the jury to determine whether he did so through malice or the act of God; in the former case the judge might enter a plea of not guilty; Reg. v. Israel, 2 Cox C. C. 263. See DEAF AND DUMB; MUTE. On this authority it has been contended that in the case of Rex v. Mary Browne, supra, the procedure was wrong and the jury should have been empaneled to determine her ability to plead; 20 Harv. L. R. 235.

In cases of felony, it has been held as a general rule that the accused must be present during the trial and when the verdict is rendered; 1 Bish. Cr. Pr. § 265; but that in cases not capital he might waive the right; State v. Kelly, 97 N. C. 404, 2 S. E. 185, 2 Am. St. Rep. 299; contra, Prine v. Com., 18 Pa. 103; but where the prisoner was indicted for murder and being out on bail left the court room when the jury went out, in his absence a verdict was returned of guilty of manslaughter and the receiving of a verdict in his absence was held reversible error; Sherrod v. State, 93 Miss. 774, 47 So. 554, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 509; but in other cases of felony where the prisoner was out on bail, it was held not error to receive the verdict, it being his privilege to waive the right to be present; Stoddard v. State, 132 Wis. 520, 112 N. W. 453, 13 Ann. Cas. 1211; State v. Waymire, 52 Or. 281, 97 Pac. 46, 132 Am. St. Rep. 699, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 56, and note collecting cases on the subject of waiver. Among the reasons given against the right to waive are that the prisoner should be within the jurisdiction of the court when the verdict is rendered; Andrews v. State, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 550; Sneed v. State, 5 Ark. 431, 41 Am. Dec. 102; Rex v. Ladsingham, T. Raym. 193.

There is quite general recognition of the right to waive being present during trials for misdemeanors; U. S. v. Mayo, 1 Curt. 433, Fed. Cas. No. 15,754; Warren v. State, 19 Ark. 214, 68 Am. Dec. 214; Sahlinger v. People, 102 Ill. 245; State v. Gorman, 113 Minn. 401, 129 N. W. 589, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 306; the rule being purely for the prisoner's benefit, there is no reason why he should not waive it; Wilson v. State, 2 Ohio St. 319; but many judges resist the relaxation of common law rules as did Smith, C. J., in a dissenting opinion in State v. Kelly, supra. The right of the accused to be present when a verdict is returned may be waived, and a verdict may be returned in his absence, if his absence is voluntary while he is at liberty on bond; State v. Way, 76 Kan. 928, 93 Pac. 159, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603; Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, 72 Am. Dec. 195; Lynch v. Com., 88 Pa. 189, 32 Am. Rep. 445. So the flight of the accused during the trial or after submission of the case to the jury is a waiver of the right to be present; U. S. v. Loughery, 13 Blatchf. 267, Fed. Cas. No. 15,631; State v. Kelly, supra; but it was held otherwise in Summeralls v. State, 37 Fla. 162, 20 South. 242, 53 Am. St. Rep. 247; Andrews v. State, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 550. The waiver of the prisoner's right to be present cannot be made by counsel, either expressly; Cook v. State, 60 Ala. 39, 31 Am. Rep. 31; State v. Jenkins, 84 N. C. 812, 37 Am. Rep. 643; or by failure to object; Rose v. State, 20 Ohio 32; Percer v. State, 118 Tenn. 765, 103 S. W. 780; but an express waiver by counsel was held sufficient in Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S. E. 897. And see notes to Gore v. Arkansas, 5 L. R. A. 834; Kansas v. Way, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603.

Conduct of the Judge. Where the judge leaves the court room without suspending proceedings, a new trial is granted, it being a deprivation of liberty without due process of law; People v. Tupper, 122 Cal. 424, 55 Pac. 125, 68 Am. St. Rep. 44; O'Brien v. People, 17 Colo. 561, 31 Pac. 230; Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35; such absence is reversible error; Smith v. Sherwood, 95 Wis. 558, 70 N. W. 682. But where the judge obtains the consent of the defendant's counsel to leave the court room, or his absence cannot prejudice the interest of the defendant, a new trial is not necessarily granted; Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 65, 18 S. E. 536; Turbeville v. State, 56 Miss. 793; and so it was held not error where the judge was absent only for a brief time, where the evidence demanded the verdict rendered, and the absence was known to counsel, and there was no request made to suspend the trial nor any motion for mistrial on his return; Horne v. Rogers, 110 Ga. 362, 35 S. E. 715, 49 L. R. A. 176; contra, Ellerbe v. State, 75 Miss. 522, 22 South. 950, 41 L. R. A. 569.

Suggestions by the trial judge to the jury that in default of agreement they be kept to the end of the term, to save expense to the county, are ground for reversal; North D. C. R. Co. v. McCue (Tex.) 35 S. W. 1080. There ought to be no communication between a judge and a jury after the latter have retired unless in open court and if practicable, in the presence of counsel; Colorado C. C. M. Co. v. Turek, 50 Fed. 888, 2 C. C. A. 67, 4 U. S. App. 290. See PRESENCE; JUDGE; JUDICIAL POWER.

As to the Conduct or misconduct of jurors in a trial, see JURY.

Comment by the Court on Testimony of Defendant. General instructions as to the credit to be given to the testimony of the accused are usually discouraged by the appellate courts whether the effect of it is to invoke the giving of credit to the testimony; Bryant v. State, 116 Ala. 446, 23 South. 40; U. S. v. Borger, 19 Blatch. 249, 7 Fed. 193; or of inducing lack of confidence in it; State v. Wyse, 32 S. C. 45, 10 S. E. 612; State v. Bartlett, 50 Or. 440, 93 Pac. 243, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802, and note where the cases on instructions as to the testimony of the accused person are collected and classified, 126 Am. St. Rep. 751.

Remarks of Counsel. Ordinarily exception does not lie to a remark of counsel, but to the refusal upon proper request to charge the jury with reference to it; Pressy v. R. I. Co. (R. I.) 67 Atl. 447; and if no exception is taken, and no motion made with reference to such remarks, the objection will not be considered on appeal; Nelson v. Shelby etc. Co., 96 Ala. 515, 11 South. 695, 38 Am. St. Rep. 116; State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483; State v. Watson, 63 Me. 128; and if the court requires the objectionable remark to be withdrawn, the error is usually held to be cured; Dunlop v. U. S., 165 U. S. 486, 489, 17 Sup. Ct. 375, 41 L. Ed. 799. The abuse of the privilege of counsel may be sufficiently objectionable to warrant a reversal, though there was no interference by court or opposing counsel; Klink v. People, 16 Colo. 467, 27 Pac. 1062. It has been held error that irrelevant matter was discussed by counsel without objection from his opponent; Willis v. McNeill, 57 Tex. 465; Prather v. McClelland (Tex.) 26 S. W. 657; the duty of correcting the error of counsel in such cases is said to rest with the judge and not the opposing counsel; Berry v. Georgia, 10 Ga. 511.

The latitude to be allowed to courts in denouncing or rebuking counsel in a trial must be regulated largely by discretion, with the single limitation that it shall not prevent a fair trial; Williams v. W. Bay City, 119 Mich. 395, 78 N. W. 328; Laporte v. Cook, 22 R. I. 554, 48 Atl. 793; and the appellate court has no concern with the conduct or language in the trial court except to ascertain whether it constituted legal error; McDuff v. Detroit Even. Jour. Co., 84 Mich. 1., 47 N. W. 671, 22 Am. St. Rep. 673; it will not interfere with the discretion of the trial court unless that has been abused to the prejudice of the complaining party; Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Curb, 66 Fed. 519, 13 C. C. A. 587, 27 U. S. App. 663; but where an attorney was fined for persisting in a style of questioning which had been forbidden by the court, it was held not to affect the conviction of his client in a capital case, and the attorney himself could not complain of it; Grant v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 760, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428, with note, which contains an extensive list of remarks to counsel by the court which have been held to be or not to be prejudicial error.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, the counsel for plaintiff invites the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, if they find that the plaintiff is only entitled to nominal damages, and such verdict is returned, the plaintiff cannot complain that the evidence did not support it; Langdon v. Clarke, 73 Neb. 516, 103 N. W. 62.

The English criminal evidence act of 1898 does not confer on a prisoner the right of giving evidence on his own behalf before the grand jury, nor does it deprive the court of the right to comment on the failure of the prisoner to give evidence at the trial; [1899] 1 Q. B. 77.

Where objectionable remarks are made by counsel in the presence of the jury, a juror may be withdrawn and the cause continued; Benson v. R. Co., 228 Pa. 290, 77 Atl. 492; and where irrelevant or improper remarks are made before the jury by a witness a juror should be withdrawn; Surface v. Bentz, 228 Pa. 610, 77 Atl. 922, 21 Ann. Cas. 215, where the court said that "it is quite as necessary to protect a party against the improper remarks to a jury made by a witness as * * * by counsel. The misconduct of a bystander, in open court, during the progress of a criminal trial, having been suitably dealt with by the judge, furnishes no ground for the discharge of the jury, unless it is of such a nature as to have necessarily influenced the verdict; State v. Wimby, 119 La. 139, 43 South. 984, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, and note, 121 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 Ann. Cas. 643; Bowles v. Com., 103 Va. 816, 48 S. E. 527; State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489, 71 S. W. 1045.

Right of Jury to Hear Shorthand Notes. In some cases it is held that the jury may have the stenographer's notes of evidence read to them as a matter of right; Roberts v. R. Co., 104 Ga. 805, 30 S. E. 966; State v. Perkins, 143 Ia. 55, 120 N. W. 62, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 20 Ann. Cas. 1217; contra, State v. Manning, 75 Vt. 185, 54 Atl. 181; it is within the discretion of the court; id; People v. Shuler, 136 Mich. 161, 98 N. W. 986.

Different Indictments in One Trial. A defendant may be tried before the same jury on different indictments charging separate offences of a kindred nature; Lucas v. State, 144 Ala. 63, 39 South. 821, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412; State v. McNeill, 93 N. C. 552; but it was held otherwise in McClellan v. State, 32 Ark. 609, and Com. v. Bickum, 153 Mass. 386, 26 N. E. 1003. In some cases such consolidation is authorized by statute either of the state; Chesnut v. People, 21 Colo. 512, 42 Pac. 656; though such statute is said to be merely an embodiment of an established common law rule; Cummins v. People, 4 Colo. App. 71, 34 Pac. 734; or of the United States; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429; Williams v. U. S., 168 U. S. 382, 18 Sup. Ct. 92, 42 L. Ed. 509; this applies where two persons are jointly charged in each indictment; Turner v. U. S., 66 Fed. 280, 13 C. C. A. 436, 30 U. S. App. 90; but this statute does not authorize the consolidation of separate indictments against different persons, though for a joint offense; U. S. v. Durkee, Fed. Cas. No. 15,008; or indictments against persons for the same crime committed against the property of different persons at different times; Mac Elroy v. U. S., 164 U. S. 76, 17 Sup. Ct. 31, 41 L. Ed. 355.

Effect of Pleading Guilty on an Appeal. Although the defendant pleads guilty to an indictment which charged no criminal offence, advantage may be taken of it upon writ of error or appeal; Klawnski v. People, 218 Ill. 481, 75 N. E. 1028; Henderson v. State, 60 Ind. 296, and other cases in which the question whether the indictment was sufficient was considered for the first time on appeal; O'Brien v. State, 63 Ind. 242; Hays v. State, 77 Ind. 450; if the defect in the indictment is fatal it may be raised on appeal for the first time; Pattee v. State, 109 Ind. 545, 10 N. E. 421; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; but if it is formal, and may be cured by amendment, it is otherwise; People v. Kelly, 99 Mich. 82, 57 N. W. 1090; King v. State, 3 Tex. App. 7; a failure to demur to an indictment does not waive the objection; People v. Nelson, 58 Cal. 104.

Presumption of Harm. There is a presumption of harm caused by errors in admitting or excluding evidence in a jury trial, and the judgment should be reversed unless absence of harm clearly appears by the record; Crawford v. U. S., 212 U. S. 183, 29 Sup. Ct. 260, 53 L. Ed. 465, 15 Ann. Cas. 392. Crime committed in two districts may be tried where it originated.

Where a conspiracy is charged as entered into in one district, the court thereof has jurisdiction of the offence, although the overt acts were committed in another jurisdiction; Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 25 Sup. Ct. 760, 50 L. Ed. 90, where the court said: "We do not wish to be understood as approving the practice of indicting citizens of distant states in the courts of this district, where an indictment will lie in the state of the domicile of such person, unless in exceptional cases, where the circumstances seem to demand that this course shall be taken." See VENUE.

It is within the discretion of the trial court to allow the introduction of evidence out of the usual order, and in the absence of gross abuse its exercise of this discretion is not reviewable; Goldsby v. U. S., 160 U. S. 70, 16 Sup. Ct. 216, 40 L. Ed. 343. It is also discretionary with the court to admit evidence to prove a point after the testimony is closed; Union P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 51 Fed. 309, 2 C. C. A. 174, 10 U. S. App. 98; and to refuse to allow the examination of witnesses for the purpose of elaborating previous testimony; Sutherland v. Round, 57 Fed. 467, 6 C. C. A. 428, 16 U. S. App. 30.

Where objection is made in a criminal trial to comments on facts not in evidence or exaggerated expressions of the prosecuting officer, the court should interfere and put a stop to them if they are likely to be prejudicial to the accused; Graves v. U. S., 150 U. S. 118, 14 Sup. Ct. 40, 37 L. Ed. 1021.

An objection of disorderly conduct of a trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court; and it is only when such discretion has been abused to the prejudice of the complaining party that the appellate court will interfere; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Curb, 66 Fed. 519, 13 C. C. A. 587, 27 U. S. App. 663.

Judges of courts of equity frequently decide facts upon mere inspection. The most familiar examples are those of cases where the plaintiff prays an injunction on an allegation of piracy or infringement of a patent or copyright; 5 Ves. Ch. 709, and the cases there cited.

Trial at nisi prius. Originally, a trial before a justice in eyre. Afterwards, by Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 30, before a justice of assize; 3 Bla. Com. 353. See NISI PRIUS.

Trial by the record. This trial applies to cases where an issue of nul tiel record is joined in any action.

The trial by record is not only in use when an issue of this kind happens to arise for decision, but it is the only legitimate mode of trying such issue; and the parties cannot put themselves upon the country; Steph. Pl., And. ed. 171; 2 Bla. Com. 330.

Trial by wager of battle. See WAGER OF BATTLE.

Trial by wager of law. See OATH DECISORY; WAGER OF LAW.

Trial by witnesses is a species of trial by witnesses, or per testes, without the intervention of a jury. This is the only method of trial known to the civil law.

In England, when a widow brings a writ of dower and the tenant pleads that the husband is not dead, this, being looked upon as a dilatory plea, is in favor of the widow, and, for greater expedition, allowed to be tried by witnesses examined before the judges; and so, says Finch, shall no other case in our law; Finch, Law 423. But Coke mentions others: as, to try whether the tenant in a real action was duly summoned; or, the validity of a challenge to a juror: so that Finch's observation must be confined to the trial of direct and not collateral issues.

Trial at bar. A species of trial now seldom resorted to, and, as to civil causes, abolished by the Judicature Act, 1875, was one held before all the judges of one of the supreme courts of Westminster, or before a quorum representing the full court. The celebrated case of Reg. v. Castro, otherwise Tichborne v. Orton, L. R. 9 Q. B. 350, was a trial at bar; Brown, Dict. See POSTULATION; OPEN COURT; PUBLIC TRIAL; WITNESS.

As to evidence taken at a former trial, see MEMORANDUM.

See, for an article on the conduct of counsel at trial, 45 Cent. L. J. 292.

TRIAL LIST. A list of cases marked down for trial for any one term.

TRIBUNAL. The seat of a judge; the place where he administers justice. The whole body of judges who compose a jurisdiction. The jurisdiction which the judges exercise.

The term is Latin, and derives its origin from the elevated seat where the tribunes administered justice.

Any court, forum, or judicial body. Anderson's L. Dict.

TRIBUNAUX DE COMMERCE. See COURTS OF FRANCE.

TRIBUTARY. All streams flowing directly or indirectly into a river. [1895] 1 Q. B. 237.

TRIBUTE. A contribution which is sometimes raised by the sovereign from his subjects to sustain the expenses of the state. It is also a sum of money paid by one nation to another under some pretended right. Wolff § 1145.

TRIENNIAL ACT. An act of parliament of 1641, which provided that if in every third year parliament was not summoned and assembled before September 3, it should assemble on the second Monday of the next November.

Also an act of 1694, which provided that a parliament be called within three years after dissolution, and that the utmost limit of a parliament be three years. This was followed by the Septennial Act of 1716.

TRIGAMUS. In Old English Law. One who has been thrice married; one who, at different times and successively, has had three wives.

TRIGILD. In Saxon Law. A triple payment, three times the value of a thing paid as compensation or satisfaction.

TRINEPOS (Lat.). In Roman Law. Great-grandson of a grandchild.

TRINEPTIS (Lat.). Great-granddaughter of a grandchild.

TRINITY HOUSE. See ELDER BRETHREN.

TRINITY SITTINGS. See LONDON AND MIDDLESEX SITTINGS.

TRINITY TERM. See TERM.

TRINIUMGELDUM. An extraordinary offence, consisting of three times nine, or twenty-seven times the single geld or payment. Spelm. Gloss.

TRINKETS. Small articles of personal adornment or use when the object is essentially ornamental. 28 L. J. C. P. 626. See JEWELRY.

TRINODA NECESSITAS (Lat.). The threefold necessary public duties to which all lands were liable by Saxon law,—viz. for repairing bridges, for maintaining castles or garrisons, and for expeditions to repel invasions. 1 Bla. Com. 263.

It fell upon all freemen, or at least upon all free house-holders. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 82. There appear to have been book lands which were free from army-service, bridge-bote, or burh-bote. Maitl. Domesd. Book 273.

TRIOBS. Persons appointed according to law to try whether a person challenged to the favor is or is not qualified to serve on the jury. They do not exceed two in number, without the consent of the prosecutor and defendant, or unless some special case is alleged by one of them, or when only one juror has been sworn and two triors are appointed with him. Co. Litt. 158 a; Bacon, Abr. Juries (E 12).

The method of selecting triors is thus explained. Where the challenge is made to the first juror, the court will appoint two indifferent persons to be triors; if they find him indifferent, he shall be sworn and join the triors in determining the next challenge. But when two jurors have been found impartial and have been sworn, then the office of the triors will cease, and every subsequent challenge will be decided upon by the jurymen. If more than two jurymen have been sworn, the court may assign any two of them to determine the challenges. To the triors thus chosen no challenges can be admitted.

The triors examine the juryman challenged, and decide upon his fitness; Thompson v. People, 3 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 467. Their decision is final. They are liable to punishment for misbehavior in office; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 353; Whelen v. Watmough, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 156; People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 509. The office is abolished in many of the states, the judge acting in their place; Licett v. State, 23 Ga. 57; State v. Knight, 43 Me. 11; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 157, 25 L. Ed. 244.

The lords also chosen to try a peer, when indicted for felony, in the court of the Lord High Steward, are called triors.

TRIPARTITE. Consisting of three parts: as, a deed tripartite, between A of the first part, B of the second part, and C of the third part. See DEED.

TRIPLE ALLIANCE. A treaty between Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy, formed at the close of the Franco-Prussian War (1870-71).

but reclaimed; Amory v. Flynn, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 102, 6 Am. Dec. 316; trees and crops severed from the inheritance; Davis v. Barnes, 3 Mo. 137; James v. Snelson, 3 Mo. 393; Nelson v. Burt, 15 Mass. 204; Sampson v. Hammond, 4 Cal. 184. It will lie by a surviving partner to recover possession of the firm assets as against the representatives of the deceased partners; Hawkins v. Capron, 17 R. I. 679, 24 Atl. 466. It will not lie for property in custody of the law; Jenner v. Joliffe, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 381; if rightfully held; see Kennedy's Heirs v. Kennedy's Heirs, 2 Ala. 576; or to which the title must be determined by a court of peculiar jurisdiction only; 1 Cam. & N. 115; or where the bailee has lost the property, or had it stolen, or it has been destroyed by want of due care; Simmons v. Sikes, 24 N. C. 98. Unless an actual conversion by bailee be shown, an action of trover against him will not lie without a previous demand for the goods; Loveless v. Fowler, 79 Ga. 134, 4 S. E. 103, 11 Am. St. Rep. 407. See CONVERSION.

There must have been a conversion of the property by the defendant; Stone v. Waggoner, 8 Ark. 204. And a waiver of such conversion will defeat the action; Hewes v. Parkman, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 90. Nondelivery of goods by a vessel is not a conversion of the goods; 35 U. S. App. 369. See CONVERSION.

The declaration must state a rightful possession of the goods by the plaintiff; Seivier v. Holliday, Hempst. 160, Fed. Cas. No. 12, 680a; but need not show the nature or evidence of plaintiff's title; Warren v. Dwyer, 91 Mich. 414, 51 N. W. 1062; it must describe the goods with convenient certainty, though not so accurately as in detinue; Bull. N. P. 32; Hall v. Burgess, 5 Gray (Mass.) 12; must formally allege a finding by the defendant, and must aver a conversion; Decker v. Mathews, 12 N. Y. 313. It is not indispensable to state the price or value of the thing converted; Pearpoint v. Henry, 2 Wash. (Va.) 192; and where there is an actual conversion of property, demand before action is not necessary; Baker v. Lothrop, 155 Mass. 376, 29 N. E. 643; Knipper v. Blumenthal, 107 Mo. 665, 18 S. W. 23.

The plea of not guilty raises the general issue.

Judgment, when for the plaintiff, is that he recover his damages and costs, or, in some states, in the alternative, that the defendant restore the goods or pay, etc.; Mitchell v. Printup, 19 Ga. 579; when for the defendant, that he recover his costs. The measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion, with interest; Jenkins v. McConico, 26 Ala. 213; Polk's Adm'r v. Allen, 19 Mo. 467; Forbes v. R. Co., 133 Mass. 158.

TROY WEIGHT. See MEASURES; WEIGHT.

TRUCE. An agreement between belligerent parties by which they mutually engage to forbear all acts of hostility against each other for some time, the war still continuing. At the present day there is no practical distinction between truces and armistices (q. v.).

Arts. 36-41 of the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land lay down the following rules:

"An armistice suspends military operations by mutual agreement between the belligerent parties. If its duration is not defined, the belligerent parties may resume operations at any time, provided always that the enemy is warned within the time agreed upon, in accordance with the terms of the armistice.

"An armistice may be general or local. The first suspends the military operations of the belligerent States everywhere; the second only between certain fractions of the belligerent armies and within a fixed radius.

"An armistice must be notified officially and in good time to the competent authorities and to the troops. Hostilities are suspended immediately after the notification, or on the date fixed.

"It rests with the contracting parties to settle, in the terms of the armistice, what communications may be held in the theatre of war with and between the populations.

"Any serious violation of the armistice by one of the parties gives the other party the right of denouncing it, and even, in cases of urgency, of recommencing hostilities immediately.

"A violation of the terms of the armistice by individuals acting on their own initiative only entitles the injured party to demand the punishment of the offenders, or, if necessary, compensation for the losses sustained."

During the continuance of a truce, either party may do within his own territory or the limits prescribed by the armistice, whatever he could do in time of peace, e. g. levy and march troops, collect provisions, receive reinforcements from his allies, or repair the fortifications of a place not actually besieged; but neither party can do what the continuance of hostilities would have prevented him from doing, e. g. repair fortifications of a besieged place; and all things, the possession of which was especially contested when the truce was made, must remain in their antecedent places; Hall, Int. Law 500; 2 Opp. §§ 231-240.

TRUCE OF GOD (Law L. treuza Dei; Sax. treuge or treua, from Germ. treu; Fr. trêve de Dieu). In the middle ages, a limitation of the right of private warfare introduced by the church. This truce provided that hostilities should cease on holidays, from Thursday evening to Sunday evening of each week, the whole season of Advent and Lent, and the octaves of great festivals. The penalty for breach of the truce was excommuni-

TRIPLE ENTENTE. A treaty between Russia, France and Great Britain, formed early in the 20th century. See Sir T. Barclay's Thirty Years' Anglo-French Reminiscences.

TRIPLICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The reply of the plaintiff (actor) to the rejoinder (duplicatio) of the defendant (reus). It corresponds to the surrejoinder of common law. Inst. 4. 14; Bracton, G. 1. 5, t. 5, c. 1.

TRIPLICATION. A pleading in admiralty, second in order after a replication; now obsolete. See PLEADING.

TRISTIS SUCCESSIO. See HÆREDITAS LUCTUOSA.

TRITAVUS (Lat.). In Roman Law. The male ascendant in the sixth degree. For the female ascendant in the same degree the term is tritavia. In forming genealogical tables this convenient term is still used.

TRITHING (Sax. trithinga). The third part of a county, consisting of three or four hundreds.

A court within the circuit of the trithing, in the nature of a court-leet, but inferior to the county court. Camd. 102. The ridings of Yorkshire are only a corruption of trythings. 1 Bla. Com. 116; Spelm. Gloss. 52.

TRIUMVIRICAPITALES, or TREVIRI, or TRESVIRI. In Roman Law. Officers who had charge of the prison, through whose intervention punishments were inflicted. Salust, in Catilin.

TRIVIAL. Of small importance. It is a rule in equity that a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4237. See MAXIMS, De minimis, etc.

TRONAGE. A customary duty or toll for weighing wool: so called because it was weighed by a common trona, or beam. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12.

TROOPS, FOREIGN. See FOREIGN TROOPS.

TROVER (Fr. trouver, to find). In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages against one who has, without right, converted to his own use goods or personal chattels in which the plaintiff has a general or special property.

A generic name, applied to those torts, arising from the unlawful conversion of any particular piece of personal property owned by another. Spellman v. R. Co., 35 S. C. 475, 14 S. E. 947, 28 Am. St. Rep. 858.

In form it is a fiction: in substance, a remedy to recover the value of personal chattels wrongfully converted by another to his own use. 1 Burr. 31.

The action was originally an action of trespass on the case where goods were found by the defendant and retained against the plaintiff's rightful claim. The manner of gaining possession soon came to be disregarded, as the substantial part of the action is the conversion to the defendant's use; so that the action lies whether the goods came into the defendant's possession by finding or otherwise, if he fails to deliver them upon the rightful claim of the plaintiff. It differs from detinue and replevin in this, that it is brought for damages and not for the specific articles; and from trespass in this, that the injury is not necessarily a forcible one, as trover may be brought in any case where trespass for injury to personal property will lie; but the converse is not true. In case possession was gained by a trespass, the plaintiff by bringing his action in this form waives his right to damages for the taking, and is confined to the injury resulting from the conversion; Greenfield Bank v. Leavitt, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 1, 28 Am. Dec. 268; McNear v. Atwood, 17 Me. 434.

The action lies for one who has a general or absolute property; Bull. N. P. 33; Pope v. Tucker, 23 Ga. 484; together with a right to immediate possession; 1 Ry. & M. 99; Clark v. Draper, 19 N. H. 419; Stewart v. Bright, 6 Houst. (Del.) 344; see Owens v. Weedman, 82 Ill. 409; Landon v. Emmons, 97 Mass. 37; as, for example, a vendor of property sold upon condition not fulfilled; Houston v. Dyche, 1 Meigs (Tenn.) 76, 33 Am. Dec. 130; or a special property, including actual possession as against a stranger; 2 Saund. 47; Eaton v. Lynde, 15 Mass. 242; Coffin v. Anderson, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 395; as, for example, a sheriff holding under rightful process; Blackley v. Sheldon, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 32; a mortgagee in possession; Reynolds v. Shuler, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 323; a simple bailee; see Hopper v. Miller, 76 N. C. 402; Brown v. Dempsey, 95 Pa. 243; Clark v. Bell, 61 Ga. 147; or even a finder merely; McLaughlin v. Waite, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 670; and including lawful custody and a right of detention as against the general owner of the goods or chattels; Spoor v. Holland, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 445, 24 Am. Dec. 37; M'Connell v. Maxwell, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 419, 26 Am. Dec. 428. An executor or administrator is held an absolute owner by relation from the death of the decedent. And he may maintain an action for a conversion in the lifetime of the decedent; Towle v. Lovet, 6 Mass. 394; and is liable for a conversion by the decedent; Avery v. Moore, 1 N. C. 362, 1 Am. Dec. 560. Trustees having title to chattels with an immediate right of possession may sue in trover for the chattels, although they may never have taken actual possession, but have allowed the goods to remain in the occupation of their cestui que trust; [1891] 2 Ch. 172.

The property affected must be some personal chattel; Mather v. Ministers of Trinity Church, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 513, 8 Am. Dec. 663; specifically set off as the plaintiff's; 4 B. & C. 948; Chapman v. Searle, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 38; including title deeds; Weiser v. Zeisinger, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 537; a copy of a record; Sawyer v. Baldwin, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 492; money, though not tied up; Donohue v. Henry, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 162; negotiable securities; 3 B. & C. 45; Todd v. Crookshanks, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 432; Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Cochrane, 27 Ala. 228; animals feræ naturæ, cation. The protection of this truce was also extended constantly to certain places, as, churches, convents, hospitals, etc., and certain persons, as, clergymen, peasants in the field, crusaders, and, in general, all defenceless persons. It was first introduced into Aquitaine in 1041, and into England under Edward the Confessor. 1 Rob. Charles V. App. n. xxi. Another authority places it in 1031, and in Limoges. See Orations from Homer to McKinley, vol. 25, p. 1055.

TRUCK ACTS. Acts in England, 1 & 2 Wm. IV, amended in 1887 and 1896, which provide that workmen shall not have unreasonable deductions made from their wages (as for fines, damaged goods, materials, or tools), nor have their wages paid otherwise than in current coin, nor be obliged to spend them in any particular place or manner.

TRUE. That only is true which is conformable to the actual state of things. In that sense, a statement is untrue which does not express things exactly as they are. But in another and broader sense, the word "true" is often used as a synonym of honest, sincere, not fraudulent. Moulton v. Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 345, 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 28 L. Ed. 447.

TRUE BILL. In Practice. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment when a grand jury, after having heard the witnesses for the government, are of opinion that there is sufficient cause to put the defendant on his trial. Formerly the indorsement was Billa vera when legal proceedings were in Latin; it is still the practice to write on the back of the bill Ignoramus when the jury do not find it to be a true bill; the better opinion is that the omission of the words a true bill does not vitiate an indictment; Com. v. Smyth, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 473; State v. Freeman, 13 N. H. 488. See GRAND JURY.

TRUE COPY. A true copy, does not mean an absolutely exact copy but means that the copy shall be so true that anybody can understand it. It may contain an error or omission. 51 L. J. Ch. 905.

TRUE, PUBLIC, AND NOTORIOUS. These three qualities used to be formally predicted in the libel in the ecclesiastical courts, of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article, severally. Whart.

TRUST. A right of property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another.

"A trust is an obligation imposed either expressly or by implication of law whereby the obligor is bound to deal with property over which he has control for the benefit of certain persons of whom he may himself be one, and any one of whom may enforce the obligation." This definition is proposed after an enumeration of many given by judges and text-writers, and a critical discussion of them, by W. G. Hart, 15 L. Q. R. 294.

An equitable right, title, or interest, in property, real or personal, distinct from its legal ownership.

A personal obligation for paying, delivering, or performing anything where the person trusting has no real right or security, for by that act he confides altogether to the faithfulness of those intrusted.

An obligation upon a person, arising out of a confidence reposed in him, to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence. Tiedm. Eq. Jur. § 253; 4 Kent 295; 1 Saunders, Uses & Tr. 6; 3 Bla. Com. 431.

A trust is merely what a use was before the statute of uses. It is an interest resting in conscience and equity, and the same rules apply to trusts in chancery now which were formerly applied to uses; Fisher v. Fields, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 506. A trust is a use not executed under the statute of Hen. VIII; Ware v. Richardson, 3 Md. 505, 56 Am. Dec. 762. The words use and trust are frequently used indifferently. See 3 Jarm. Wills *1139.

Trust implies two estates or interests,—one equitable and one legal; one person as trustee holding the legal title, while another as the cestui que trust has the beneficial interest. Hospes v. Car Co., 48 Minn. 174, 50 N. W. 1117, 15 L. R. A. 470, 31 Am. St. Rep. 637.

Sometimes the equitable title of the beneficiary, sometimes the obligation of the trustee, and, again, the right held, is called the trust.

But the right of the beneficiary is in the trust; the obligation of the trustee results from the trust; and the right held is the subject-matter of the trust. Neither of them is the trust itself. All together they constitute the trust.

The distinction between the fidei commissum and a trust, is that in the former there was no separation of the equitable and legal title, but there was simply a request, which afterwards became a duty imposed upon the gravatus to convey the inheritance to another person, either immediately or after a certain event; whereas, in the trust, the perfect ownership is decomposed into its constituent elements of legal title and beneficial interest, which are vested in different persons at the same time. Besides the fidei commissum arose but of testamentary dispositions; whereas English trusts, until the statute of wills, were created only by conveyances inter vivos; Bisph. Eq. 893, § 50. See McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. (U. S.) 367, 14 L. Ed. 732.

Active or special trusts are those in which the trustee has some duty to perform, so that the legal estate must remain in him or the trust be defeated.

Express (or direct) trusts are those which are created in express terms in the deed, writing, or will. The terms to create an express trust will be sufficient if it can be fairly collected upon the face of the instrument that a trust was intended. Express trusts are usually found in preliminary sealed agreements, such as marriage articles, or articles for the purchase of land; in formal conveyances, such as marriage settlements, terms for years, mortgages, assignments for the payment of debts, raising portions, or other purposes; and in wills and testaments, when the bequests involve fiduciary interests for private benefit or public charity. They may be created even by parol; Miller v. Pearce, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 97; except so far as forbidden by the statute of frauds.

A written instrument though inefficacious as a will, from a want of compliance with statutory requisitions, may yet operate as a declaration of a trust; Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 13 Sup. Ct. 906, 37 L. Ed. 867.

In express trusts, title does not vest until acceptance by the trustee, which may be expressly or by implication, or by assuming the duties of the trust; In re Robinson, 37 N. Y. 261; Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 138, 20 L. Ed. 765; but there is a presumption of acceptance; Read v. Robinson, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 331; 3 B. & Ald. 36. Parol evidence of the acts and admissions of a party are admissible to prove his acceptance; Ridenour v. Wheritt, 30 Ind. 485; collecting income; 1 Ves. 522; giving a receipt; Kennedy v. Winn, 80 Ala. 166; see Perry, Trusts § 259 et seq. See TRUSTEE.

A simple trust is said to be a simple conveyance of property to one upon trust for another, without further directions. A special trust is where special and particular duties are pointed out to be performed by the trustee. A trust to do a simple act (as to convey to another) is a ministerial trust; if judgment by the trustee is required, it is a discretionary trust. See Perry, Trusts § 18.

Implied trusts are those which, without being expressed, are deducible from the nature of the transaction as matters of intent, or which are superinduced upon the transaction by operation of law, as matters of equity, independently of the particular intention of the parties. The term is used in this general sense, including constructive and resulting trusts (q. v.), and also in a more restricted sense, excluding those classes.

Implied trusts do not come within the statute of frauds; Seichrist's Appeal, 66 Pa. 237.

Resulting trusts are those which the courts presume to arise out of the transactions of parties, as if one man pays the purchase-money for an estate, and the deed is taken in the name of another, a trust is presumed in favor of the person who pays the money. Perry, Trusts § 26.

Constructive trusts are those which arise purely by construction of equity, and are entirely independent of any actual or presumed intention of the parties. Such trusts have not, technically, any element of fraud in them; Bisph. Eq. § 91. Under this branch of trusts it has been said that "wherever one person is placed in such relation to another, by the act or consent of that other, or the act of a third person, or the law, that he becomes interested for him, or interested with him in any subject of property or business; he is prohibited from acquiring rights in that subject antagonistic to the person with whose interest he has become associated." 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 62. The rule as to such trusts applies not only to persons standing in a direct fiduciary position towards others, such as trustees, attorneys, etc., but also to those who occupy any position out of which a similar duty ought in equity and good morals to arise: as against partners; Anderson v. Lemon, 8 N. Y. 236; tenants in common; Duff v. Wilson, 72 Pa. 442; mortgagees; Woodlee v. Burch, 43 Mo. 231; as against agent, buying goods with the principal's money; Ballock v. Hooper, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 421; Bisph. Eq. § 93. A constructive trust must rest on fraud, either actually intended or resulting from a failure to recognize the rules of business integrity; Pierce v. Pierce, 55 Mich. 629, 22 N. W. 81.

See definitions in Russell v. Peyton, 4 Ill. App. 473, and separate titles in this work.

If one obtains a title to land by artifice or concealment, equity will enforce a trust in favor of the party justly entitled thereto; Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 12 Sup. Ct. 862, 36 L. Ed. 719. Whoever comes into possession of trust property, with notice of the trust, is bound to the execution of the trust; School Trustees v. Kirwin, 25 Ill. 73.

A trustee who buys at his own sale, even if public, will still be considered, at the option of the cestui que trust, a trustee. See 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 248. This is not upon the ground of fraud, but of public policy. See Yeackel v. Litchfield, 13 Allen (Mass.) 419, 90 Am. Dec. 207; and this rule was applied to the wife of the trustee; Appeal of Dundas, 64 Pa. 325, where the sale was confirmed upon terms that the executors be surcharged with an additional sum of $20,000, the difference between the price paid and the full value of the property. That a trustee can buy at his own sale only by leave of court and notice to the parties, see 38 Amer. L. Rev. 783. See TRUSTEE.

So if a person obtains from a trustee trust property without paying value for it, although without notice of the trust, he will in such case be held a trustee by construction; Bisph. Eq. § 95; Tiedm. Eq. Jur. § 312. And in case of a contract for the sale of land, equity considers the vendor as a trustee of the legal title for the purchaser; ibid.

A passive or dry or simple trust is one which requires the performance of no duty by the trustee to carry out the trust, but by force of which the mere legal title rests in the trustee. Thus, a gift by will to a trustee to deliver the property to the beneficiary on certain conditions; Marvel v. Trust Co. (Del.) 87 Atl. 1014.

As to executory and executed trusts, see those titles. An executed trust is one explicitly declared in writing, duly signed, stating the conditions upon which the legal title is held, and the final intention of the creditor, so that the trustee can carry that intention into effect. Gaylord v. Lafayette, 115 Ind. 423, 17 N. E. 899.

Trusts may also be distinguished as public and private trusts. The former are constituted for the benefit either of the public at large or some particular portion of it answering to a particular description (as a public charity); while the latter are those wherein the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in one or more individuals who are, or may be within a certain time, definitely ascertained. Bisph. Eq. § 59.

A trust arises when property has been conferred upon one person and accepted by him for the benefit of another. The former is a trustee, and holds the legal title, and the latter is called the cestui que trust, or beneficiary. In order to originate a trust, two things are essential,—first, that the ownership conferred be connected with a right, or interest, or duty for the benefit of another; and, second, that the property be accepted on these conditions.

The modern trust includes not only those technical uses which were not executed by the statute of uses, but also equitable interests which never were considered uses, and did not, therefore, fall within the provisions of this statute. These equitable interests, in common with the unexecuted uses, received the name of trusts; Bisph. Eq. § 52. The statute of uses provided that where one was seized to the use of another, the cestui que use should be deemed to be in lawful seizin and possession of the same estate in the land itself as he had in the use.

A trust which at the time of its creation is a passive trust will be executed by this statute, although the word trust instead of use is employed. But where a trust which has once been active becomes passive, such a trust is not necessarily executed by the statute. If the mere fact that the trustee had active duties to perform was the only circumstance that prevented the statute from operating, the trust will be executed when the active duties have ceased. But if the non-execution of the trust by the statute did not originally and solely depend upon the activity of the trust, the fact that the trust has ceased to be active will not of itself cause the statute to apply; but the trustee is then bound to convey the legal estate at the request of the cestui que trust; and after a great lapse of time, and in support of long-continued possession on the part of the person holding the beneficial interest, such a conveyance will be presumed; Bisph. Eq. § 55. A bequest of personalty to a trustee for the use and benefit of another, without words of restriction, vests the absolute property of the fund in the beneficiary; Martin v. Fort, 83 Fed. 19, 27 C. C. A. 428.

When active duties are to be performed by the trustee, it will, generally, not be executed; Bisph. Eq. § 56; Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 119, 168, 18 L. Ed. 502; though where there was a separate use for a feme sole not in contemplation of marriage, it was held that as this separate use was void, the trust fell, although the trustee had active duties to perform; Yarnall's Appeal, 70 Pa. 335. When the trustee is vested with a discretion, however slight, he takes the place of the donor and the trust is an active trust; Hemphill's Estate, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 527. Where the income only was to be paid to a son "after deducting taxes and necessary expenses," it was held to be an active trust; Com. v. Oblender, 135 Pa. 535, 19 Atl. 1057.

Where an estate is given in trust to pay one-half the income to each of two persons, it is not a gift of one-half the principal to be held for each, but of all to be held jointly for both, and it should remain intact until the period of distribution arises; Aubert's Appeal, 119 Pa. 52, 12 Atl. 810.

Before the statute of frauds, a trust, either in regard to real or personal estate, might have been created by parol as well as by writing. The statute requires all trusts as to real estate to be in writing; 4 Kent 305; Adams, Eq. 27. Trusts as to partnership interests in real estate are not within the statute of uses and trusts. See Greenwood v. Marvin, 111 N. Y. 423, 19 N. E. 228.

If a gratuitous declaration of trust of land by the owner is void under the statute and the trustee repudiates it, the cestui que trust has no remedy; but if it was made for value received, he is bound to make restitution. If one conveys land to another on an oral trust to hold for the grantor, and the trustee repudiates the trust, he will be compelled to re-convey, and meantime will be considered as holding a constructive trust; [1897] 1 Ch. 196; or pay the value of the land; Twomey v. Crowley, 137 Mass. 184; but that he will not be compelled to do either, see Mescall v. Tully, 91 Ind. 96; Wolford v. Farnham, 44 Minn. 159, 46 N. W. 295; Sturtevant v. Sturtevant, 20 N. Y. 39, 75 Am. Dec. 371; and the "prevailing American doctrine" is said to be that he can get neither the land nor its value; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 552, citing Barry v. Hill, 166 Pa. 344, 31 Atl. 126; Lovett v. Taylor, 54 N. J. Eq. 311, 34 Atl. 896; Jacoby v. Funkhouser, 147 Ala. 254, 40 South. 291; Pavey v. Ins. Co., 58 Wis. 221, 13 N. W. 925, and other cases. If one conveys to another on an oral trust for a third party, the latter cannot enforce the trust, but the grantor may recover his land, or its value in certain jurisdictions, and not in others; see the cases just cited.

Where a devise is to one on an oral trust for another, the cases enforce a different rule and permit the cestui que trust to get the benefit of the trust; and in such case, if the trustee fraudulently induces the devise to himself intending to keep the property, equity will compel him to convey to the intended beneficiary; but if the trustee has acquired the property with the intention of fulfilling his promise, but afterwards, relying on the statute, refuses to do so, then, it is said, equity will compel him to surrender the property to the heir.

Where there has been a conveyance, by direction of the buyer, to a third person on an oral trust, the law raises a presumption that the grantee was a trustee for the one who paid the purchase money. This was deemed a trust by operation of law and to be thereby within the statute of frauds. See RESULTING TRUST. Statutes have been passed in some states dealing with this presumption and defining the rights of the parties in such circumstances; reference as to such acts is made to James Barr Ames' article on Oral Trusts of Land (Lect. on Leg. Hist. 425, 20 Harv. L. Rev. 549), from which the above abstract as to oral trusts is made.

If the trustee recognizes a parol trust, no one whose equities are not affected can interfere; Patton v. Chamberlain, 44 Mich. 5, 5 N. W. 1037.

A resulting trust arises by implication of law and not by contract; Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592, 68 N. E. 81, 96 Am. St. Rep. 322; it cannot exist where there is an express trust; Coleman v. Parran, 43 W. Va. 737, 28 S. E. 769; it is not within the statute of frauds; Tillman v. Murrell, 120 Ala. 239, 24 South. 712; Butler v. Carpenter, 163 Mo. 597, 63 S. W. 823; Lynch v. Herrig, 32 Mont. 267, 80 Pac. 240.

No particular form of words is requisite to create a trust. The court will determine the intent from the general scope of the language; Fisher v. Fields, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 496; 4 Kent 305; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138. The words, however, to warrant the inference of a trust, must be more than loose and general declarations; but, on the other hand, parol declarations will not be received to contradict the inference of a trust in land fairly deducible from written declarations; Steere v. Steere, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 2, 9 Am. Dec. 256.

In voluntary and express trusts, no title vests in a trustee unless he expressly or impliedly accepts the trust or in some way assumes its duties; F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler Co., 166 U. S. 648, 17 Sup. Ct. 709, 41 L. Ed. 1149; contra, Davis v. Hall, 128 Ia. 649, 105 N. W. 122. It is held that the knowledge or the acceptance of the beneficiary is immaterial; City of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 413, 78 N. W. 474, 43 L. R. A. 840; Moloney v. Tilton, 22 Misc. 682, 51 N. Y. Supp. 19. The refusal of the trustee to accept an active trust does not vest the trust fund in the beneficiary; Bennett v. Bennett, 217 Ill. 434, 75 N. E. 339, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470.

ocable; Gaylord v. Lafayette, 115 Ind. 423, 17 N. E. 899; Lovett v. Farnham, 169 Mass. 1, 47 N. E. 246; without the consent of the beneficiary; Krankel's Ex'x v. Krankel, 104 Ky. 745, 47 S. W. 1084; but a deed to a trustee which is testamentary in its character may be revoked; Chestnut St. Nat. Bank v. Ins. Co., 186 Pa. 333, 40 Atl. 486, 65 Am. St. Rep. 860; and so if the purposes for which the trust was created have failed, the trust being voluntary and without a valuable consideration; Sturgeon v. Stevens, 186 Pa. 350, 40 Atl. 488; a valid trust cannot usually be revoked; Skeen v. Marriott, 22 Utah 73, 61 Pac. 296; Carr v. Branch, 85 Va. 597, 8 S. E. 476. See REVOCATION.

A trust, as to personal property, may be proved by parol evidence; 1 Hare 158; 3 Bla. Com. 431; Chase v. Perley, 148 Mass. 289, 19 N. E. 398; and parol evidence is admissible against the face of a deed itself to show all the facts out of which a resulting trust arises; Seiler v. Mohn, 37 W. Va. 507, 16 S. E. 496; as to a cestui que trust holding the beneficial enjoyment of property free from the rights of his creditors, Nichol v. Levy, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 441, 18 L. Ed. 596. See SPENDTHRIFT.

Equity will follow trust moneys as far as they can be identified; F. & M. Bank v. Farwell, 58 Fed. 633, 7 C. C. A. 391, 19 U. S. App. 256; Brown v. Spohr, 180 N. Y. 201, 73 N. E. 14; but the right fails when the means of ascertainment fail; Thompson's Appeal, 22 Pa. 16. If one knowingly permits the employment of trust funds in the purchase and improvement of property, the same, even though commingled with other money belonging to such person, may be traced and the return awarded out of the property purchased in part and improved in part by such trust fund; Wobbe v. Schaub, 143 Ill. App. 361.

Trust funds may be followed into a trustee's estate, though no particular property can be identified as acquired by him, where the trust fund was mingled with the general funds of the trustee's estate and went into his general assets, either in payment of debts or purchase of securities; State v. Bruce, 17 Idaho 1, 102 Pac. 831, 134 Am. St. Rep. 245. But it is held that a trust cannot be established in an aliquot share of a man's whole property, as distinguished from a particular fund, by showing that trust moneys had gone into it; National City Bank v. Hotchkiss, 231 U. S. 50, 34 Sup. Ct. 20, 58 L. Ed. —.

When trust property is turned into money and mixed with the general mass of property of like description, it is no longer earmarked; Phillips v. Overfield, 100 Mo. 466, 13 S. W. 705. If a trustee mixes his own property with the property of a trust, so that it cannot be separated, the whole becomes the property of the trust; Tufts v. Latshaw, 172 Mo. 359, 72 S. W. 679; or only so far as the trustee may not be able to distinguish them; Hutchinson v. Bank, 145 Ala. 196, 41 South.

143. If they cannot be distinguished, it is held that the beneficiary stands on a par with the creditors of his trustee; State v. Osborne, 69 Conn. 257, 37 Atl. 491.

Where one has mingled trust funds in his individual bank account, and it has been wholly depleted, the trust funds are thereby depleted, and cannot be considered as appearing in sums subsequently deposited in the same account; Schuyler v. Littlefield, 232 U. S. 707, 34 Sup. Ct. 466, 58 L. Ed. —.

The rules applicable where a trustee has wrongfully disposed of trust property are thus, in substance, formulated by Prof. James Barr Ames in Lect. on Leg. Hist. 412, 19 Harv. L. Rev. 511:

If a trustee wrongfully sells the trust property or exchanges it for other property, the cestui que trust may charge him as a constructive trustee of the money or newly acquired property, or of any subsequent product of either; or he may enforce an equitable lien upon any property in the hands of the wrongdoer, which is the traceable product of the trust property. If the new property is worth less than the misappropriated trust property, he may exhaust his lien and have a personal claim against the trustee for the difference. If the new property is worth as much as, or more than, the trust property, the enforcement of the constructive trust or of the equitable lien will be a full satisfaction. If the value of the new property exceed the trust property, the cestui que trust may make the profit, no matter how great; in a case of a misuse of trust funds, the trustee loses for himself and wins for the beneficiary.

If the trust property, or its product, has been transferred by the wrongdoer, the rights of the defrauded owner against the transferee will vary accordingly as the latter is (1) a mala fide transferee, or (2) a bona fide donee, or (3) a bona fide purchaser. The first is in the same case as the original wrongdoer. The second, if he gets the title, is, from the moment of his discovery of the grantor's fraud, in the same position as if he had at that moment acquired the property mala fide. If, however, he should dispose of the property before such discovery, he is not accountable for its value to the cestui que trust. If his transfer was gratuitous, he is not responsible to him in any way; but if it was for value, he must either surrender the value, or account for it. If the value received was less than the trust property, or if the newly acquired property has depreciated in value below that of the trust property, he can be required only to give up what he received; if the newly acquired property appreciates, the transferee need only give up the value of the misappropriated property; if he be insolvent, justice will be done if the beneficiary have a lien to the extent of the value of the newly acquired property, the surplus going to the transferee's creditors.

If the bona fide transferee does not acquire the title to the misappropriated property (as when he receives it from a thief), he must surrender it to the true owner, or make reparation in value. If, after discovering the title of the true owner, he should transfer the property in exchange, he would be chargeable as a constructive trustee of the newly acquired property, as also if his transfer was before he discovered the tort of his transgressor.

If a bona fide purchaser acquired the title to the property, he will hold it clear of all claims.

A trustee who has wrongfully disposed of a trust property may sue, as trustee, for its recovery; Atwood v. Lester, 20 R. I. 660, 40 Atl. 866; Wetmore v. Porter, 92 N. Y. 76; these cases are said to represent the weight of authority on a disputed question; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 359.

An administrator deposited funds in a bank and took the following receipt, "to be held until vouchers are received from heirs, then same to be forwarded by bank draft." On the bank's failure the administrator was allowed to recover the money on the ground that it was a trust fund; Carlson v. Kies, 75 Wash. 171, 134 Pac. 808, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317.

Where one, by a breach of trust, has obtained an advantage, equity will reach all directly concerned in the wrong and directly and knowingly participate in the fruits thereof; Miller v. Himebaugh, 153 S. W. 338.

See EAR-MARK.

Trust funds held for a charitable object are not liable for the torts of a trustee; Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 15 Atl. 553, 1 L. R. A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745. See HOSPITAL; CHARITABLE USES.

If a trustee dies, or fails or refuses to execute or accept the trust, or no trustee is named, the trust does not for that reason fail. It is a settled rule that the court of chancery will provide a trustee or attend to the execution of the trust; 10 Sim. 256; Adams, Eq. 36.

Trusts are interpreted by the ordinary rules of law, unless the contrary is expressed in the language of the trust; Cudworth v. Thompson, 3 Des. (S. C.) 256, 4 Am. Dec. 617.

The rules for the devolution of equitable estates are the same as those for the descent of legal titles, and fall under the operation of the various intestate acts; Bisph. Eq. § 60.

The death of a co-trustee vests the title in the survivor; Webster v. Vandeventer, 72 Gray (Mass.) 428.

Apart from statute, on the death of a sole trustee, real estate passes to his heir, and personalty to his personal representatives, subject to the trust; Perry, Trusts § 269 (citing [1891] 2 Ch. 567; State v. Trust Co., 209 Mo. 472, 108 S. W. 97; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 181 Ill. 248, 54 N. E. 918); the court will appoint a new trustee. The subject is usually regulated by statute. It is said that, if no new trust-tee is appointed, the heir or personal representative may act as the case may be; Perry, Trusts § 269.

It is the duty of the executors of a deceased trustee to settle an account of the trust estate and to pay the funds over to a successor: they are not bound to execute the trust; Silvers v. Canary, 114 Ind. 129, 16 N. E. 166.

Where a trust deed, upon the death of the trustee, vested the title in the court of chancery as a successor in the trust, this was inoperative, and the title vested in the heirs of the trustee charged with the execution of the trust; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 181 Ill. 248, 54 N. E. 918.

If the legal title to real estate cannot be taken by an alien, the beneficial ownership cannot be enjoyed by him; Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. (U. S.) 270, 12 L. Ed. 130.

An assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors is valid without assent on the part of the creditors; 25 Wash. L. Rep. 822; contra, [1897] 2 Q. B. 19; Widgery v. Haskell, 5 Mass. 144, 4 Am. Dec. 41. In [1897] 2 Q. B. 19, it was held that an assignment in trust for particular persons is irrevocable, while one for creditors in general is revocable. See TRUSTEE.

Where railroad stock was held in trust for one for life with remainder over, and the company declared a dividend payable out of surplus, it was apportioned in the proportions which the amount of surplus earned before the decedent's death bore to the whole amount of the surplus. The life tenants should receive all of the income earned after the death of the testator, reserving to the corpus of the estate the amount of the surplus which had accrued at the death of the testator, the essential thing being to find the value of the estate at the time of testator's death and to preserve this value from diminution; Stokes' Estate, 240 Pa. 277, 87 Atl. 971. See DIVIDENDS.

As to combinations of capital now known as "trusts," see RESTRAINT OF TRADE. The origin of this use of the word "trusts" is thus described: Under this form of combination the stockholders of the various constituent companies of the trust place their stock in the hands of a small board of trustees, giving to these trustees an irrevocable power of attorney to vote the stock as they see fit, or in accordance with specific instructions given at the beginning. The title to the stock itself remains in the original holder, with the right to sell or pledge or dispose of it as he sees fit, but without the power of recalling his right to vote. In return for this stock thus deposited with the trustees, the trustees have ordinarily issued trust certificates, which are in themselves negotiable and take the place of the stock. Encycl. Br., by J. W. Jenks. See VOTING TRUST.

A common form of financial securities is known as "car trusts," from the fact that the title to railroad rolling stock was placed, by bailment or sale, in one or more individuals, in trust, who issued certificates of ownership in the property to the persons investing their money on the faith of the property and the promise of the railroad company to pay for it. See ROLLING STOCK.

As to the origin of trusts, see James Barr Ames, in Lect. on Leg. Hist. 243.

See TRUSTEE; TRUST ESTATES AS BUSINESS COMPANIES; SPENDTHRIFT TRUST; RESULTING TRUST; REVOCATION; EAR-MARK; CONFUSION OF GOODS; USES; CHARITABLE USES.

The operation of trusts has been narrowed by statute in some states: New York, Michigan and Louisiana; Bisph. Eq. § 56. The subject has been very fully developed by the Pennsylvania courts.

TRUST COMPANY. The business of such companies consists largely in the administration of trusts of various kinds, and particularly those arising under corporate mortgages. It is a common practice for them to become surety on bonds in legal proceedings and in various other ways, and they usually also transact a safe deposit business. See SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANIES; SURETYSHIP.

TRUST DEED. A deed given to a trustee for the purpose of securing a numerous class of creditors, as the bondholders of a railroad corporation, with power to sell on default in payment of their bonds, notes, or other claims. It is used in some states instead of a bond and mortgage in ordinary loans to an individual or corporation.

TRUST ESTATES AS BUSINESS COMPANIES. A practice in Massachusetts of vesting a business or certain real estate in a group of trustees, who manage it for the benefit of the beneficial owners; the ownership of the latter is evidenced by negotiable (or transferable) shares. The trustees are elected by the shareholders, or, in case of a vacancy, by the board of trustees. Provision is made in the agreement and declaration of trust to the effect that when new trustees are elected, the trust estate shall vest in them without further conveyance. The declaration of trust specifies the powers of the trustees. They have a common seal; the board is organized with the usual officers of a board of trustees; it is governed by by-laws; the officers have the usual powers of like corporate officers; so far as practicable, the trustees in their collective capacity, are to carry on the business under a specified name. The trustees may also hold shares as beneficiaries. Provision may be made for the alteration or amendment of the agreement or declaration in a specified manner. In Eliot v. Freeman, 220 U. S. 178, 31 Sup. Ct. 360, 55 L. Ed. 424, it was held that such a trust was not within the corporation tax provisions of the tariff act of Aug. 5, 1909. See also Zonne v. Minneapolis Syndicate, 220 U. S. 187, 31 Sup. Ct. 361, 55 L. Ed. 428.

See Sears, Trust Estates as Business Companies (1912).

TRUST FUND DOCTRINE. See STOCKHOLDER.

TRUSTEE. A person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property of any description is vested for the benefit of another.

One to whom property has been conveyed to be held or managed for another.

To a certain extent, executors, administrators, guardians, and assignees are trustees, and the law of trusts so far is applicable to them in their capacity of trustees; Hill, Trust. 49.

Trusts are not strictly cognizable at common law, but solely in equity; Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 10 L. Ed. 873.

Any reasonable being may be a trustee. The United States or a state may be a trustee; McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. (U. S.) 367, 14 L. Ed. 732; Holland v. State, 15 Fla. 455; State v. R. Co., 15 Fla. 690; Gibson v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 743, 2 L. R. A. 467. So may a corporation; Girard v. Philadelphia, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 19 L. Ed. 53; Perry, Trusts § 42.

"Whoever is capable of taking the legal title or beneficial interest in property may take the same trust for others." Perry, Trusts § 39. Non-resident natural persons are not disqualified from acting as trustee; 4 Am. Ry. Rep. 291; an act which declares such person disqualified is in conflict with the federal constitution; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 27 Fed. 146, arguendo; Shirk v. La Fayette, 52 Fed. 857; but this constitutional provision does not extend to foreign corporations.

A foreign corporation may be a trustee; Cook, Stock, etc. § 813; it must comply with local statutes; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 68 Ill. App. 666; contra, Brown v. Ellwell, 17 Wash. 442, 49 Pac. 1068; Garratt Ford Co. v. Vermont Mfg. Co., 20 R. I. 187, 37 Atl. 948, 38 L. R. A. 545, 78 Am. St. Rep. 852. See Saltmarsh v. Spaulding, 147 Mass. 224, 17 N. E. 316. In Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 68 Fed. 412, where a statute of Illinois declared any trust unlawful when vested in a foreign trust company unless it had complied with certain requirements of the statute, it was held that a trust under a railroad mortgage vested in such a company merely a naked legal title, while the beneficial title was in the bondholders; and that the court would enforce the security by a judicial sale. But a nonresident trust company was removed as trustee under an Illinois railroad mortgage; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 173 Ill. 439, 51 N. E. 55. A mortgage upon railroad property in Illinois executed to a foreign trust corporation as trustee, to secure bonds made payable outside of the state, is not prohibited by the laws or public policy of that state; Hervey v. R. Co., 28 Fed. 169.

The trustee of a railroad mortgage represents the bondholders who are bound by his assent; Lloyd v. R. Co., 65 Fed. 351. See MORTGAGE; INTERVENTION.

The legislature of a state alone has the power to accept a bequest to the state in trust; State v. Blake, 69 Conn. 64, 36 Atl. 1019.

A trustee after having accepted a trust cannot discharge himself of his trust or responsibility by resignation or a refusal to perform the duties of the trust; but he must procure his discharge either by virtue of the provisions of the instrument of his appointment, or by the consent of all interested, or by an order of a competent court; 4 Kent 311.

When the trustee relation is once established, no subsequent dealing with the trust property can relieve it of the trust; Smith v. Guaranty Co., 162 Fed. 15, 88 C. C. A. 669.

Trustees are not allowed to speculate with the trust property, or to retain any profits made by the use of the same, or to become the purchasers upon its sale. If beneficial to the parties in interest, the purchase by the trustee may be retained or confirmed by the court. And the trustee may be compelled to account for and pay over to the cestui qui trust all profits made by any use of the trust property; 4 Kent 438. A trustee cannot become a purchaser at his own sale, without special permission; Allen v. Gillette, 127 U. S. 589, 8 Sup. Ct. 1331, 32 L. Ed. 271. A purchase by a trustee of trust property for his own benefit is not absolutely void, but voidable; and may be confirmed by the parties interested either directly or by long acquiescence; Hammond v. Hopkins, 143 U. S. 224, 12 Sup. Ct. 418, 36 L. Ed. 134. See TRUST.

A court of equity never allows a trust to fail for want of a trustee; King v. Donnelly, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 46; Vidal v. Girard's Ex'rs, 2 How. (U. S.) 188, 11 L. Ed. 205; Seda v. Huble, 75 Ia. 429, 39 N. W. 685, 9 Am. St. Rep. 495.

Whenever it becomes necessary, the court will appoint a new trustee, and this though the instrument creating the trust contain no power for making such appointment. The power is inherent in the court; Suarez v. Pumpelly, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 336; 1 Beav. 467; In re Inhabitants of Anson, 85 Me. 79, 26 Atl. 996. So the court may create a new trustee on the resignation of a trustee; Cruger v. Halliday, 11 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 314; Craig v. Craig, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 76; Hill, Trust. 190. A court will not allow a trust to fail or to be defeated by the refusal or neglect of the trustee to execute a power, if such a power is so given that it is reasonably certain that the donor intended it to be exercised; Atwood v. R. Co., 85 Va. 966, 9 S. E. 748.

The power of equity to remove a trustee and to substitute another in his place is incidental to its paramount duty to see that trusts are properly executed, and may properly be exercised whenever his continuance in office would be detrimental to the trust, and even if for no other reason than that human infirmity would prevent the co-trustees or their beneficiaries from working in harmony, and although charges against him are either not made out or are greatly exaggerated; May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 17 Sup. Ct. 824, 42 L. Ed. 179; and this power is independent of statute or of any provision in the trust instrument; Mazelin v. Rouyer, S. Ind. App. 27, 35 N. E. 303; St. Louis v. Wenneker, 145 Mo. 230, 47 S. W. 105, 68 Am. St. Rep. 561; Williamson v. Suydam, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 723, 18 L. Ed. 967; Baltimore Bargain House v. St. Clair, 58 W. Va. 565, 52 S. E. 660.

A trustee may be removed for cause: As for neglect to invest the funds; Cavender v. Cavender, 114 U. S. 464, 5 Sup. Ct. 955, 29 L. Ed. 212; and using them in his own business; Clemens v. Caldwell, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 171; for fraud, negligence or willful breach of trust; Thompson v. Thompson, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 161; for converting to his own use the profit on a change of stock and the right to purchase new shares; Billings v. Billings, 110 Mass. 225; mingling trust funds with his own funds and refusing information to the beneficiaries; Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 114 Mass. 356; neglecting to keep the funds invested, but mingling them with his own funds and expending them in an unauthorized manner, though done through ignorance; Deen v. Cozzens, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 178; for bad faith and gross neglect in failing to sell real estate and invest the proceeds; Haight v. Brisbin, 100 N. Y. 219, 3 N. E. 74; for loaning trust funds on personal securities although approved by some of the beneficiaries; Johnson's Appeal, 9 Pa. 416; for acting adversely to the interest of the beneficiary and resisting his proper demands; Dickerson v. Smith, 17 S. C. 289.

A trustee may be removed where the relations between the trustee and beneficiaries have become hostile; Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 490, 14 N. E. 521, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477; where there is antipathy on the part of one of the beneficiaries towards one of the two trustees, deep-seated and destructive of mutual confidence; In re Nathans' Estate, 191 Pa. 404, 43 Atl. 313; where the beneficiary and another were trustees and there was an irreconcilable antagonism between them due to the domineering conduct of the co-trustee; In re Myer's Estate, 205 Pa. 413, 54 Atl. 1093; where the relations between the trustee and the beneficiary had become so acrimonious as to make personal intercourse between them impossible and hinder the transaction of the business; In re Price's Estate, 209 Pa. 210, 58 Atl. 280 (where a charge made by the trustee against the beneficiary that she was the mother of an illegitimate child was held good ground); where the relations between a trustee and his co-trustees were such that they could probably not co-operate, and a majority of the trustees asked a removal; Quackenboss v. Southwick, 41 N. Y. 117; where two of the trustees and the beneficiary prayed the removal of a third trustee, it appearing that questions had arisen among the trustees and the beneficiary sympathized with the two, she being of mature age; In re Morgan, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 621, affirmed 66 N. Y. 618; where it appeared that by reason of disagreement between trustees their continuance in office would be detrimental to the estate; Russak v. Tobias, 12 Civ. Proc. R. (N. Y.) 390; where the widow was a testamentary trustee with another for her step-daughter and she had remarried and given up intercourse with her step-daughter and had caused much litigation concerning the estate; Polk v. Linthicum, 100 Md. 615, 60 Atl. 455, 69 L. R. A. 920; where a state of mutual ill-will or hostile feelings exists against a trustee who has discretionary power over the rights of the beneficiary and they are necessarily brought into personal intercourse; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 24 L. Ed. 746; where the relations between the trustee and the beneficiary were not cordial and the trust was solely for a married woman of age sufficient to understand her own interest, the trustee was removed, no fault on the trustee's part being shown, on complaint of the beneficiary that his management was improvident; In re Chapman, 2 N. Y. Supp. 248. Whether a trustee who has left the administration of the trust entirely in the hands of an acting trustee is removable or not will depend upon the conduct of the acting trustee; Lathrop v. Smalley's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. Eq. 192.

But removal was refused where it appeared that the aversion of the beneficiary to the trustee grew out of the fact of his appointment to the exclusion of herself and her husband, and that her annoyance, alleged ill health and expense of employing counsel were due to her own acts; In re Neafie's Estate, 199 Pa. 307, 49 Atl. 129; where the trustee's duties are merely formal and ministerial, although there was mutual ill-will between the parties; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 24 L. Ed. 746; where the mere fact appears that the trustee forbade the beneficiaries to hold social intercourse with himself or his family; Nickels v. Philips, 18 Fla. 732; where there is a mere difference of opinion between the trustee and the beneficiary; In re Price's Estate, 209 Pa. 210, 58 Atl. 280; or for some whim of a beneficiary; In re Price's Estate, 209 Pa. 210, 58 Atl. 280; or for a mere disagreement between the trustee and the beneficiary; Gibbes v. Smith, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 131.

In the following cases removal was refused: Failure to perform a duty, or an injudicious exercise of discretion, or refusal to exercise a discretionary power; Preston

v. Wilcox, 38 Mich. 578; investing funds in his own business, which was not hazardous, and he supposed the money was safe, and that he would save expense to the fund; Lathrop v. Smalley's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. Eq. 192; neglect of duty in investing the fund, if the circumstances do not indicate bad faith and the fund has not been impaired; Lathrop v. Smalley's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. Eq. 197; incurring losses on apparently judicious loans on real estate by the failure of the borrower, which could not have been anticipated; Dow v. Dow, 63 Hun, 628, 18 N. Y. Supp. 222; an honest mistake; In re Durfee, 4 R. I. 401.

Where authority to manage real estate is given to one of several heirs appointed trustee under a will, a power to the other heirs to remove him by unanimous resolution, with the concurrence of the widow, for good and sufficient cause, and appoint another in his place, will not be controlled by equity except for abuse; May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 17 Sup. Ct. 824, 42 L. Ed. 179. A power in a will given to one of two trustees and the beneficiaries to remove the other trustee was held not to be against public policy; May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 17 Sup. Ct. 824, 42 L. Ed. 179.

A trustee is entitled to all reasonable expenses in carrying out the trust and all expenses reasonably necessary for the security, protection, and preservation of the property as well as for the prevention of a failure of the trust; Gisborn v. Ins. Co., 142 U. S. 326, 12 Sup. Ct. 277, 35 L. Ed. 1029.

The mere naming a person trustee does not constitute him such. There must be an acceptance, express or implied; see Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 139, 20 L. Ed. 765; as the acceptance is essential to the vesting of title in the trustee; Brandon v. Carter, 119 Mo. 572, 24 S. W. 1035, 41 Am. St. Rep. 673. But if the person named trustee does not wish to be held responsible as such, he should, before meddling with the duties of a trustee, formally disclaim the trust; Maccubbin v. Cromwell's Ex'rs, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 157.

Ordinarily, no writing is necessary to constitute the acceptance of a trust in writing; Flint v. Clinton Co., 12 N. H. 432. See TRUST.

The duties of trustees have been said, in general terms, to be: "to protect and preserve the trust property, and to see that it is employed solely for the benefit of the cestui que trust." Bisph. Eq. § 138. He must take possession of the trust property, call in debts, and convert such securities as are not legal investments.

Personal securities are not legal investments although the investment was made by the testator himself; King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76; Hemphill's Appeal, 18 Pa. 303; unless, by the terms of the trust, they are allowed; Bisph. Eq. § 139.

He will not be liable for the failure of a bank in which he has deposited trust funds, unless he has permitted them to be there for an unreasonable length of time; 29 Beav. 211; or has deposited them in his own name; Corya v. Corya, 119 Ind. 593, 22 N. E. 3; as he must not mix them with his own funds; Stanley's Appeal, 8 Pa. 431, 49 Am. Dec. 530; De Jarnette v. De Jarnette, 41 Ala. 709.

Investments by executors contrary to the requirements of the will, upon mere personal security, are at their risk; Brewster v. Demarest, 48 N. J. Eq. 559, 23 Atl. 271. A trustee is personally liable for trust funds invested in personal securities; 2 Con. Sur. 458; and if invested in his own business, or for his own benefit, he becomes an insurer of the fund; City of Bangor v. Beal, 85 Me. 129, 26 Atl. 1112; and is guilty of neglect if he loans money on an unsecured note; Nobles v. Hogg, 36 S. C. 322, 15 S. E. 359. See Dickinson's Appeal, 152 Mass. 184, 25 N. E. 99, 9 L. R. A. 279.

It is stated as a universal rule that a trustee cannot invest in personal securities, even if he has a discretion under the instrument; Perry, Trusts, § 453; and investment in a manufacturing company is a breach of trust; Warren v. Union Bank, 157 N. Y. 259, 51 N. E. 1036, 43 L. R. A. 256, 68 Am. St. Rep. 777. Investments in bank stocks have been held proper; McCoy v. Horwitz, 62 Md. 183; Harvard College v. Amory, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 446 (and in the shares of manufacturing and insurance companies); contra, Ackerman v. Emott, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 626; Perry's Appeal, 22 Pa. 44, 60 Am. Dec. 63. Trustees may use part of their funds in building on land owned in the trust; Stevens v. Melcher, 80 Hun 514, 30 N. Y. Supp. 625. It was said in an early case, Gray v. Fox, 1 N. J. Eq. 259, 22 Am. Dec. 508, that the only security safe for a trustee is real estate.

An investment in savings bank stock is proper; Fanning v. Main, 77 Conn. 94, 58 Atk. 472; but not in a private banking partnership; Penn v. Fogler, 182 Ill. 76, 55 N. E. 192; or in the purchase and opening of a coal mine; Butler v. Butler, 164 Ill. 171, 45 N. E. 426; or in buying a patent right and manufacturing patented articles; Trull v. Trull, 13 Allen (Mass.) 407.

A trustee with absolute power may invest in other securities than those declared by law the proper investments for ordinary trustees; 1 Ky. L. Bull. 786.

Voluntary investments of a speculative nature outside of the state should not be made; In re Reed, 45 App. Div. 196, 61 N. Y. Supp. 50; but there is no arbitrary rule that trust funds should not be invested in fixed property in another state; Thayer v. Dewey, 185 Mass. 68, 69 N. E. 1074. A trustee should not invest in unincumbered western lands; In re Reed, 45 App. Div. 196, 61 N. Y. Supp. 50; or in speculative railroad stocks; White v. Sherman, 168 Ill. 589, 48 N. E. 128, 61 Am.

St. Rep. 132; or in the stock of a corporation; Tucker v. State, 72 Ind. 242; or in the debentured stock of a speculative trust combination: In re Hall, 164 N. Y. 196, 58 N. E. 11; or in second mortgage bonds of a railroad; Clark v. Anderson, 13 Bush (Ky.) 111; though such an investment is said not to be inconsistent with sound discretion; Taft v. Smith, 186 Mass. 31, 70 N. E. 1031; Bartol's Estate, 182 Pa. 407, 38 Atl. 527.

An investment in corporate stock is a breach of duty; Tucker v. Hart, 72 Ind. 242; and so is one in encumbered real estate; Shuey v. Latta, 90 Ind. 136; Singleton v. Lowndes, 9 S. C. 465; contra, as to a second mortgage; Sherman v. Lanier, 39 N. J. Eq. 249.

A testamentary trustee, who has retained investments made by his testator which have depreciated, will not be surcharged simply because his judgment turned out to be wrong; Green v. Crapo, 181 Mass. 55, 62 N. E. 956; so in Peckham v. Newton, 15 R. I. 321, 4 Atl. 758. So a specific legacy may be kept in the investments made by the testator; Ward v. Kitchen, 30 N. J. Eq. 31. Where a mortgage loan was sufficiently secured when made, the subsequent depreciation of the land will not be chargeable to the trustee; Clark v. Anderson, 13 Bush (Ky.) 111. If a trustee acts in good faith and with diligence and in a way that the court would have approved under the circumstances as the trustee honestly believed them to be, he will not be held responsible; Gilbert v. Kolb, 85 Md. 627, 37 Atl. 423. That a trustee acted under advice of counsel is not an excuse; In re Westerfield, 32 App. Div. 324, 53 N. Y. Supp. 25. When a trustee is wanting in common prudence, and a loss to the trust results, he must bear the loss; Hart's Estate, 203 Pa. 480, 53 Atl. 364; if he so invested funds as to make it possible for him to make a profit himself, this would render him responsible for any loss; Carr's Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 369. Trustees are not liable if they acted in good faith and in the exercise of a reasonable discretion and as they would have dealt with their own property; Watkins v. Stewart, 78 Va. 111.

If the cestui que trust assents, or if an investment is made at his request, he cannot complain; Matter of Hall, 164 N. Y. 196, 58 N. E. 11; but the consent of the cestui que trust to an investment in railroad stocks is held to be no protection to the trustee in case of loss; White v. Sherman, 168 Ill. 589, 48 N. E. 128, 61 Am. St. Rep. 132; nor to an investment forbidden by law; Aydelott v. Breeding, 111 Ky. 847, 64 S. W. 916; nor was the consent of the beneficiary material where it appeared that he was a person greatly dominated by the trustee; Wleters v. Hart, 68 N. J. Eq. 796, 64 Atl. 1135. But in Phillips v. Burton, 107 Ky. 88, 52 S. W. 1064, it was held that the beneficiary could not complain after consenting to an investment and after long acquiescence; also where several life tenants acquiesced in an investment; In re Hall, 164 N. Y. 196, 58 N. E. 11.

Trust funds must be invested within a reasonable time; a year was held to be with "all convenient speed"; 11 Hare 160; six months has been held reasonable; Dunscomb v. Dunscomb, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 508, 7 Am. Dec. 504; three months; Barney v. Saunders, 16 How. (U. S.) 543, 14 L. Ed. 1047; two months; Appeal of Witmer, 87 Pa. 120.

Premiums paid for investments are to be charged to principal and not to income; Boyer's Estate, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 613, per Penrose, J.; to the same effect, Bergen v. Valentine, 63 How. Pr. 221; Hite v. Hite, 93 Ky. 257, 20 S. W. 778, 19 L. R. A. 173, 40 Am. St. Rep. 189; contra, New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Baker, 165 N. Y. 484, 59 N. E. 257, 53 L. R. A. 544; In re Stevens, 187 N. Y. 471, 80 N. E. 358, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814, 10 Ann. Cas. 511; New England Trust Co. v. Eaton, 140 Mass. 532, 4 N. E. 69, 54 Am. Rep. 493, Holmes, J., dissenting, with the concurrence of the Chief Justice and Allen, J.; the case is strongly criticised in 34 Alb. L. J. 144.

A trustee's discretion, if in good faith, will not be interfered with by a court; Shelton v. King, 229 U. S. 90, 33 Sup. Ct. 636, 57 L. Ed. 1086.

Ordinarily the law will not permit a trustee to contract with his cestui que trust for a pecuniary advantage; to do so, he must first dissolve the fiduciary relation; Stewart v. Fellows, 128 Ill. 480, 20 N. E. 657.

A writer has deduced the following rules as to investments by trustees (13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 210): Where there is no express power of sale in the instrument creating a trust, and none is necessarily implied, and the discretion of the trustee is the sole restriction upon investments, he will generally be protected where he has acted bona fide and with reasonable diligence and prudence. But in a state where the trustee is protected from loss which may arise from certain specified and so-called legal investments, the rule is much more stringent, and extraordinary care and diligence are required of the trustee as well as bona fides, and it is dangerous to invest trust funds in any other securities than those thus indicated. But where there is no express power of sale given, and where none such can necessarily be implied from the nature of the trustee's duties, the only safe means of changing an insecure investment, left so by the creator of the trust, is to make the change under the direction of the proper court, and if done without such authority, the trustee will be liable to the cestui que trust for breach of trust. Where there is no such power of sale and the trustee leaves unchanged an investment made by the testator and loss ensues, he will generally be protected if acting with bona fides, even in cases where, if there had been a power of sale and he had neglected to sell, he would have been liable under the first rule laid down above.

A trustee will not be surcharged for a loss which has occurred to the estate if he has exercised common skill, prudence, and caution, but he will be held responsible for supine negligence or wilful default; In re Bartol's Estate, 182 Pa. 407, 38 Atl. 527. Where a trustee held on to mortgages on agricultural land in hopes that an apparently temporary depression would pass away, it was held that he had committed only an error of judgment and was not liable for loss; [1896] 1 Ch. 323.

An act of 1896 in England provides that if a trustee acts honestly and reasonably, he may be relieved wholly or partly from personal liability for loss through investments; [1897] 1 Ch. 536.

The office and duties of trustees being matters of personal confidence, they are not allowed to delegate these powers unless such a power is expressly given by the authority by which they were created; but a trustee may appoint an agent where it is usual to do so in the ordinary course of business; Blight v. Schenck, 10 Pa. 285, 51 Am. Dec. 478; Sinclair v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 543.

A trustee, though remunerated for his services, is not liable to the trust estate for loss caused by the thefts of a servant employed by him, where he has exercised due care in the selection of the servant; [1893] 1 Ch. 71.

Where a trustee has delegated his trust, there is no question of primary and secondary liability in respect of a breach of trust, but all are equally liable; 68 Law T. 18.

While the law allows a person named as trustee to disclaim or renounce, he cannot, if he has by any means accepted and entered upon the trust, rid himself of the duties and responsibilities after such acceptance, except by a legal discharge by competent authority; Shepherd v. McEvers, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 136, 8 Am. Dec. 561; 1 My. & K. 195. Disclaimer of a trust may be established by acts, or by non-action long continued; Brandon v. Carter, 119 Mo. 572, 24 S. W. 1035, 41 Am. St. Rep. 673. Where trustees who hold church property have seceded from the church, and also been expelled, they have divested themselves of all control of the church property and cannot maintain a bill to enjoin any one from doing anything which affects the property; Garrett v. Nace, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 475.

The trustee is in law generally regarded as the owner of the property, whether the same be real or personal; Hill, Trust. 229. Yet this rule is subject to material qualifications when taken in connection with the doctrines of powers and uses, and the legislation of the several states; Bank of United States v. Beverly, 1 How. (U. S.) 134, 11 L. Ed. 75; 4 Kent 321.

The quality and continuance of the estate of a trustee will be determined by the purpose and exigency of the trust, rather than by the phraseology employed in the description of the estate conveyed; and, therefore, if the language be that the estate goes to the trustee and his heirs, it may be limited to a shorter period, if thereby the purposes of the creation of the trust are satisfied; 8 Hare 156; Nicoll v. Walworth, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 385.

Where there are several trustees, they are considered to hold as joint-tenants, and on the death of any one the property remains vested in the survivor or survivors; and on the death of the last, the property, if personal (at common law), went to the heir or personal representative of the last-deceased trustee. But the rule as to trust property going to heirs and executors is changed in most of the states, so that in theory the court of chancery assumes the control, and it appoints a new trustee on the decease of former trustees. If power be committed to two or more trustees, it is regarded as coupled with an interest, and will still exist in the surviving trustee on the death of any or all of his co-trustees. 2 Prob. Rep. Ann. 23. If the power is confided to several trustees, nominatim, it imports a personal discretion or confidence of a personal nature, and on the death of one of these donees the power dies with him and cannot be exercised by the survivors; id.; 13 Sim. 91; 4 Kent 311.

See TRUST.

Each trustee has equal interest in and control over the trust estate; and hence, as a general rule, they cannot (as executors may) act or bind the trust separately, but must act jointly; 4 Ves. Ch. 97; Ridgeley v. Johnson, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 527. All the trustees of a single trust must execute the duties of the trust jointly; People v. O'Loughlin, 79 Misc. 650, 140 N. Y. Supp. 488. One of three trustees cannot institute a suit without the knowledge and consent of the others; McGeorge v. Imp. Co., 88 Fed. 599; the joint act of several executors is necessary in any transaction under the will; Hosch Lumber Co. v. Weeks, 123 Ga. 336, 51 S. E. 439; though more power is usually given to a single executor than to a single trustee.

A co-trustee is not responsible for the act of his co-trustee where the latter undertook the entire management of the trust; Meldon v. Devlin, 20 Misc. 56, 45 N. Y. Supp. 333; nor does the mere acceptance of commissions render him liable; In re Westerfield, 32 App. Div. 324, 53 N. Y. Supp. 25.

Joint trustees are not responsible for money received by their co-trustees if the receipt be given for the mere purposes of form. But if receipts be given under circumstances purporting that the money, though not received by both, was under the control of both, such a receipt shall charge, and the consent that the other shall misapply the money, particularly where he has it in his power to secure it, renders him responsible; Pim v. Downing. 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 71. In the case of a public trust, the acts of a majority are binding; Bisph. Eq. § 147.

A trustee is, generally, not responsible for the conduct of his co-trustee; see 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. §58; where several trustees join in a receipt, prima facie, all will be considered to have received the money, but one of them may show that he did not in fact receive the money, but joined in the receipt for conformity; Bisph. Eq. § 146. A trustee who stands by and sees a fraud on the trust committed by his co-trustee will be held responsible for it; Ducommun's Appeal, 17 Pa. 268. But trustees are not liable for the conversion of money collected by their co-trustee, in course of administration of the trust, without their knowledge or consent; Purdy v. Lynch, 72 Hun, 272, 25 N. Y. Supp. 585.

A trustee who joins in a receipt for conformity is not liable for the misapplication of the money by his co-trustee who receives it; Stowe v. Bowen, 99 Mass. 191; unless guilty of culpable negligence; Irwin's Appeal, 35 Pa. 294 (an executor); but he must show that he did not receive it, as his receipt is prima facie evidence against him in equity and conclusive at law. The great preponderance of authority is, that a sale under a power is not different from the execution of a receipt for the trust moneys; but a trustee who joined in receiving the money continues responsible for it until it is invested. Executors are generally held liable only for their own acts, and not for moneys which do not pass into their hands; Perry, Trusts, pp. 416, 420.

The plaintiff allowed the trust fund to be in the hands of defendant, a co-trustee, who entrusted it to a broker, who embezzled part of it; defendant was held entitled to contribution from plaintiff; [1896] 2 Ch. 415.

Where one, at the request of another, undertakes a trust for that other's benefit, he has generally been held entitled to be indemnified by the beneficiary personally, if the trust fund was insufficient, for any expenses connected with the execution of the trust; L. R. 7 Ch. 395; L. R. 4 C. P. 36; and so in the case of calls, in liquidation of a company, in excess of the value thereof, if the beneficiary is sui juris; [1901] A. C. 118; a trustee who has honestly and faithfully paid out money for the beneficiary's benefit is entitled to indemnity; Perry, Trusts, § 485.

One trustee may be held responsible for losses which he has enabled a co-trustee to cause, though there was no actual participation by him; State v. Guilford, 18 Ohio 509; Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. (U. S.) 233, 12 L. Ed. 130. It is the duty of each trustee to carry out the trust, and a trustee cannot relieve himself of the duty by agreement with his co-trustees to look after only certain parts of the trust property; Hayes v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 13 Sup. Ct. 503, 37 L. Ed. 279.

A trustee may come into equity to obtain advice and assistance in the execution of his trust; Hill, Trust. 298.

A testamentary trustee may file a bill for instructions by the court in a case involving reasonable grounds of doubt as to the meaning of the trust; Mersman v. Mersman, 136 Mo. 244, 37 S. W. 909; Stephenson v. Norris, 128 Wis. 242, 107 N. W. 343; Jones v. Creamer, 32 Ohio Cir. Ct. 223 (under the Code). Instructions to a trustee will be given only on the present disposition of income when the time for a division of the principal has not arrived; Bailey v. Smith, 214 Mass. 114, 101 N. E. 62.

Where the legal estate is vested in trustees, all actions at law relative to the trust property must be brought in their name, but the trustee must not exercise his legal powers to the prejudice of a cestui que trust, and third persons must take notice of this limitation of the legal rights of a trustee; 2 Vern. 197.

The trustee (and also his personal representatives to the extent of any property received from the trustee) is responsible in suit for any breach of trust, and will be compelled to compensate what his negligence has lost of the trust estate. He is not only chargeable with the principal and income of the trust property he has received, but is liable for an amount equal to what, with good management, he might have received; and this includes interest on a sum he has needlessly allowed to remain where it earned no interest; 2 Beav. 430; 4 Russ. 195.

The rule as to the right of a trustee to contribution from his co-trustee for loss by a breach of trust for which both are equally to blame, does not apply where one of the trustees is also a cestui que trust and has received an exclusive benefit by the breach of trust; in that case the rule to be applied is that under which the share or interest of a cestui que trust who has assented to, and profited by a breach of trust has to bear the whole loss; and the trustee who is a cestui que trust must, therefore, indemnify his co-trustee to the extent of his share or interest in the trust estate, and not merely to the extent of the benefit he has received; [1896] 1 Ch. D. 685.

A trustee is entitled to reasonable compensation; Jarrett v. Johnson, 116 Ill. App. 592; Urann v. Coates, 117 Mass. 41. The cases are so numerous and vary so much on their facts that no rule can be deduced within present limits. The orphans' court cannot divide commissions as between co-trustees; Greble's Estate (No. 1), 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 42. A trustee is entitled to commissions on income without filing an account; Cook v. Stockwell, 206 N. Y. 481, 100 N. E. 131, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 491, affirming 144 App. Div. 895, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1119.

Commissions upon the corpus of a trust estate are never allowed except when the fund is in course of distribution; Bosler's Estate, 161 Pa. 457, 29 Atl. 57; except under extraordinary circumstances; id.

Trustees in control of real property under a will are liable in tort as individuals for their negligence in its management; O'Malley v. Gerth, 67 N. J. L. 610; 52 Atl. 563; if liable at all, they are liable as individuals; Moniot v. Jackson, 40 Misc. 197, 81 N. Y. Supp. 688. But it is held that they are not in such case liable to a passer-by caused by their servant's negligence in repairing a sidewalk; Parmenter v. Barstow, 22 R. I. 245, 47 Atl. 365, 63 L. R. A. 227.

Where trustees have the power to conduct a business as if absolute owners of the property, and without liability for the misconduct of employes, the estate, and not the trustee, is liable for the negligent act of their driver in charge of a team employed in the business; Prinz v. Lucas, 210 Pa. 620, 60 Atl. 309. Where a trustee carried on the testator's colliery, and, in so doing, let down the surface of the land and injured the building of an adjoining owner, it was held that, as the trustee was entitled to indemnity against the beneficiary, the plaintiff could collect from the estate direct the judgment he obtained against the trustee personally; [1900] 1 Ch. 199.

Notice to a trustee is notice to the cestui que trust; Brannon v. May, 42 Ind. 92. The addition of the word "trustee" to the signature of the drawer of a check constitutes such notice of a trust as to put the payee upon inquiry; Marshall v. De Cordova, 26 App. Div. 615, 50 N. Y. Supp. 294.

A constituent or cestui que trust may sue, and make his representative or trustee a defendant, when the latter refuses after a reasonable time to sue; Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 80 C. C. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154.

TRUSTEE PROCESS. A legal process used in the New England states, and similar to the garnishee process of others.

All goods, effects, and credits so intrusted or deposited in the hands of others that the same cannot be attached by ordinary process of law, may, by an original writ or process, the form of which is given by the statute, be attached in whose hands or possession soever they may be found, and they shall, from the service of the writ, stand bound and be held to satisfy such judgment as the plaintiff may recover against the principal defendant; Cushing, Trustee Pr. 2. It is issued as part of the original writ.

Under the trustee process, in Massachusetts, a plaintiff, without giving bond, can attach substantially any property of a defendant which would be subject to execution at common law or can tie up the "goods, effects and credits," of the defendant deposited with or entrusted to a third person. It does not appear to be settled as to how much of the defendant's property the plaintiff may attach. He is entitled to full protection on his claim. In practice the ad damnum clause is the outside limit of his attachment and it is always open to the defendant to move for a reduction of the attachment. The defendant may dissolve the attachment by giving bond.

TUB. A measure containing sixty pounds of tea, and from fifty-six to eighty-six pounds of camphor. Jacob.

TUB-MAN. In Old English Law. A barister who had a pre-audience in the Court of Exchequer, and also one who had a particular place in court, was so called. So also a "Post-man." These designations came from the places where they sat. See 3 Steph. Com. 318; 7 M. & W. 188.

TUCKER ACT. The act of March 3, 1887, relating to the jurisdiction of the court of claims. Garl. & Ralston, Fed. Pr. 413. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

TUG. A steam vessel built for towing; practically synonymous with towboat.

Tugs are subject to the ordinary rules of navigation touching collisions. Where a schooner was being towed by a tug lashed to her port side, the fact that the schooner had a pilot on board did not make the tug the mere servant of the schooner, so as to exempt the tug from responsibility; The Charles Allen, 11 Fed. 319; The Atlas, 93 U. S. 302, 23 L. Ed. 863.

A tug is not a common carrier or insurer, and is bound only to reasonable care and skill; The W. H. Simpson, 80 Fed. 153, 25 C. C. A. 318; Brown v. Clegg, 63 Pa. 51, 3 Am. Rep. 522; The Margaret, 94 U. S. 494, 24 L. Ed. 146.

A tug and tow while being slowly navigated are held not to blame in a collision with a steam ship in a fog, although they do not stop where there are indications of danger. It is not subject to the same rule as two steam ships approaching each other under like circumstances; [1897] P. 28. A contribution in general average cannot be had against a steam tug for casting off the tow of barges in order to save the tug; the tug and barges do not constitute a single maritime adventure; The J. P. Donaldson, 167 U. S. 599, 17 Sup. Ct. 951, 42 L. Ed. 292. Towage contracts are within admiralty jurisdiction; The W. J. Walsh, 5 Bened. 72, Fed. Cas. No. 17,922.

See TOWAGE.

TUMBREL. An instrument of punishment made use of by the Saxons, chiefly for the correction of scolding women by ducking them in water, consisting of a stool or chair fixed to the end of a long pole.

A chair fixed on a pair of wheels. See CUCKING-STOOL.

It is said to mean a manure cart. Used of vehicles which drew French prisoners to the guillotine; but that was a large, 4-wheel wagon. Cent. Dict.

TUMULTUOUS PETITIONING. Under stat. 13 Car. II. st. 1, c. 5, this was a misdemeanor, and consisted in more than twenty persons signing any petition to the crown or either house of parliament for the alteration of matters established by law in church or state, unless the contents thereof had been approved by three justices, or the majority of the grand jury at assizes or quarter sessions. No petition could be delivered by more than ten persons. 4 Bla. Com. 147. Not more than twenty names could be signed.

TUN. A measure of wine or oil, containing four hogsheads.

TUNGREVE. A reeve or bailiff. Spelman, Gloss.

TUNNAGE. A duty in England anciently due upon all wines imported, over and above the prisage and butlerage. 2 Steph. Com. 628.

TUNNEL. A municipal corporation, authorized by law to improve a street by building on the line thereof a tunnel under a navigable river, incurs no liability for damages unavoidably caused to adjoining property by obstructing the street or river, unless such liability be imposed by statute. Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. Ed. 336.

Where a railroad company, having a right of way over a street, built a tunnel through it, it was held that its right to the surface was not impaired; Junction R. Co. v. Boyd, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 224.

TURBARY. In English Law. A right to dig turf; an easement. It cannot be dug for sale; Noy 145. See COMMON.

TURF AND TWIG. A piece of turf, or a twig or a bough, were delivered by the feoffor to the feoffee in making livery of seisin. 2 Bla. Com. 315. See SYMBOLIC DELIVERY; SEISIN.

Turf and Twig and Water. Referred to in Penn's defence of his title to the Three Lower Counties (in Delaware). See Amer. Hist. Soc., 1903, p. 244.

TURN, or TOURN. See SHERIFF'S TOURN.

TURNKEY. A person under the superintendence of a jailor, whose employment is to open and fasten the prison-doors and to prevent the prisoners from escaping.

It is his duty to use due diligence; and he may be punished for gross neglect or wilful misconduct in permitting prisoners to escape.

TURNOUT. A short side-track on a railroad which may be occupied by one train while another is passing on the main track; a siding. Philadelphia v. R. Co., 133 Pa. 134, 19 Atl. 356. See RAILROAD.

Turnouts and switches, in an act providing that a railroad company may build such without altering its charter, relate to tracks in the nature of side tracks, adjacent to and used in connection with another line of track, and do not refer to a track which branches off entirely from the existing line to a distant objective point; Memphis v. R. Co., 183 Fed. 529, 106 C. C. A. 75.

TURNPIKE. See TURNPIKE-ROAD.

TURNPIKE-ROAD. A road or highway over which the public have the right to travel upon payment of toll, and on which the parties entitled to such toll have the right to erect gates and bars to insure its payment. 6 M. & W. 428; Maysville & Mt. S. Turnp. Co. v. Ratliff, 85 Ky. 244, 3 S. W. 148.

A turnpike-road is a public highway; Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. v. Com., 104 Pa. 583; Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 8 Dana (Ky.) 289, 33 Am. Dec. 497; and the obstructing of it is a public nuisance; Com. v. Wilkinson, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 175, 26 Am. Dec. 654; and the posting of a notice that the company could not profitably keep up the road and unless it was bought by the county it would be closed up as private property, was held to be in effect an abandonment of the road and it became a public highway; Craig v. People, 47 Ill. 487.

Turnpike-roads are usually made by corporations under legislative authority; and, the roads being deemed a public use, such corporations are usually armed with the power to take private property for their construction. The title to the soil remains in the owners of the adjoining land; Wright v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 76; and, after the franchise for the construction of the turnpike has expired, the road reverts to the public; Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. v. Com., 104 Pa. 583; State v. Toll-Road Co., 10 Nev. 155. The legislature may authorize the conversion of an existing highway into a turnpike-road; Sherwood v. Weston, 18 Conn. 32; without any pecuniary equivalent to the owner of the fee, such road still remaining a public highway; Chagrin, F. & C. P. R. Co. v. Cane, 2 Ohio St. 419; but no matter how bad the condition of a public road, its condition is no justification to a turnpike company for taking it as the line of a turnpike; Groff's Appeal, 128 Pa. 621, 18 Atl. 431. A turnpike-road being a highway, any obstruction placed thereon renders the author of it liable as for a public nuisance; Commonwealth v. Wilkinson, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 175, 26 Am. Dec. 654; Estes v. Kelsey, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 555.

A turnpike company cannot be deprived of its road or its franchise by the extension of the limits of a municipal corporation to include the road; Fort Wayne L. & I. Co. v. Road Co., 132 Ind. 80, 30 N. E. 880, 15 L. R. A. 651. It is held that municipal authorities may require the grade of a turnpike within its limits to be changed to conform to that of a street; Borough of Chambersburg v. Manko, 39 N. J. L. 500; and the municipality may require the turnpike to be kept in repair, but the city is not liable for a failure to do so; State v. New Brunswick, 32 N. J. L. 548; and a municipality may, by legislative authority, tax itself in aid of a turnpike company; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. Ed. 520; Douglas v. Chatham, 41 Conn. 211.

A statute attempting to authorize a court, without a jury, to declare a turnpike-road abandoned and its franchise forfeited because the road has been out of repair for six months, violates the constitutional guaranty of trial by jury and against the deprivation of property without due process of law; Salt Creek Turnp. Co. v. Parks, 50 Ohio St. 568, 35 N. E. 304, 28 L. R. A. 769.

Turnpike companies, so long as they continue to take toll, are bound to use ordinary care in keeping their roads in suitable repair, and for any neglect of this duty are liable to action on the case for the damages to any person especially injured thereby; Townsend v. Turnpike Co., 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 90; Pomeroy v. Turnpike Corp., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 35; and to an indictment on the part of the public; State v. Patton, 26 N. C. 16; Moore v. State, 26 Ala. 88; Com. v. Bridge Corp., 2 Gray (Mass.) 58.

Travelers are liable for toll though they avoid the gates; Fitch v. Lothrop, 2 Root (Conn.) 524; Centre Turnpike Co. v. Vandusen, 10 Vt. 197; but not for travel between the gates without passing the same; Elliott, Roads 70; Lexington & G. T. Rd. Co. v. Redd, 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 30; Buncombe Turnpike Co. v. Mills, 32 N. C. 30; but where the traveler entered upon the turnpike and traveled thereon and when near a toll gate, turned out upon a public highway and thereby passed the toll gate without paying toll, but did not enter again upon the turnpike, he was not liable under a statute for fraudulent evasion of tolls, although he may have had such intention; Centre Turnpike Co. v. Vandusen, 10 Vt. 197.

In an action by a company to enforce the statutory penalty for illegally passing its tollgate, it is no defense that the road was not in good condition; Canal St. Gravel-Road Co. v. Paas, 95 Mich. 372, 54 N. W. 907. Exemptions from toll are construed most liberally in favor of the community; Ang. High. § 359; and are usually created by special statute in relation to different kinds of vehicles; Mahon v. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 658; going to or from mills; Bates v. Sutherland, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 510; in favor of husbandry; Camden, E. & M. T. Co. v. Fowler, 24 N. J. L. 205; going to church; 2 B. & Ald. 206; ordinary domestic business of family concerns; Centre Turnp. Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 212. Mail coaches are subject to toll, but may not be delayed for non-payment; Hopkins v. Stockton, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 163.

A turnpike company authorized to collect toll from designated carriages, etc., may collect toll from bicycles, although the amount of toll cannot be exactly determined by the method designated for other vehicles; Geiger v. Turnp. Road, 167 Pa. 582, 31 Atl. 918, 28

L. R. A. 458; but no charge can be made to the person using bicycles where the statute designates "vehicles drawn by animals"; Murfin v. Plank-Road Co., 113 Mich. 675, 71 N. W. 1108, 38 L. R. A. 198, 67 Am. St. Rep. 489; "or vehicles drawn by one or more beasts;" String v. Turnp. Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 227, 40 Atl. 774.

A "shunpike" is a road or turnpike laid out by an individual or by the selectmen of the town to facilitate the evasion of toll by travellers upon a turnpike road and will entitle the turnpike company to an action on the case for the damages, or to an injunction ordering the same to be closed; Elliott, Roads, 74; Cheshire Turnpike v. Stevens, 10 N. H. 133; Salem & H. Turnpike Co. v. Lyme, 18 Conn. 451; Clarksville & R. Turnpike Co. v. Clarksville (Tenn.) 36 S. W. 979; unless made necessary by the lay of the land and the wants of the community; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773. And such company has been held entitled to compensation for the injury to their franchise by a highway which intersects their road at two distinct points and thereby enables travellers to evade the payment of tolls, though such highway be regularly established by the proper authorities to meet the necessities of public travel; In re Flatbrush Ave., 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 286.

Abutting owners have a right to enter on a turnpike from any part of their premises and they may erect and maintain bridges for that purpose, but cannot so connect it with a private way that it operates as a shunpike, and allow it to be used by the general public; Cincinnati & S. G. Ave. Co. v. Bates, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. 376; Chestnut Hill & S. H. Turnpike Co. v. Piper, 15 W. N. C. (Pa.) 55; and a turnpike company cannot by building a fence along its road prevent any one from entering thereon from his own property at any point; Saul v. Turnpike Co., 12 Phila. (Pa.) 346.

TURNTABLE CASES. The defendants, who owned waste land, allowed the public to transverse it, and children of all ages played on it. A child was injured by a fall of a stone from a stone pile. Held, that there being neither allurements, nor trap, nor invitation, nor dangerous object placed upon the land, the defendants were not liable; [1913] 1 K. B. 398. See NEGLIGENCE.

TURPIS CAUSA (Lat.). A base or vile consideration, forbidden by law, which makes the contract void: as, a contract the consideration of which is the future illegal cohabitation of the obligee with the obligor.

TURPITUDE. Everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals, is said to be done with turpitude.

TUTELA (Lat.). A power given by the civil law over a free person to defend him when by reason of his age he is unable to defend himself. Women by the civil law could only be tutors of their own children. A child under the power of his father was not subject to tutelage, because not a free person, caput liberum.

Legitima tutela was where the tutor was appointed by the magistrate.

TUTELAGE. See TUTELA.

TUTEUR OFFICIEUX. In French Law. A person whose duties are analogous to those of a guardian in English law; he must, however, be over fifty years of age, and appointed with the consent of the parents, or, in their default, of the conseil de famille, and is only appointed for a child over fifteen years of age.

TUTEUR SUBROGÉ. In French Law. The title of a second guardian appointed for an infant under guardianship; his functions are exercised in case the interests of the infant and his principal guardian conflict. Code Nap. 420; Brown, Dict.

TUTOR. In Civil Law. One who has been lawfully appointed to the care of the person and property of a minor.

By the laws of Louisiana, minors under the age of fourteen years, if males, and under the age of twelve years, if females, are, both as to their persons and their estates, placed under the authority of a tutor. Above that age, and until their majority or emancipation, they are placed under the authority of a curator.

TUTOR ALIENUS (Lat.). In English Law. The name given to a stranger who enters upon the lands of an infant within the age of fourteen, and takes the profits.

He may be called to an account by the infant and be charged as guardian in socage; Littleton, s. 124; Co. Litt. 89 b, 90 a.

TUTOR PROPRIUS (Lat.). The name given to one who is rightly a guardian in socage, in contradistinction to a tutor alienus.

TUTORSHIP. The power which an individual, sui juris, has to take care of the person of one who is unable to take care of himself. Tutorship differs from curatorship. See PROCURATOR; PROTUTOR.

TUTRIX (Lat.). A woman who is appointed to the office of a tutor.

TWELFHINDI. The highest rank of men in the Saxon government, who were valued at 1,200s. For any injury done to them, satisfaction was to be made according to their worth. Cowell.

TWELVE-DAY WRIT. A writ for summary procedure on bills of exchange and promissory notes. Whart.

TWELVE TABLES, LAWS OF THE. Laws of ancient Rome. It was formerly supposed that the law of the Twelve Tables belonged to a more archaic type than it really does. Modern students take the view that Roman law was not at any one time a perfect and symmetrical whole. Probably they were regarded as an ultimate source of law for the field they covered, but they did not purport to include the whole of the recognized customary law; they were no mere consolidation, but a reforming code. It is certain that they incorporated Greek materials. The means of information were at hand in the Greek cities of Southern Italy. On the other hand, doubts that have lately been cast upon their antiquity have not met with a favorable reception. It would seem that they went near to stereotype an archaic and formalist procedure and that the Romans of later generations escaped from great inconvenience only by the devices of legal fictions and equity. Pollock's Maine's Anc. L. 19, 25.

It is by no means certain that the extant fragments of them have come down to us in their precise form and expression. The language has probably been somewhat modified by subsequent usage. These laws are not fresh enactments, but merely a written statement of the law as it actually stood. They were substantially a codification, and not merely an incorporation, of the customary law of the people. There were Greek elements in them, but still they were essentially Roman; Hunter, Rom. L. 16. See Stephenson, Hist. Rom. L. 120; Sohm's Inst. Rom. L.

See CODE; Dr. Voight's Twelve Tables (Leipsic, 1883).

TWELVEMONTH, in the singular includes the whole year, but in the plural, twelve months of twenty-eight days each. 6 Co. 62; Bish. Writ. Laws 97. See MONTH.

TWICE IN JEOPARDY. See JEOPARDY.

TWYHINDI. The lower order of Saxons, valued at 200s. Cowell. See TWELFHINDI.

TYBURN TICKET. In English Law. A certificate given to the prosecutor of a felon to conviction. By the 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 23, the original proprietor or first assignee of such certificate is exempted from all and all manner of parish and ward offices within the parish or ward where the felony shall have been committed; Bacon, Abr. Constable (C).

TYPEWRITING. In the administration of the post-office department type-writing is treated as writing, and letter postage is charged therefor. So in some states where wills are required to be "in writing" a typewritten paper is treated as sufficient. A typewritten memorial presented to the house of commons (1897) was refused. It is expressly legalized by statute in New York, for all state and municipal officers in all records (March 23, 1894); in Connecticut, for taking evidence in courts of common pleas in the same way as stenographers (May 7, 1895); in Oregon for wills (April 17, 1896); while in Pennsylvania it is more comprehensively declared to be of equal force with writing except for signatures (June 18, 1895).

A carbon copy, typewritten at the same time as the original and signed, will be regarded as an original; Cole v. Power Co., 216 Pa. 283, 65 Atl. 678; contra, Harmon v. Territory, 15 Okl. 147, 79 Pac. 765; but a letter wholly typewritten and signed with a stencil was held inadmissible in a criminal case, as a communication from the accused, unless he acknowledged it as his letter, or it was acted upon by him; Sprinkle v. U. S., 150 Fed. 56, 82 C. C. A. 1.

TYRANNY. The violation of those laws which regulate the division and the exercises of the sovereign power of the state. It is a violation of its constitution. See DESPOTISM.

U

UBERRIMA FIDES (Lat. most perfect good faith). A phrase used to express the perfect good faith, concealing nothing, with which a contract must be made; for example, in the case of insurance, the insured must observe the most perfect good faith towards the insurer. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 317. See GOOD FAITH.

UBI JUS, IBI REMEDIUM. See MAXIM; REMEDY.

UDAL. Allodial. See ALOD.

UKASE. The name of a law or ordinance emanating from the czar of Russia.

ULNAGE. Alnage. See ALNAGER.

ULTIMATE FACTS. Facts in issue as opposed to probative or evidential facts, the latter being such as serve to establish or disprove the issue. Kahn v. Smelting Co., 2 Utah 379.

ULTIMATUM (Lat.). The last proposition made in making a contract, a treaty, and the like: as, the government of the United States has given its ultimatum, has made the last proposition it will make to complete the proposed treaty. The word also means the result of a negotiation, and it comprises the final determination of a party concerned in the matter in dispute.

ULTIMUM SUPPLICIUM (Lat.). The last or extreme punishment; the penalty of death.

ULTIMUS HÆRES (Lat.). The last or remote heir; the lord. So called in contradistinction to the hæres proximus and the hæres remotior. Dalr. Feud. Pr. 110.

ULTRA MARE. Beyond seas (q. v.).

ULTRA VIRES. The modern technical designation, in the law of corporations, of acts beyond the scope of their powers, as defined by their charters or acts of incorporation.

A term used to express the action of a corporation which is beyond the powers conferred upon it by its charter, or the statutes under which it was instituted. 13 Am. L. Rev. 532.

An act of a corporation in excess of its powers, with reference to third persons. Holland, Jurisprud. 286. It is also, less properly, applied to a resolution of a majority of the members of a corporation which, being beyond the power of the corporation, will not bind the dissenting majority; L. R. 1 Eq. 593.

This doctrine is of somewhat modern growth; its appearance dates from about the year 1845, being first prominently mentioned in 10 Beav. 1 and 11 C. B. 775. See Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 729.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 47 Fed. 15, Brewer, J., said: "Two propositions are settled. One is that the contract by which a corporation disables itself from performing its functions and duties undertaken by its charter is, unless the state which created it consents, ultra vires. The other is that the powers of a corporation are such, and such only, as the charter confers, and an act beyond the measure of those powers, as either expressly stated or fairly implied, is ultra vires. Those two propositions embrace the whole doctrine of ultra vires."

The general rule is that a contract by which a railroad company renders itself incapable of performing its duties to the public or attempts to absolve itself from those obligations without the consent of the state, or a contract made by a corporation beyond the scope of its powers, express or implied, on a proper construction of its charter, cannot be enforced, or rendered enforceable by the application of the doctrine of estoppel; but where the subject-matter of the contract is not foreign to the purposes for which the corporation is created, a contract embracing whatever may fairly be regarded as incidental to, or consequential upon, these things which the legislature has authorized, ought not, unless expressly prohibited, to be held, by judicial construction, to be ultra vires; Union P. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 163 U. S. 564, 16 Sup. Ct. 1173, 41 L. Ed. 265.

When acts of corporations are spoken of as ultra vires, it is not intended that they are unlawful, or even such as the corporation cannot perform, but merely those which are not within the powers conferred upon the corporation by the act of its creation, etc.; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 68, 20 Am. Rep. 504. A corporate act is said to be ultra vires when it is not within the scope of the powers of the corporation to perform it under any circumstances, or for any purpose; or, with reference to the rights of certain parties, when the corporation is not authorized to perform it without their consent; or, with reference to some specific purpose, when it is not authorized to perform it for that purpose, though fully within the scope of the general powers of the corporation, with the consent of the parties interested, or for some other purpose; McPherson v. Foster, 43 Ia. 48, 22 Am. Rep. 215. See 35 L. J. Ch. 156; National P. Bank v. Porter, 125 Mass. 333, 28 Am. Rep. 235; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 30.

As a general rule, such acts are void, and impose no obligation upon the corporation although they assume the form of contracts; inasmuch as all persons dealing with a corporation, especially in the state or country in which and under whose laws it was created, are chargeable with notice of the extent of its chartered powers. It is otherwise as to laws imposing restraints upon it not contained in its charter where the contract is made or the transaction takes place without the limits of the state or country under whose laws the corporation exists; Bank of Chillicothe v. Dodge, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 233.

The artificial body—the corporation—is liable to be proceeded against by quo warranto for the usurpation of powers in its name by its officers and agents, and its charter may be taken away as a penalty for permitting such acts—the defence of a want of power to bind the corporation not being available in such cases, since it would lead to entire corporate irresponsibility; Moraw. Pri. Corp. § 649.

In the United States the defence of ultra vires interposed against a contract wholly or in part executed has been said to be very generally looked upon with disfavor. The result has been that in some cases a liberal construction has been applied so as to destroy the foundation of the defence; in others the courts have allowed the recovery of the money paid, not upon the contract, but because of the money received and the benefits enjoyed; while in still another class of cases, the doctrine of estoppel in pais has been applied to exclude the defence. The courts may be said, generally, to be tending towards the doctrine—certainly so far as business corporations are concerned—that corporations are to be held liable upon executed contracts, where the contracts involved are not expressly or by necessary implication prohibited by their charters or the general law; Brice, Ultra Vires 729.

There is said to be a tendency of the courts, based upon the strongest principles of justice, to enforce contracts against corporations, although in entering into them they have exceeded their chartered powers, where they have received the consideration and the benefit of the contract; Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. Ed. 188; Assets Realization Co. v. Howard, 70 Misc. 651, 127 N. Y. Supp. 798; Richeson v. Bank, 96 Ark. 594, 132 S. W. 913; Latulippe v. Inv. Co. (N. H.) 86 Atl. 361; and the rule that the charter of a corporation is to be construed strictly against the grantee does not apply to a case where the corporation seeks to repudiate contracts whereof it has enjoyed the benefits, or where such contracts are attacked by creditors after the corporation became insolvent; Tod v. Land Co., 57 Fed. 47; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 47 Fed. 22. The doctrine of ultra vires, when invoked for or against a corporation, should not be allowed to prevail where it would defeat the ends of justice or work a legal wrong; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 24 L. Ed. 693. The executed dealings of corporations should be allowed to stand for and against both parties, when good faith so requires; Bissell v. R. Co., 22 N. Y. 258; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504. Where a corporation has entered into a contract which has been fully executed on the other part, and nothing remains but the payment by the corporation of the consideration, it will not be allowed to set up that the contract was ultra vires. Oil Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Transp. Co., 83 Pa. 160.

A transaction which is ultra vires as to one of two corporations is equally invalid as if beyond the power of both; Anglo-American L., M. & A. Co. v. Lombard, 132 Fed. 721, 68 C. C. A. 89.

The defence is not looked upon with favor when a corporation has had the benefit of the contract; it is applicable only when the contract is executory; the corporation is estopped to plead it when it has had the benefit of the contract; Vermont Farm Mach. Co. v. Creamery Co., 145 Ia. 491, 122 N. W. 930; Chapman v. Rheostat Co., 62 N. J. L. 497, 41 Atl. 690; Bobzin v. Valve Co., 140 Ia. 744, 118 N. W. 40; Assets Realization Co. v. Howard, 70 Misc. 651, 127 N. Y. Supp. 798; Presbyterian Board v. Gilbee, 212 Pa. 310, 61 Atl. 925; William R. Bush Const. Co. v. Const. Co., 176 Mo. App. 608, 159 S. W. 738; Crowder State Bank v. Powder Co. (Okla.) 138 Pac. 392; it cannot be set up if it would accomplish a legal wrong; see In re Waterloo Organ Co., 134 Fed. 341, 343, 67 C. C. A. 255; Red Cross Protective Soc. v. Wayte, 171 Fed. 643, 96 C. C. A. 126 (except when public rights are involved); or defeat justice; Kellogg-Mackay Co. v. Hotel Co., 199 Fed. 727, 118 C. C. A. 165.

If a contract not against public policy or a statute has been performed by the other party, the corporation is estopped to set up the defence; Marshalltown S. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 149 Ia. 141, 126 N. W. 190; it is not, however, binding upon the corporation beyond the benefits received by it; Gaston & Ayres v. J. I. Campbell Co. (Tex.) 130 S. W. 222; and it need not return such benefits in order to set up the defence beyond the amount of such benefits; id.

Estoppel cannot be set up where the act was against a statute or a declared rule of public policy; Quinby v. Trust Co., 140 Fed. 362.

A fully executed transaction will not be disturbed; Alabama C. C. & I. Co. v. Trust Co., 197 Fed. 347; National Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. Ed. 188. It is said that this case was decided before that court entertained the views that were afterwards expressed by Gray, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in the Central Transportation Case, and that the reasoning of the two cases is inconsistent. See 24 Harv. L. Rev. 546.

A corporation that has acted as a trustee without authority cannot, after receiving the trust funds, withhold them from the owners;

Central R. & Banking Co. v. Trust Co., 116 Fed. 700. A corporation cannot repudiate a contract as ultra vires when the other party has changed his position in reliance upon its validity; Osmer v. Brokerage Co., 155 Mo. App. 211, 134 S. W. 65. A corporation having power to do a thing in a prescribed way, will be estopped as against third persons to deny that it was done in that way; Alabama Consol. C. & I. Co. v. Trust Co., 197 Fed. 347.

Other cases hold that an ultra vires contract cannot be validated by estoppel: Nothing which has been done under contracts of a corporation beyond the scope of its powers or the action of the courts can infuse any vitality in them; O'Brien v. Wheelock, 184 U. S. 450, 490, 22 Sup. Ct. 354, 46 L. Ed. 636; such contracts are not voidable, but void, and cannot be validated by estoppel; Anglo-American Land, Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Lombard, 132 Fed. 721, 68 C. C. A. 89; no subsequent act can make it valid by estoppel; Traders' M. L. Ins. Co. v. Humphrey, 207 Ill. 540, 69 N. E. 875. Neither the corporation nor the other party can be estopped; Converse v. Talcott & Co., 242 Ill. 619, 90 N. E. 269.

A contract ultra vires a corporation is void, and the fact that the company has received the benefit of it and that others have acted thereunder creates no estoppel; Converse v. Talcott & Co., 242 Ill. 619, 90 N. E. 269.

There can be no estoppel when the act is contrary to public policy or a statute; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. R. Co., 38 Ind. App. 234, 70 N. E. 843; or where an act is void per se and contrary to public policy; State v. Trust Co., 157 Mo. App. 557, 138 S. W. 669; or against a statute; Kilbourn v. Power Co., 149 Wis. 168, 135 N. W. 499; or against public policy; State v. Trust Co., 157 Mo. App. 557, 138 S. W. 669.

In Central Transp. Co. v. Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55, a sleeping car company leased all its cars, contracts and property to the Pullman Company for 99 years, and agreed not to engage in the business during the life of the contract; the lessee agreed to pay the lessor's debts and an annual rental. On default in the rental the lessor sued for three-quarters of a year rental; it was held that the contract was invalid, as ultra vires, and involving an abandonment of the lessor's duty to the public, and that no action could be maintained upon the contract, or to recover the sums due thereunder, even while the lessee had enjoyed the benefits of the contract. See infra.

This case has been much criticised by Prof. Edward H. Warren in 23 Harv. L. Rev. 495; he considers that the reasoning of Mr. Justice Gray in the opinion of the court is "a source of great confusion. It is a revival of an antiquated conception of corporate action. It announces a sweeping rule, and yet a sweeping application of the rule would produce such monstrous results that no court would apply it;" and he thinks that the court ought frankly to discard the doctrine. It has also been criticised in Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Bank, 127 Ia. 591, 103 N. W. 958; Hunt v. Malting Co., 90 Minn. 282, 96 N. W. 85; Security Nat. Bank v. Power Co., 117 Wis. 211, 218, 94 N. W. 74; but its doctrine appears in Chemical Nat. Bank v. Havermale, 120 Cal. 601, 52 Pac. 1071, 65 Am. St. Rep. 206; Leonhardt & Co. v. Small & Co., 117 Tenn. 153, 96 S. W. 1051, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887, 119 Am. St. Rep. 994; Converse v. Emerson, T. & Co., 242 Ill. 619, 90 N. E. 269; McCormick v. Bank, 165 U. S. 538, 17 Sup. Ct. 433, 41 L. Ed. 817; and approved in Jacksonville, M. P. R. Co. & Nav. Co. v. Hooper, 160 U. S. 524, 16 Sup. Ct. 379, 40 L. Ed. 515. Mr. Justice Gray, when Chief Justice of Massachusetts, delivered the opinion of the court in Davis v. R. Co., 131 Mass. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 221, where it was held ultra vires a railroad company to subscribe to the expenses of a musical festival, although it would bring business to the company. The rule in the Central Transportation Case was applied to a municipal contract in Re Waterloo Organ Co., 134 Fed. 347, 67 C. C. A. 327.

An act or contract of a corporation which is beyond the scope of its corporate powers is incapable of ratification by estoppel or otherwise, and the corporation itself may challenge it. But an act or contract of a corporation which is within its general corporate powers, which is neither wrong in itself nor against public policy, but which is defective from a failure to observe in its execution a requirement of law enacted for the benefit or protection of a third party or parties, is voidable only, and is subject to ratification and estoppel; Westerlund v. Min. Co., 203 Fed. 599, 121 C. C. A. 627, per Sanborn, C. J.

If the contract is wholly executory on both sides, the authorities are nearly unanimous that no relief on the contract may be maintained. (But see Harris v. Gas Co., 76 Kan. 750, 92 Pac. 1123, 13 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1171.) The cases in many states follow the rule laid down in the Central Transportation Case, supra, that no suit can be maintained on the contract; and it seems to be immaterial whether or not all the stockholders authorized or ratified the contract. Of such cases, see particularly Davis v. R. Co., 131 Mass. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 221, where Gray, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court and reviewed a long line of English cases, reaching the conclusion which was afterwards reached in the Central Transportation Case, where he delivered the opinion of the court. The cases in other states are given in Prof. Edward H. Warren's article in 24 Harv. L. Rev. 534. The English cases are in accord; see Ashbury Railroad Carriage, etc., Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 653; Colman v. Eastern Counties Ry., 10 Beav. 1.

In other states relief may be had on the contract under certain circumstances; thus, where the corporation has received something of value by reason of the performance of the contract, in whole or in part, the other party may have relief to a corresponding extent; Bissell v. R. Co., 22 N. Y. 258; where a contract is executed by the other party, a corporation is estopped from asserting its own wrong, and cannot be excused from payment by the plea that the payment was beyond its power; Vought v. Loan Ass'n, 172 N. Y. 508, 65 N. E. 496, 92 Am. St. Rep. 761, quoted and adopted in Eastern Bldg. & L. Ass'n v. Williamson, 189 U. S. 122, 128, 23 Sup. Ct. 527, 47 L. Ed. 735, as a satisfactory declaration of the law of New York. Cases in other states will be found in Prof. Warren's article, supra.

One who has performed in full or even in part may bring a bill in equity for rescission and restoration in statu quo; New Castle N. R. Co. v. Simpson, 21 Fed. 533. The courts, while refusing to maintain an action on the unlawful contract, have permitted property or money, parted with on the faith of the unlawful contract, to be recovered back, or compensation to be made for it. This is on an implied contract to return, or, failing to do that, to make compensation for, property or money which it has no right to retain. This is not to affirm, but to disaffirm the contract; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., supra. If there is nothing essentially immoral in the transaction, the courts will strive to do justice between the parties so far as that can be done, without in any wise relying upon the invalid bargain; Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Trust Co., 197 Fed. 347, 358.

When the Central Transportation Case was again before the court in Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Transp. Co., 171 U. S. 138, 18 Sup. Ct. 808, 43 L. Ed. 108, it was held that the lessee could recover only the value of the property transferred with interest, and not the value of its railroad contracts nor for the breaking up of its business.

It has been held that where the lessee under a railroad lease for 999 years had been in possession and paid the rent for 17 years, and the lessor had taken no steps to repudiate it, equity would not aid in a rescission of the contract; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. R. Co., 145 U. S. 393, 12 Sup. Ct. 953, 36 L. Ed. 748.

Where an executory contract is merely malum prohibitum, a party may rescind it and recover money by him advanced to the other party, who had performed no part thereof; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 49, 26 L. Ed. 347. The granting of quasi-contractual relief in the case of executory ultra vires contracts is said to be in accordance with the ordinary principles of the law of contracts; 23 Harv. L. Rev. 627.

It has been held ultra vires for a railway company to guarantee to the shareholders of a steam packet company a dividend upon capital; 10 Beav. 1; or to guarantee the bonds of another corporation; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Trust Co., 174 U. S. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. 817, 43 L. Ed. 1081; to engage in the coal trade; 6 Jur. N. S. 1006; for a company to assume the debt of another; Stark Bank v. Pottery Co., 34 Vt. 144; or to make or indorse accommodation paper; Smead v. R. Co., 11 Ind. 104; or to engage as surety for another in a business in which it has no interest; Morford v. Farmers' Bank, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; or to guaranty, for accommodation, the obligations of another corporation; Tod v. Land Co., 57 Fed. 47; or, if a coal company, to buy the stock and bonds of a railroad company; Hyman v. Real Estate Co., 79 Misc. 439, 140 N. Y. Supp. 138; see Stock; for one railroad company to unite with another like company, and both conduct their business under one management; Pearce v. R. Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 441, 16 L. Ed. 184; or to run a line of steamboats in connection with its road; Hoagland v. R. Co., 39 Mo. 451; or for a mutual benefit society to undertake to pay the death losses of another insurance company; Twiss v. Life Ass'n, 87 Ia. 733, 55 N. W. 8, 43 Am. St. Rep. 418; but a railway company may contract to carry beyond its own lines; Baltimore & P. S. S. Co. v. Brown, 54 Pa. 77; Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 24 L. Ed. 693; but see Hood v. R. Co., 22 Conn. 502.

Where a corporation is incompetent to take real estate, a conveyance to it is only voidable; Morawetz, Corp., 2d Ed. 678. A railroad company has implied authority to erect a refreshment room; L. R. 7 Eq. 116; a corporation authorized to erect a market has authority to purchase land for that purpose; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 447; where a corporation had authority to keep steam vessels for the purposes of a ferry, they could use these vessels, when otherwise unemployed, for excursion trips; 30 Beav. 40; Brown v. Winnisimmet Co., 11 Allen (Mass.) 326. Corporations generally have authority to borrow money to carry out the objects for which they were created, and to execute their obligations therefor; Field, Corp. § 249; including irredeemable bonds; 21 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 713; they may, generally, by virtue of implied powers, make promissory notes; Police Jury v. Britton, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 566, 21 L. Ed. 251; Mechanic's Banking Ass'n v. Lead Co., 35 N. Y. 505. Where a railroad company, without legislative authority, leased its road to three persons, for twenty years, this was held ultra vires; Thomas v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. Ed. 950. See LEASE. A railroad company cannot guarantee the expense of a musical festival; Davis v. R. Co., 131 Mass. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 221; the same ruling applies to a company organized to manufacture and sell organs; id.

It is said to be now well settled that a power granted to a corporation to engage in certain business carries with it the authority to act precisely as an individual would act in carrying on such business, and that it would possess for this purpose the usual and ordinary means to accomplish the objects of its creation, in the same manner as though it were a natural person; Field, Corp. § 271. A manufacturing corporation may purchase a large tract of land for the purpose of erecting thereon its factories and residences for its employes, and contribute toward the establishment thereof of a church, a school, a free library, and a free bath for its employes; Steinway v. Steinway & Sons, 17 Misc. 43, 40 N. Y. Supp. 718. But see People v. Car Co., 175 Ill. 125, 51 N. E. 664, 64 L. R. A. 366.

Where a railroad company, ultra vires, executed a guarantee upon bonds of a blast furnace company, it was held that the former was liable thereon, whether it had power to bind itself or not; Roosevelt v. Ry. Co., 128 Fed. 465 (an executed contract).

Where a railroad company agreed with an employe injured by negligence, on condition of a release of his claim, to employ him for life, and kept the release till the claim was barred, it could not set up ultra vires; Usher v. R. Co., 179 N. Y. 544, 71 N. E. 1141.

One who procures the discount of a note by a trust company cannot set up that it was ultra vires the trust company; Mutual Trust Co. v. Stern, 235 Pa. 202, 83 Atl. 614.

One contracting with a corporation cannot deny its power to make the contract; Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v. Chatterson, 146 Ky. 504, 143 S. W. 6, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 857.

A corporation holding real estate cannot set up as against the state that it is not authorized to deal in real estate; People v. Sohmer, 155 App. Div. 842, 140 N. Y. Supp. 507.

Where a corporation transfers all its property to another corporation, which pays its debts, the former cannot assert that it was ultra vires and retake the property; Savings & Trust Co. v. Irr. Co., 112 Fed. 693.

After a corporation has, ultra vires, entered into a partnership, its interest cannot for that reason be exempted from partnership liability, nor withdrawn after insolvency, to the prejudice of the general creditors; Wallenstein v. Ervin, 112 Fed. 124, 50 C. C. A. 129.

A corporation may pension the family of a deceased employe; 40 Ch. D. 170; Beers v. Ins. Co., 66 Hun 75, 20 N. Y. Supp. 788; or make contributions towards churches, schools, etc., for the benefit of its employes; Steinway v. Steinway & Sons, 17 Misc. 43, 40 N. Y. Supp. 718; though it cannot carry on such institutions; People v. Car Co., 175 Ill. 125, 51 N. E. 664, 64 L. R. A. 366. A railroad company may defray the medical expenses of a person injured in its service; Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Rodriguez, 47 Ill. 188, 95 Am. Dec. 484.

Where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to take title to real estate, a conveyance to it is only voidable; the state alone can object; Reynolds v. First Nat. Bk., 112 U. S. 405, 413, 5 Sup. Ct. 213, 28 L. Ed. 733; Union N. Bk. v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 628, 25 L. Ed. 188; a lessee of a room in a building, when sued for rent, cannot set up that the corporation which owned it had built it ultra vires; Rector v. Deposit Co., 190 Ill. 380, 60 N. E. 528; a corporation whose right to incur indebtedness is limited in amount is liable to one who in good faith loaned it money above that amount; Ossipee Hosiery & W. Mfg. Co. v. Canney, 54 N. H. 295.

The doctrine of ultra vires ought to be reasonably understood and applied; and whatever may be fairly regarded as incidental to and consequential upon those things which are authorized by the charter of the company, ought not, unless expressly prohibited, to be held by judicial construction, to be ultra vires; Ellerman v. R. Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 217, 23 Atl. 287.

The result of the English authorities is, that corporations—certainly those for commercial purposes, and probably all corporations to which the doctrine applies—have by implication all capacities and powers which, being reasonably incidental to their enterprise or operations, are not forbidden, either expressly by their constituting instruments or by necessary inference therefrom; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 40. The American decisions seem to be tending towards this doctrine; id. note a. Prima facie, all the contracts of a corporation are valid, and it lies on those who impeach any contract to make out that it is void; Railway Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 267, 24 L. Ed. 693; 3 Macq. 382; Ellerman v. R. Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 217, 23 Atl. 287; Knapp v. Coal Co., 85 Conn. 147, 81 Atl. 1063.

A court of equity, at the suit of the stockholders of the corporation, will restrain the commission of acts beyond the corporate power, by injunction operating upon the individual officers and directors as well as the corporation. This is now an acknowledged head of equity jurisdiction; Redf. Railw. 400; Davenport v. Dows, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 626, 21 L. Ed. 938; 10 Beav. 1; Osmer v. Brokerage Co., 155 Mo. App. 211, 134 S. W. 65; creditors are said to have the same right in this respect as stockholders; 13 Am. L. Rev. 659. See STOCKHOLDER.

Acquiescence for any considerable time in the exercise of excessive powers, after they come to the knowledge of the stockholders, would, however, be a decisive objection to such a remedy; 19 E. L. & E. 7.

In regard to municipal corporations, the rule is stricter against the validity of ultra vires contracts. See Dill. Mun. Corp. § 381. One dealing with a corporation must take notice of its charter rights; Moraw. Pr. Corp. § 591.

It is suggested in 2 Morawetz, Pr. Corp. § 648, that the term ultra vires has no proper use with reference to private corporations unless used in the sense of authority rather than power, and that the term is therefore misleading, except as applied to municipal corporations.

It must be pleaded as a defence; Hough v. Car Co. (Mo.) 165 S. W. 1161; Arizona L. Ins. Co. v. Lindell (Ariz.) 140 Pac. 60; it is not available under a general issue plea; Blackwood v. Chamber of Commerce (Mich.) 144 N. W. 823.

It has been said that a corporation is liable for the negligence and other torts of its agents and servants, even when related to and connected with the acts of the corporation that are ultra vires; even if done in the execution of usurped powers and of purposes clearly ultra vires; Beach, Pr. Corp. § 444.

UMPIRAGE. The decision of an umpire. Powell v. Ford, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 288.

UMPIRE. A third person appointed to decide between two other judges or referees who differ in opinion. Randel v. Canal, 1 Harr. (Del.) 260. The jurisdiction of the umpire and arbitrators cannot be concurrent; Morse, Arb. & Aw. 241; if the arbitrators make an award, it is binding; if not, the award of the umpire is binding; T. Jones 167. If the umpire sign the award of the arbitrators, it is still their award, and vice versa; Rigden v. Martin, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 403. He determines the issue submitted to the arbitrators on which they have failed to agree, which is his sole award; and neither of the original arbitrators is required to join in the award; Haven v. Winnisimmet Co., 11 Allen (Mass.) 384, 87 Am. Dec. 723; Ingraham v. Whitmore, 75 Ill. 30. Arbitrators may appoint an umpire after their term of service has expired, if the time is not gone within which the umpire was to make his award; McKinstry v. Solomons, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 57. Subsequent dissent of the parties, without just cause, will have no effect upon the appointment; but they should have notice; Crowell v. Davis, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 293. If an umpire refuse to act, another may be appointed toties quoties; 11 East 367.

See ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

UNA VOCE (Lat.). With one voice; unanimately.

UNADJUSTED. Uncertain; not agreed upon. Richardson v. Woodbury, 43 Me. 214.

UNALIENABLE. Incapable of being transferred.

Things which are not in commerce, as, public roads, are in their nature unalienable. Some things are unalienable in consequence of particular provisions in the law forbidding their sale or transfer; as, pensions granted by the government. The natural rights of life and liberty are unalienable.

UNANIMITY (Lat. unus, one, animus, mind). The agreement of all the persons concerned in a thing, in design and opinion. See JURY; MAJORITY.

UNASCERTAINED DUTIES. Payment in gross on an estimate as to amount. Moke v. Barney, 5 Blatchf. 274, Fed. Cas. No. 9,698.

UNAVOIDABLE ACCIDENT. An inevitable accident, which could not have been foreseen and prevented by using ordinary diligence, and resulting without fault. U. S. v. Ry. Co., 189 Fed. 471.

UNAVOIDABLE CASUALTY. Events or accidents which human prudence, foresight, and sagacity cannot prevent. Crystal Spring Distillery Co. v. Cox, 49 Fed. 555, 1 C. C. A. 365, 6 U. S. App. 42; Welles v. Castles, 3 Gray (Mass.) 325. If by any care, prudence, or foresight a thing could have been guarded against, it is not unavoidable; Central Line of Boats v. Lowe, 50 Ga. 509. An unavoidable accident is synonymous with inevitable accident. See INEVITABLE ACCIDENT; ACT OF GOD; FORTUITOUS EVENT.

UNAVOIDABLE CAUSE. A cause which reasonably prudent and careful men under like circumstances do not and would not ordinarily anticipate, and whose effects, under similar circumstances, they do not and would not ordinarily avoid. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. U. S., 194 Fed. 342, 114 C. C. A. 334.

UNAVOIDABLE DELAY. A delay caused by negligence is not unavoidable. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Brass Co., 186 Fed. 518.

UNBORN CHILD. Where a woman was injured during pregnancy by a highway collision, she was held entitled to damages for mental distress due, before the birth of the child, to her fear that it would be deformed, but not for mental suffering after the birth caused by its then deformity; Prescott v. Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 69 Atl. 522, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987.

A child cannot bring an action for damages caused by the negligent act of a carrier before its birth; 26 L. R. Ir. 69; Nugent v. R. Co., 154 App. Div. 667, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367. Where a pregnant woman was injured by negligence of the employees of a hospital to which she went for her confinement, and this caused permanent deformity of the child, it was held that the child had no right of action; Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 184 Ill. 359, 56 N. E. 638, 48 L. R. A. 225, 75 Am. St. Rep. 176. A woman four or five months advanced in pregnancy fell by reason of a defect in the highway and had a miscarriage; the child was alive when delivered, but died before it was severed from its mother. It was held that no right of action accrued to the administrator of the child; Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242. In Gorman v. Budlong, 23 R. I. 169, 49 Atl. 704, 55 L. R. A. 118, 91

Am. St. Rep. 629, and Nugent v. R. Co., 154 App. Div. 667, 139 N. Y. Supp. 367, where the premature birth of the child was caused by injury to its mother before its birth, the child living only a short time, it was held that there could be no right of recovery for death by wrongful act; and so in Buel v. Rys. Co., 248 Mo. 126, 154 S. W. 71, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, where the injury was caused to the unborn child which ultimately caused its death before delivery. Where the father of an unborn child was killed in a railroad accident, the child could recover; Herdon v. R. Co., 37 Okl. 256, 128 Pac. 727.

See EX VENTRE SA MÈRE; TORT.

UNCERTAINTY. That which is unknown or vague. See CERTAINTY; WILL.

UNCIA TERRÆ (Lat.). This phrase often occurs in early charters of the British kings, and denotes some quantity of land. It was twelve modii, each modius possibly one hundred feet square. Mon. Ang. tom. 3, pp. 198, 205.

UNCIARIUS HÆRES. In Civil Law. An heir to one-twelfth of an estate or inheritance. Calv. Lex.

UNCLE. The brother of a father or mother. See AVUNCULUS; PATRUUS.

UNCONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP. When the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 162 Fed. 447, 89 C. C. A. 333.

UNCONSCIONABLE BARGAIN. A contract which no man in his senses, not under delusion, would make, on the one hand, and which no fair and honest man would accept, on the other. 2 Ves. 125; 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3348. See USURY; EXPECTANCY; POST OBIT.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL. See CONSTITUTIONAL; STATUTE.

This expression as applied to an act of parliament means simply that it is, in the opinion of the speaker, opposed to the spirit of the English constitution; it cannot mean that the act is either a breach of the law or is void. When applied to a law passed by the French parliament, it means that the law is opposed to the articles of the constitution; it does not necessarily mean that the law in question is void, for it is by no means certain that any French court will refuse to enforce a law because it is unconstitutional. It would probably, though not of necessity, be, when employed by a Frenchman, a term of censure. Dicey, Const. 516.

UNCORE PRIST (L. Fr. still ready). A plea or replication that the party pleading is still ready to do what is required. Used in connection with the words tout temps prist, the whole denotes that the party always has been and still is ready to do what is required, thus saving costs where the whole cause is admitted, or preventing delay where it is a replication, if the allegation is made out. 3 Bla. Com. 303.

UNDE NIHIL HABET. See DOWER.

UNDEFENDED. A term sometimes applied to one who is obliged to make his own defence when on trial, or in a civil cause. A cause is said to be undefended when the defendant makes default, in not putting in an appearance to the plaintiff's action; in not putting in his statement of defence; or, in not appearing at the trial either personally or by counsel, after having received due notice. Lush's Prac. 548.

UNDER. The term is sometimes used in its literal sense of "below in position," but more frequently in its secondary meaning of "inferior" or "subordinate." Mills v. Stoddard, 8 How. (U. S.) 356, 12 L. Ed. 1107.

UNDER AND SUBJECT. Words frequently used in conveyances of land which is subject to a mortgage, to show that the grantee takes subject to such mortgage. See MORTGAGE; 27 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 337, 401.

UNDER CHAMBERLAINS OF THE EXCHEQUER. Two officers who cleaved the tallies written by the clerk of the tallies and read the same. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of the Domesday Book. Cowell.

UNDER WAY. A vessel, though her headway is killed, is considered under way and subject to the navigation rules; The Nimrod, 173 Fed. 520. A vessel lying with her nose against the bank of a stream and holding her position against the current by the movement of her wheel is a vessel under way, and not entitled to the rights of an anchored vessel; The Ruth, 186 Fed. 87, 108 C. C. A. 199.

UNDERGROUND WATERS. See SUBTERRANEAN WATERS.

UNDERGROWTH. A term applicable to plants growing under or below other greater plants. Clay v. Telegraph Co., 70 Miss. 411, 11 South. 658.

UNDERLEASE. An alienation by a tenant of a part of his lease, reserving to himself a reversion; it differs from an assignment, which is a transfer of all the tenant's interest in the lease. W. Bla. 766. And even a conveyance of the whole estate by the lessee, reserving to himself the rent, with a power of re-entry for non-payment, was held to be not an assignment, but an underlease; 1 Stra. 405; Woodf. L. & T. 731. The transfer of a part only of the lands, though for the whole term, is an underlease; Fulton v. Stuart, 2 Ohio 216, 15 Am. Dec. 542; contra, Cox v. Fenwick, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 538. See LEASE; ASSIGNMENT; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

UNDERSTANDING. It may denote an informal agreement or a concurrence as to its terms. Barkow v. Sanger, 47 Wis. 507, 3

N. W. 16. A valid contract engagement of a somewhat informal character. Winslow v. Lumber Co., 32 Minn. 238, 20 N. W. 145. In the law of contracts it is a loose and ambiguous term, unless accompanied by some expression to show that it constituted a meeting of the minds of the parties upon something respecting which they intended to be bound. Camp v. Waring, 25 Conn. 529.

UNDERSTOOD. Agreed. Higginson v. Weld, 14 Gray (Mass.) 165. It falls short of alleging a distinct express contract. Black v. Columbia, 19 S. C. 419, 45 Am. Rep. 785.

UNDERTAKER. An act requiring undertakers to be licensed is unconstitutional; 70 Alb. L. J. 98.

UNDERTAKING. An engagement by one of the parties to a contract to the other, and not the mutual engagement of the parties to each other: a promise. 5 East 17; 4 B. & Ald. 595, followed in Alexander v. State, 28 Tex. App. 186, 12 S. W. 595. It does not necessarily imply a consideration; Thompson v. Blanchard, 3 N. Y. 335.

It is used of large financial and business transactions.

UNDERTOOK. Assumed; promised.

This is a technical word which ought to be inserted in every declaration of assumpsit charging that the defendant undertook to perform the promise which is the foundation of the suit; and this though the promise be founded on a legal liability or would be implied in evidence. Bacon, Abr. Assumpsit (F); 1 Chitty, Pl. 88, note p.

UNDERWRITER. The party who agrees to insure another on life or property, in a policy of insurance. He is also called the insurer.

The title is almost exclusively confined to insurers of marine risks, and is derived from the method of obtaining such insurance formerly in vogue, usually as follows: A premium having been agreed upon between the insured and an insurance broker, a statement of such premium and of the ship or cargo, and the voyage or time, was written at the head of a sheet which was laid on the broker's table. Then such merchants as were willing to insure such property on such terms subscribed their names to the statement above mentioned, stating the amount they were willing to insure; and so on until the desired amount of insurance was obtained. 1 Pars. Mar. Ins. 14.

The term is also used of bankers and other financial men who agree together to purchase an entire issue of bonds or other securities, usually at the end of a certain period. By reason of such underwriting, the bonds, etc., obtain a market value or a value as collateral security.

UNDERWRITING. An agreement made in forming a company and offering its stocks or bonds to the public, that if they are not all taken up, the underwriter will take what remains. An underwriter is held liable in England on the stock subscribed for by him. See 42 Ch. D. 1.

Underwriting contract. An agreement to take shares in a company forming, so far as the same are not subscribed to by the public. Palmer, Company Precedents 107.

UNDIVIDED. Held by the same title by two or more persons, whether their rights are equal as to value or quantity, or unequal. See In re Wellington, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 98, 26 Am. Dec. 631.

UNDUE INFLUENCE. The use by one, in whom a confidence is reposed by another who holds a real or apparent authority over him, of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage of his weakness of mind, or of his necessities or distress; Dolliver v. Dolliver, 94 Cal. 642, 30 Pac. 4; or to constrain him to do that which he would not have done without the exercise of such control. Bennett v. Bennett, 50 N. J. Eq. 439, 26 Atl. 573.

That influence which compels one to do that which is against his will from fear, the desire of peace, or some feeling which is tantamount to force or fear. Knox v. Knox, 95 Ala. 495, 11 South. 125, 36 Am. St. Rep. 235; Frush v. Green, 86 Md. 494, 39 Atl. 863.

That which compels the testator to do something against his will, from fear, the desire of peace or some feeling which he is unable to resist. Sheppey v. Stevens, 185 Fed. 147.

Influence gained by kindness and affection will not be regarded as undue, if no imposition or fraud be practised, even though it induce one to make an unequal and unjust distribution of his property, if such disposition is voluntarily made; Mackall v. Mackall, 135 U. S. 167, 10 Sup. Ct. 705, 34 L. Ed. 84; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; but the question of the boundary of legitimate influence must be determined by the consideration of the relation between the parties, the character, strength, and condition of each of them, and the application of sound sense to each given case; Elkinton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154, 15 Atl. 391, 1 L. R. A. 161; Hartman v. Strickler, 82 Va. 225; the mental and physical condition of the testator, the provisions of the will itself; Myers v. Hauger, 98 Mo. 433, 11 S. W. 974; Kimball v. Cuddy, 117 Ill. 214, 7 N. E. 589; In re Beach, 23 App. Div. 411, 48 N. Y. Supp. 437; German Savings & Loan Soc. v. De Lashmutt, 83 Fed. 33; and the conduct of the testator after its execution; Boyd v. Boyd, 66 Pa. 283. The questions of capacity and undue influence are closely connected and must be considered together; Tobin v. Jenkins, 29 Ark. 151.

On principles of public policy, there is a presumption of undue influence in voluntary settlements between parent and child; 1 Ves. 401; 34 Beav. 457; guardian and ward; 10 L. R. Eq. 405; trustee and cestui que trust; 30 Beav. 39; legal adviser and client; 2 Atk. 25; or between one and his spiritual adviser; 2 L. C. Eq. 597, n.; s. c. 14 Ves. 273; and so there is said to be a presumption of undue influence in case of wills made where these relations exist between the parties; Thompson v. Hawks, 14 Fed. 905; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 371; but see In re Bernsee's Will, 71 Hun 27, 24 N. Y. Supp. 504, where it was held that undue influence could not be presumed from the fact that the beneficiary stood in a confidential relation to the testator. See Maddox v. Maddox, 114 Mo. 35, 21 S. W. 499, 35 Am. St. Rep. 734; Bulger v. Ross, 98 Ala. 267, 12 South. 803.

Undue influence will not be established if at the time of making the will the testator's freedom of will was not overcome; Trost v. Dingler, 118 Pa. 259, 12 Atl. 296, 4 Am. St. Rep. 593; Ormsby v. Webb, 134 U. S. 47, 10 Sup. Ct. 478, 33 L. Ed. 805; but it is held that where it is exercised by any one, even if not a beneficiary, undue influence is ground for setting the will aside; In re Cahill's Estate, 74 Cal. 52, 15 Pac. 364. See DURESS; FRAUD; WILL.

UNFAIR LIST. See BOYCOTT; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

UNFAIR TRADE. See TRADE-MARK.

UNGELD. An outlaw. Toml.

UNICA TAXATIO (Lat.). The ancient language of a special award of venire, where of several defendants one pleads, and one lets judgment go by default, whereby the jury who are to try and assess damages on the issue are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default. Lee, Dict.

UNIFACTORAL OBLIGATION. See CONTRACT.

UNIFORMITY OF LAWS. Commissions have been appointed in all the states, territories, and possessions, and the District of Columbia, who hold annual conferences in connection with the American Bar Association, as a part of whose annual reports their proceedings are published. The Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act has been passed in 46 jurisdictions; the Warehouse Receipts Act in 30; the Sales Act in 11; the Divorce Act in 3; the Stock Transfer Act in 9; the Bills of Lading Act in 11; the Act Relating to Wills Executed without the State in 9; the Family Desertion Act in 6. See the various titles. Acts on the sales of railroad rolling stock (q. v.) are substantially uniform in nearly all the states.

UNIFORMITY OF PROCESS ACT. An act providing for uniformity of process in personal actions in the courts of law at Westminster, 23d May, 1832. The improved system thus established was more fully amended by the Procedure Acts of 1852, 1854, and 1860, and by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875.

UNILATERAL CONTRACT. In Civil Law. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called unilateral, even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. La. Civ. Code, art. 1758. A loan of money and a loan for use are of this kind. Pothier, Obl. part 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2; Lec. Elémén. § 781.

In the Common Law. According to Professor Langdell, every binding promise not in consideration of another promise is a unilateral contract. For example, simple contract debts, bonds, promissory notes, and policies of insurance. A bilateral contract, which consists of two promises to give in exchange for and consideration of each other, becomes a unilateral contract when one of the promises is fully performed; Langdell, Sum. Cont. § 183.

UNINTELLIGIBLE. That which cannot be understood. See CONSTRUCTION.

UNIO PROLIUM (Lat. union of offspring). A species of adoption used among the Germans, which takes place when a widower having children marries a widow who also has children. These parents then agree that the children of both marriages shall have the same rights to their succession as those which may be the fruits of their marriage. Lec. Elém. § 187.

UNION. A popular term for the United States of America.

In English Poor Law. Two or more parishes that have been consolidated for the better administration of the poor law therein.

UNION LABEL LAWS. See TRADE-MARK.

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. The official title of the kingdom composed of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and including the colonies and possessions beyond the seas. At the time of the union between England and Scotland, in 1707, Great Britain became the official name of the kingdom, and continued to be such until the union with Ireland, in 1801. In the act of union of January 1, 1801, the above title is made the official name of the kingdom.

The government is a hereditary constitutional monarchy, and the sovereign, with a ministry responsible to parliament, constitutes the executive. The legislative power is vested in a parliament composed of a house of lords and a house of commons. The highest appellate judicial power is vested in the house of lords. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in India and the colonies and possessions. See COURTS OF ENGLAND; COURTS OF SCOTLAND; COURTS OF IRELAND.

The title of the king is: By the Grace of God King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS.

Each district (formerly circuit) court of the United States may appoint, in different districts of the circuit of which it is composed, as many discreet persons as it may deem necessary, who shall be called "commissioners of the circuit (now district) court," and shall exercise the powers which are or may be conferred upon them; R. S. § 627. The Judicial Code makes no change.

These officers are authorized to hold to security of the peace and for good behavior in cases arising under the constitution and laws of the United States; Jud. Code § 270. They have power to carry into effect, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, the award or arbitration, or decree of any consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent, to sit as judges or arbitrators in such differences as may arise between the captains and crews of vessels, application for the exercise of such power being first made by petition of such consul, etc.; Jud. Code § 271.

They have also power to take bail and affidavits when required or allowed in any circuit or district court of the United States; R. S. § 945. They may imprison or bail offenders; R. S. § 1010; may discharge poor convicts imprisoned; R. S. § 1042; may administer oaths and take acknowledgments; R. S. § 1778; may institute proceedings under the civil rights laws; R. S. 1 Supp. 68; may issue warrants for the arrest of foreign seamen, in case of dispute or desertion; R. S. § 4079; may summon the master of a vessel in cases of seamen's wages; may apprehend fugitives from justice; R. S. § 5270 (amended June 6, 1900).

The district court of the United States may appoint commissioners before whom appraisers of vessels or goods and merchandise seized for breaches of any law of the United States may be sworn; and such oaths so taken are as effectual as if taken before the judge in open court; Jud. Code § 61.

The court of claims has power to appoint commissioners, before whom examinations may be made upon oath of witnesses touching all matters pertaining to claims; R. S. §§ 1071, 1080.

UNITED STATES COURTS. Except in the case of impeachments the judicial power of the United States is vested by the constitution in a supreme court and such other inferior courts as may be from time to time established by congress. All the judges are appointed by the president, with the advice and consent of the senate, to hold office during good behavior, and their compensation cannot be diminished during their terms of office. The judges, other than those of the supreme court, are circuit judges and district judges. The circuit judges compose the circuit courts of appeals and the district judges hold the district courts, and also at times sit in the circuit courts of appeal. See infra. For a detailed statement of the territorial boundaries of the several districts and divisions of districts, see the Judicial Code of March 3, 1911, ch. 5; U. S. Comp. St. 1911, p. 156; and various special acts.

Except in a few cases especially provided for, there is a district judge for each district, of which he must be a resident. In Barrett v. U. S., 169 U. S. 218, 18 Sup. Ct. 327, 42 L. Ed. 723, Fuller, C. J., reviews the legislation creating the judicial districts of the United States from the commencement of the government up to that date, 1898. The districts are grouped into nine circuits as follows: 1. Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island. 2. Vermont, Connecticut, New York. 3. Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware. 4. Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina. 5. Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas (and including appeals from the Canal Zone). 6. Kentucky, Ohio, Michigan, Tennessee. 7. Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin. 8. Colorado, Nebraska, Minnesota, Kansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Utah, Iowa, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, New Mexico. 9. California, Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Washington, Arizona, Hawaii, and Alaska, to which also the United States court in China is assigned for the purpose of appeals. There are four circuit judges in the second, seventh, and eighth, two in the fourth circuit, and three in each of the other circuits. They receive a salary of $7,000 a year, each, and must reside in the circuit. One member of the Supreme Court is allotted to each circuit by order of the supreme court; he is known as the circuit justice, and is competent to sit in the Circuit Court of Appeals of that circuit. When he does so, he shall preside. He has no distinct commission as circuit judge, and none is required; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 308, 2 L. Ed. 115.

The judicial power under the constitution (art. III, § 2) shall extend to: 1. Cases in law and equity arising under the federal constitution, laws, or treaties. 2. Those affecting ambassadors and other public ministers and consuls. 3. Admiralty and maritime cases. 4. Controversies to which the United States is a party. 5. Those between two or more states. 6. Or between a state and citizens of another state. (By the 11th amendment this grant of power was so limited as not to permit a state to be sued by citizens of another state, but a state may sue citizens of another state.) 7. Or between citizens of different states. 8. Or between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states. 9. Or between a state or its citizens and foreign states, citizens, or subjects.

This article, conferring jurisdiction on the federal courts, "imports an absolute grant of judicial power"; Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 331, 4 L. Ed. 97.

The nature of the federal government which distributes the functions of government between two powers, each being sovereign within its sphere, but operating within the same territorial jurisdiction and upon the same persons and property, makes necessary the adjustment of two classes of independent tribunals with great care, both in legislation and the administration of justice, to avoid conflicts of jurisdiction. That such have occurred is true, but their rare occurrence in more than a century bears testimony as well to the tact and discretion of the judiciary, federal and state, as to the perfection of the system which they administer under the constitution.

As respects criminal proceedings, the courts of each jurisdiction generally confine themselves to the administration of the laws of the government which created them. In civil cases, however, as the constitution has conferred jurisdiction upon the federal courts in cases, for example, where a citizen of one state sues a citizen of another state, it is manifest that the court which tries such a case must administer the laws of the state in which the action is brought, subject to the constitution and laws of the United States and treaties in cases which conflict with its provisions.

In the organization of the federal system of courts, there were two objects to be accomplished. The first was to prevent a clashing between the state and United States courts, by imposing restrictions upon the United States courts. The second was to carry out the mandates of the constitution, by clothing the latter with all the powers necessary to execute its provisions. This organization was commenced by the act of 1789, familiarly known as the Judiciary Act.

To accomplish the first object, the right to issue writs of habeas corpus was by the fourteenth section limited to cases arising under the federal constitution and laws; R. S. § 753. See HABEAS CORPUS. As it there appears, the right of appeal to the supreme court from the denial of the writ of habeas corpus or the discharge of a person imprisoned was absolute and, it being considered that this led to some abuse in the way of frivolous appeals, particularly in cases of persons condemned to death under criminal prosecutions in the state courts, an act was passed March 10, 1908, providing that no appeal to the supreme court should be allowed "unless the United States court by which the final decision was rendered or a justice of the supreme court shall be of the opinion that there exists probable cause for an appeal, in which event, on allowing the same, the said court or justice shall certify that there is probable cause for such allowance"; 35 Stat. L. 40, U. S. Comp. Stat. (Supp. 1911) 255.

This important restriction was intended to leave to the state authorities the absolute and exclusive administration of the state laws in all cases of imprisonment; and no instance has ever occurred in which this act has been disregarded. On the contrary, its observance has been emphatically enjoined and enforced; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 523, 16 L. Ed. 169.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court depends upon the federal constitution, that of the circuit [district] court upon the act of Congress; Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 449, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 51 L. Ed. 264. The motive of a citizen who prosecutes a cause of action against another in a federal court, in the absence of fraud and collusion, is immaterial; Chicago v. Mills, 204 U. S. 321, 27 Sup. Ct. 286, 51 L. Ed. 504. And when the circuit court dismisses a case under sec. 1 of the act of Aug. 13, 1888, because not substantially involving the requisite amount in controversy, the order of the court, in this case without a jury, is subject to review in the supreme court in respect to rulings of law and findings of fact upon the evidence; Smithers v. Smith, 204 U. S. 632, 27 Sup. Ct. 297, 51 L. Ed. 656.

The jurisdiction of the federal courts is conferred by the constitution and the laws of Congress and cannot be defeated or impaired by the laws of a state. If a suit, when viewed in the light of recognized principles of jurisprudence, appears to be a suit of a civil nature at common law or in equity, it is immaterial if, by a local statute, exclusive cognizance has been in terms reserved to the courts of the state generally or to some specially designated local tribunal; Spencer v. Watkins, 169 Fed. 379, 94 C. C. A. 659.

The Judicial Code, enacted March 3, 1911, in effect January 1, 1912, divides the United States into districts (§§ 69-115).

By section 1, a district judge is appointed for each district except that in the northern districts of California and Illinois, districts of Minnesota, Nebraska, Maryland, and New Jersey, and in the eastern district of New York, the northern and southern districts of Ohio, the district of Oregon, the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, and the western district of Washington, there is an additional district judge in each, and in the southern district of New York, three additional judges. In Maryland, upon the death of the senior judge, the vacancy shall not be filled. There is one judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, one for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, and one for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi. Every district judge must reside in the district or in one of the districts for which he is appointed; to offend against this provision is made a high misdemeanor. The salary is $6,000 a year.

Sec. 9. The district courts, as courts of admiralty and of equity, are deemed always open for the purpose of filing any pleading, of issuing and returning mesne and final process, and of making and directing all interlocutory motions, etc., preparatory to a hearing on the merits. A district judge may, upon reasonable notice to the parties, make, direct, and award, at chambers or in the clerk's office, and in vacation as well as in term, all such process, commissions, orders, etc., as are not grantable of course.

Sec. 13. If a district judge is prevented by any disability from holding any term of his court, any circuit judge of his circuit or, in the absence of all the circuit judges, the circuit justice of that circuit, may designate the judge of any other district in the same circuit to hold his court. If it appear impracticable to designate a district judge of the same circuit, the chief justice may designate a judge of any district in another circuit to hold the court. There is a like provision when the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court requires additional judicial force. Provision is made for the designation of a circuit judge of a circuit to hold the district court (sec. 14).

Sec. 22. In case of vacancy, all process, pleading, and proceedings shall, if necessary, be continued by the clerk until a judge shall be appointed or designated to hold the court.

Sec. 24. District courts have original jurisdiction as follows:

1. Of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, brought by the United States, or by any officer thereof authorized by law to sue, or between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants from different states; or, where the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of three thousand dollars, and (a) arises under the constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, or (b) is between citizens of different states, or (c) is between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects. No district court shall have cognizance of any suit (except upon foreign bills of exchange) to recover upon any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of any assignee, or of any subsequent holder if such instrument be payable to bearer and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover upon said note or other chose in action if no assignment had been made: Provided, however, that the foregoing provision as to the sum or value of the matter in controversy shall not be construed to apply to any of the cases mentioned in the succeeding paragraphs of this section.

2. Of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States.

3. Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it; of all seizures on land or waters not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; of all prizes brought into the United States; and of all proceedings for the condemnation of property taken as prize.

4. Of all suits arising under any law relating to the slave trade.

5. Of all cases arising under any law providing for internal revenue, or from revenue from imports or tonnage, except those cases arising under any law providing revenue from imports, jurisdiction of which has been conferred upon the Court of Customs Appeals.

6. Of all cases arising under the postal laws.

7. Of all suits at law or in equity arising under the patent, the copyright, and the trade-mark laws.

8. Of all suits and proceedings arising under any law regulating commerce, except those suits and proceedings exclusive jurisdiction of which has been conferred upon the Commerce Court.

9. Of all suits and proceedings for the enforcement of penalties and forfeitures incurred under any law of the United States.

10. Of all suits by the assignee of any debenture for drawback of duties, issued under any law for the collection of duties, against the person to whom such debenture was originally granted, or against any indorser thereof, to recover the amount of such debenture.

11. Of all suits brought by any person to recover damages for any injury to his person or property on account of any act done by him, under any law of the United States, for the protection or collection of any of the revenues thereof, or to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several states.

12. Of all suits authorized by law to be brought by any person for the recovery of damages on account of any injury to his person or property, or of the deprivation of any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States, by any act done in furtherance of any conspiracy mentioned in section nineteen hundred and eighty, Revised Statutes.

13. Of all suits authorized by law to be brought against any person who, having knowledge that any of the wrongs mentioned in section nineteen hundred and eighty, Revised Statutes, are about to be done, and, having power to prevent or aid in preventing the same, neglects or refuses so to do, to recover damages for any such wrongful act.

14. Of all suits at law or in equity authorized by law to be brought by any person to redress the deprivation, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any state, of any right, privilege, or immunity, secured by the constitution of the United States, or of any right secured by any law of the United States providing for equal rights of citizens of the United States, or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

15. Of all suits to recover possession of any office, except that of elector of President or Vice President, Representative in or Delegate to Congress, or member of a state legislature, authorized by law to be brought, wherein it appears that the sole question touching the title to such office arises out of the denial of the right to vote to any citizen offering to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude: Provided, that such jurisdiction shall extend only so far as to determine the rights of the parties to such office by reason of the denial of the right guaranteed by the constitution of the United States, and secured by any law, to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in all the states.

16. Of all cases commenced by the United States, or by direction of any officer thereof, against any national banking association, and cases for winding up the affairs of any such bank; and of all suits brought by any banking association established in the district for which the court is held, under the provisions of title "National Banks," Revised Statutes, to enjoin the Comptroller of the Currency, or any receiver acting under his direction, as provided by said title. And all national banking associations established under the laws of the United States shall, for the purposes of all other actions by or against them, real, personal, or mixed, and all suits in equity, be deemed citizens of the states in which they are respectively located.

17. Of all suits brought by any alien for a tort only, in violation of the laws of nations or of a treaty of the United States.

18. Of all suits against consuls and vice consuls.

19. Of all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy.

20. Concurrent with the court of claims, of all claims not known as "war claims," or to hear and determine other claims which had been rejected or reported on adversely prior to the 3d day of March, 1887, by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same, or to hear and determine claims for pensions; or as giving to the district courts jurisdiction of cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States or brought for such purpose by persons claiming as such officers or as assignees or legal representatives thereof; but no suit pending on the 27th day of June, 1898, shall abate or be affected by this provision: And provided further, that no suit against the government of the United States shall be allowed under this paragraph unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made: Provided, that the claims of married women, first accrued during marriage, of persons under the age of 21 years, first accrued during minority, and of idiots, lunatics, insane persons, and persons beyond the seas at the time the claim accrued, entitled to the claim, shall not be barred if the suit be brought within three years after the disability has ceased; but no other disability than those enumerated shall prevent any claim from being barred, nor shall any of the said disabilities operate cumulatively. All suits brought and tried under the provisions of this paragraph shall be tried by the court without a jury.

21. Of proceedings in equity, by writ of injunction, to restrain violations of the provisions of laws of the United States to prevent the unlawful inclosure of public lands; and it shall be sufficient to give the court jurisdiction if service of original process be had in any civil proceeding on any agent or employee having charge or control of the inclosure.

22. Of all suits and proceedings arising under any law regulating the immigration of aliens, or under the contract labor laws.

23. Of all suits and proceedings arising under any law to protect trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies.

24. Of all actions, suits, or proceedings involving the right of any person, in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent, to any allotment of land under any law or treaty (amendment, December 21, 1911, added certain details).

25. Of suits in equity brought by any tenant in common or joint tenant for the partition of lands in cases where the United States is one of such tenants in common or joint tenants, such suits to be brought in the district in which such land is situate.

Secs. 25-27. They also have appellate jurisdiction of the judgments and orders of United States Commissioners in cases arising under the Chinese Exclusion Act; in the district of Wyoming of felonies committed in the Yellowstone National Park; and appellate jurisdiction in cases of conviction before the commissioners appointed under the act to protect birds and animals in the park, etc.; and in South Dakota over certain criminal offenses in the Indian reservation.

As to the removal of causes from state courts, see that title.

Miscellaneous Proceedings. Sec. 40. The trial of offenses punishable with death shall be had in the county in which the offense was committed where that can be done without inconvenience.

Sec. 41. The trial of offenses committed upon the high seas or elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of any particular state or district shall be in the district when [where] the offender is found or into which he is first brought.

Sec. 42. When any offense is begun in one district and completed in another, it shall be deemed to have been committed in either and may be tried in either.

Sec. 45. Proceedings on seizures made on the high seas, for forfeiture under any law of the United States, may be prosecuted in any district into which the property is brought and proceedings instituted.

Sec. 48. In suits brought for the infringement of letters patent, the district courts have jurisdiction, in law or in equity, in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, or in any district in which the defendant shall have committed acts of infringement and shall have a regular and established place of business. If such suit is brought in a district of which the defendant is not an inhabitant, but in which such defendant shall have a regular or established place of business, service of process may be made upon the agent or agents engaged in conducting such business in the district.

Sec. 49. All proceedings by any national bank to enjoin the Comptroller of the Currency under the national bank acts must be had in the district where the bank is located.

Sec. 50. When there are several defendants in law or equity, and one or more of them are neither inhabitants of nor found within the district in which the suit is brought, and do not voluntarily appear, the court may proceed to the trial and adjudication of the suit between the parties who are properly before it, but the judgment therein shall not conclude or prejudice other parties not regularly served with process nor voluntarily appearing to answer; and nonjoinder of parties who are not inhabitants of nor found within the district shall not be considered matter of abatement or objection to the suit.

Sec. 51. No person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another, in any civil action, in a district court (except as in the five succeeding sections), and no civil suit shall be brought in any district court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant (except as provided in the six succeeding sections); but where the jurisdiction is founded only on diversity of citizenship, suits shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant. The excepted instances are:

Sec. 52. When a state contains more than one district, suits not of a local nature, against a single defendant, inhabitant of such state, must be brought in the district where he resides; but, if there are two or more defendants residing in different districts of the state, it may be brought in either district.

Sec. 53 contains a like provision as to districts having two divisions. All prosecutions for offenses shall be brought in the division of such district where they were committed unless, upon the application of the defendant, the court or the judge thereof shall transfer the case to another division of the district. In all cases of the removal of suits from a state court to a district court, it shall be to the district court of the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made; and the time within which the removal shall be perfected, in so far as it refers to or is regulated by the terms of United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the district court in such division.

The above secs. 51-53 refer only to suits not of a local nature.

Sec. 54. In suits of a local nature where the defendant resides in a different district, in the same state, from that in which the suit is brought, the plaintiff may have original and final process against him, directed to the marshal of the district where he resides.

Sec. 55. Any suit of a local nature, at law or in equity, where the land or other subject-matter of a fixed character, lies partly in more than one district in the same state, may be brought in either district.

Sec. 56. Where a receiver has been appointed over land or other property of a fixed character, and it lies within different states within the same circuit, a receiver may be vested with full jurisdiction over all the property lying in the circuit, subject, however, to the disapproval of an order to that effect by the circuit court of appeals for the circuit or by a circuit judge thereof.

Sec. 57. In a suit commenced in any district to enforce any legal or equitable lien or remove an incumbrance or lien or a cloud on any title in the district, to real or personal property, if any one or more of the defendants shall not be found within the district or voluntarily appear, the court may order the absent defendant to appear, etc., by day certain to be designated, which order may be served upon the defendant, if practicable, wherever found, and also upon the person in possession of the property. If service upon the defendant is not practicable, it may be made by publication, as the court may direct, not less than once a week for six consecutive weeks.

Sec. 58. Civil causes may, by written stipulation of the parties or their attorney of record and upon the order of a judge, be transferred to the court of any other division of the same district.

Sec. 65. When a receiver is appointed, he shall manage and operate the property according to the valid laws of the state where it is situated; any receiver who violates this section is liable to a fine of not more than $3,000 or imprisonment for one year, or both.

Sec. 66. Receivers may be sued in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with the property, without the previous leave of the court by which he was appointed; but such suits shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court as far as may be necessary to the ends of justice.

Sec. 67. No person shall be appointed in any office or duty of any court who is related within the first degree of affinity or consanguinity to the judge thereof.

Sec. 68. No clerk of a district court or his deputy shall be appointed receiver or master in any case, "except where the judge of the court shall determine that special reasons exist therefor, to be assigned in the order of appointment."

Circuit Court of Appeals. Secs. 116-120. The nine judicial circuits of the United States are referred to above, also the number of circuit judges constituting the court in the different circuits. The chief justice and the associate justices of the supreme court are allotted among the circuits by an order of the court, and the several district judges in each district may sit in this court. If a member of the supreme court attends a session, he shall preside. Otherwise, the circuit judges in attendance upon the court shall preside in the order of seniority of their commissions. If a full court shall not be made up, one or more district judges within the circuit shall sit according to such provision among the district judges as either by general or particular assignment shall be designated by the court, but no judge before whom a question has been tried or heard in the district court shall sit on the trial of such cause or question in the circuit court of appeals.

Sec. 128. The circuit courts of appeals shall exercise appellate jurisdiction to review by appeal or writ of error final decisions in the district courts, including the United States district court for Hawaii, in all cases other than those in which appeals and writs of error may be taken direct to the supreme court, as provided in section two hundred and thirty-eight, unless otherwise provided by law; and, except as provided in sections two hundred and thirty-nine and two hundred and forty, the judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of appeals shall be final in all cases in which the jurisdiction is dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit or controversy being aliens and citizens of the United States, or citizens of different states; also in all cases arising under the patent laws, under the copyright laws, under the revenue laws, and under the criminal laws, and in admiralty cases.

Sec. 129. Where upon a hearing in equity in a district court, or by a judge thereof in vacation, an injunction shall be granted, continued, refused, or dissolved by an interlocutory order or decree, or an application to dissolve an injunction shall be refused, or an interlocutory order or decree shall be made appointing a receiver, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting, continuing, refusing, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve, an injunction, or appointing a receiver, to the circuit court of appeals, notwithstanding an appeal in such case might, upon final decree under the statutes regulating the same, be taken directly to the Supreme Court: Provided, that the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed unless otherwise ordered by that court, or the appellate court, or a judge thereof, during the pendency of such appeal: Provided, however, that the court below may, in its discretion, require as a condition of the appeal an additional bond.

Sec. 130. The court also has appellate and supervisory jurisdiction under the Bankruptcy Act.

Sec. 131. In the ninth circuit the court hears and determines writs of error and appeal from the United States Court for China. See CHINA.

Sec. 134. Provision is made for writs of error and appeals where they do not lie direct to the supreme court under 247, in which the amount in controversy shall exceed $500, and in all criminal cases, from the district court of Alaska to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, but the court of appeals may certify any question of law to the supreme court if desiring instruction thereon.

By the labor arbitration act of July 15, 1913, the circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction of questions of law under the act.

The Court of Claims. Secs. 136-138. This court, as established by the act of February 24, 1855, is continued by the Judicial Code. It consists of a chief justice and four judges, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to hold office during good behavior. The salary of the chief justice is $6,500 and of the other judges $6,000. It holds one annual session at the city of Washington, beginning on the first Monday of December. Any three of the judges constitute a quorum. The concurrence of three judges is necessary to the decision of any case.

Sec. 143. The clerk of the court is required on the first day of every regular session of Congress to transmit to Congress a complete statement of all the judgments rendered by the court during the previous year, stating the amounts thereof and the parties in whose favor they were rendered, together with a brief synopsis of the nature of the claims upon which they were rendered. At the end of every term of the court he shall transmit a copy of its decisions to the heads of departments and certain other officials.

Sec. 144. Any one being elected or appointed a Senator, Member of, or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner, who shall, after his election or appointment, and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, practice in this court, shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than two years; and shall thereafter be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the government of the United States.

Sec. 145. The court of claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims (except for pensions) founded upon the constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, upon any regulation of an executive department, upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable: Provided, however, that nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to the said court jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war, and commonly known as "war claims," or to hear and determine other claims which, prior to March 3, 1887, had been rejected or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same.

Second. All set-offs, counterclaims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the government of the United States against any claimant against the government in said court: Provided, that no suit against the government of the United States, brought by any officer of the United States to recover fees for services alleged to have been performed for the United States, shall be allowed under this chapter until an account for said fees shall have been rendered and finally acted upon as required by law, unless the proper accounting officer of the treasury fails to act finally thereon within six months after the account is received in said office.

Third. The claim of any paymaster, quartermaster, commissary of subsistence, or other disbursing officer of the United States, or of his administrators or executors, for relief from responsibility on account of loss by capture or otherwise, while in the line of his duty, of government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, and for which such officer was and is held responsible.

Sec. 146. In case any set-off, counterclaim, claim for damages, or other demand is set up on the part of the government against any person making claim against the government, the court shall hear both claims and adjudicate finally thereon.

Sec. 148. Claims pending in the executive department and involving controverted questions of fact or law may be transmitted to the court of claims, which reports its finding to the department. If it were so transmitted with the consent of the claimant, or if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that it has jurisdiction to render judgment, it shall proceed to do so.

Sec. 151. Whenever any bill, except for a pension, is pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the court of claims, which shall proceed therein and report to said House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, and any facts bearing upon the question, etc., provided that if it appear to the court upon the facts established that it has jurisdiction to render judgment in the matter, it shall proceed to do so and thereupon report to the House of Congress by which the claim was referred to the court.

Sec. 152. If the government shall put in issue the right of the plaintiff to recover, the court may in its discretion allow costs to the prevailing party from the time of joining such issue. Such costs shall include only what is actually incurred for witnesses, and for summoning the same, and fees paid to the clerk of the court.

Sec. 155. Aliens or the subjects of any government which accords to United States citizens the right to prosecute claims against its government in its courts shall have a like privilege in the court of claims.

Sec. 156. Claims are barred unless the petition is filed in the court or transmitted to the court by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House within six years after the claim first accrues, with an exception in the case of married women, minors, lunatics, etc., and persons beyond the sea, whose claims are not barred until three years after the disability has ceased, and such disabilities shall not operate cumulatively.

Sec. 162. Jurisdiction is given to hear and determine claims for property taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863.

Sec. 177. No interest shall be allowed on any claim up to the time of rendition of judgment by the court, unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for the payment of interest.

Sec. 180 provides that any person may present his petition to the court, alleging that he is or has been indebted to the United States as an officer or agent thereof, or by virtue of any contract therewith, or that he is the guarantor, or surety, or personal representative of any officer or agent or contractor so indebted, etc., and that an indebtedness to the United States has arisen and exists, and that he or the person he represents has applied to the proper department for an adjustment and settlement of the account, and that three years have elapsed since said application, without settlement, and no suit has been brought. The court shall proceed to hear the parties, to ascertain the amount due the United States, if any. The judgment of said court, or the supreme court to which an appeal shall lie, as in other cases, as to the amount due, shall be binding and conclusive upon the parties. The payment of such amount so found due by the court shall discharge such obligation. An action shall accrue to the United States against such principal, etc., to recover the amount so found due, which may be brought within three years of final judgment.

Sec. 182. Provision is made for appeals in Indian cases.

Court of Customs Appeals. Sec. 188. It consists of a presiding judge and four associate judges appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and receiving an annual salary of $7,000 per year. The presiding judge is so designated in his commission and the associates have precedence according to the dates of their commissions. Three members are a quorum and the concurrence of three is necessary to a decision. In case of vacancy or of temporary inability or disqualification, for any reason, of one or two of the judges, the President may, upon request of the presiding judge, designate any qualified United States circuit or district judge to act in his place.

Sec. 189. The court shall always be open. Its sessions may be held in the several judicial circuits and at such places as the court may from time to time designate. The judge attending, at any place other than Washington, shall be paid his expenses and those of one stenographic clerk.

Sec. 194. The court is a court of record.

Sec. 195. It has exclusive appellate jurisdiction to review final decisions by the board of general appraisers in all cases as to the construction of the law and the facts respecting the classification of merchandise and the rate of duty imposed thereon under such classification and the fees and charges connected therewith and all appealable questions as to the jurisdiction of said board and as to the laws and regulations governing the collection of the customs revenues, and its judgment is final.

Sec. 196. No appeal shall be taken or allowed from any board of United States general appraisers to any other court, and no appellate jurisdiction shall be exercised by any other court in cases decided by the said board, and nothing shall be deemed to deprive the supreme court of jurisdiction to hear and determine all customs cases which have heretofore been certified to said court from the United States circuit courts of appeals on application for writs of certiorari or otherwise, nor to review by writ of certiorari any customs case heretofore decided or now pending and hereafter decided, provided that application for said writ be made within six months after August 5, 1909; with a further proviso as to cases decided before the last-mentioned date.

Sec. 198. In case an importer, owner, consignee, or agent of any imported merchandise, or the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be dissatisfied with the report of the board of general appraisers, in the matters above referred to, he may within sixty days after the entry of a judgment of the board appeal to the court of customs appeals for a review of the questions of law and fact therein involved. (In Alaska and in the insular and other outside possessions ninety days is allowed for making such application.)

No change was made in this court by the Tariff act of 1913.

The Commerce Court was provided for by the Judicial code. It is a court of record, to consist of five judges assigned by the chief justice of the United States from among the circuit judges, except that in the first instance it is to be composed of five additional circuit judges, authorized by the act of June 18, 1910, and designated by the President to serve one, two, three, four, and five years respectively. Its regular sessions are to be held in Washington. It may exercise its powers and sit in different parts of the United States. Its process runs throughout the United States. Its jurisdiction extends to the jurisdiction possessed by circuit courts immediately prior to June 18, 1910, over all cases of the following kind:

1. All cases for the enforcement, otherwise than by adjudication and collection of a forfeiture or penalty or by infliction of criminal punishment, of any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission other than for the payment of money.

2. Cases brought to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend in whole or in part any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

3. Such cases as by sec. 3 of the Act of Feb. 19, 1903, to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the states, are authorized to be maintained in a circuit court.

4. All such mandamus proceedings as under the provisions of sec. 20 or sec. 23 of the "act to regulate commerce" (Feb. 4, 1887), as amended, are authorized to be maintained in a circuit court.

Nothing contained in the act shall be construed as enlarging the jurisdiction now possessed by the circuit courts that is hereby transferred to the commerce court.

The jurisdiction of the commerce court over cases of the foregoing classes is exclusive; all jurisdiction not in the above classes remains with the district courts as before.

The Commerce Court was abolished by act of October 22, 1913 (in effect December 31, 1913). Its jurisdiction was transferred to the district courts; the act contained the following provisions: The orders and processes of the district courts run throughout the United States. No interlocutory injunction, suspending or restraining the operation of or setting aside an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be made unless the application shall be heard by three judges, one of whom shall be a circuit judge, and unless a majority thereof shall concur. At least five days' notice of the hearing must be given to the commission, to the attorney general, and the defendants. Where irreparable damage might ensue, a majority of the three judges may, after not less than three days' notice as aforesaid, allow a temporary stay of the order of the commission for not more than sixty days. An appeal lies direct to the supreme court on an order granting an interlocutory injunction, if the appeal be taken within thirty days after the injunction is granted or refused, and a final judgment of the district court may be reviewed by the supreme court upon an appeal taken within sixty days.

The Supreme Court. Secs. 215-218. It consists of a chief justice of the United States and eight associate justices, any six of whom shall constitute a quorum. The latter shall have precedence according to the dates of their commissions, or, when the commissions of two of them bear the same date, according to their ages. If there is a vacancy in the office of chief justice, or in case of his inability to perform his duties, they devolve upon the associate justice first in precedence. The salary of the chief justice is $15,000 and of the justices $14,500.

Sec. 230. The supreme court shall hold at the seat of government one term annually, commencing on the second Monday in October, and such adjourned or special terms as it may find necessary.

Sec. 231. If at any session a quorum does not attend on the day appointed for holding it, the justices who do attend may adjourn the court from day to day for twenty days after said appointed time, unless there be sooner a quorum. If a quorum does not attend within said twenty days, the business of the court shall be continued over till the next appointed session.

Sec. 232. The justices attending at any session when less than a quorum is present may, within the twenty days mentioned, make all necessary orders touching any suit, proceeding, or process, preparatory to the hearing or decision thereof.

Sec. 233. The court has exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies of a civil nature where a state is a party, except between a state and its citizens, or between a state and citizens of other states, or aliens, in which latter case it shall have original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction. And it shall have exclusively all such jurisdiction of suits or proceedings against ambassadors or other public ministers, or their domestics or domestic servants, as a court of law can have consistently with the law of nations; and original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction of all suits brought by ambassadors, or other public ministers, or in which a consul or vice consul is a party.

Sec. 234. It has power to issue writs of prohibition to the district courts, when proceeding as courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; and writs of mandamus, in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law, to any courts appointed under the authority of the United States, or to persons holding office under the authority of the United States, where a state, or an ambassador, or other public minister, or a consul or vice consul is a party.

Sec. 235. The trial of issues of fact in the supreme court in all actions at law against citizens of the United States shall be by jury.

Sec. 236. The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction:

Sec. 237. A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a state in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any state, on the ground of their being repugnant to the constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed, by either party, under such constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the supreme court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States. The supreme court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such state court, and may, at their discretion, award execution or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ.

Sec. 238. Appeals and writs of error may be taken from the district courts, including the United States district court for Hawaii, direct to the supreme court in the following cases: In any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue, in which case the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the supreme court from the court below for decision; from the final sentences and decrees in prize causes; in any case that involves the construction or application of the constitution of the United States; in any case in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States, or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its authority is drawn in question; and in any case in which the constitution or law of a state is claimed to be in contravention of the constitution of the United States.

Sec. 239. In any case within its appellate jurisdiction as defined in sec. 128, the circuit court of appeals may certify to the supreme court any questions or propositions of law concerning which it desires the instruction of that court for its proper decision. See CERTIFICATE OF DIVISION.

Sec. 240. In any case, civil or criminal, in which the judgment or decree of the circuit court of appeals is made final by the provisions of this title, it shall be competent for the supreme court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, upon the petition of any party thereto, any such case to be certified to the supreme court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the supreme court.

Sec. 241. In any case in which the judgment or decree of the circuit court of appeals is not made final by the provisions of this title, there shall be of right an appeal or writ of error to the supreme court of the United States where the matter in controversy shall exceed one thousand dollars, besides costs.

Sec. 242. There is an appeal on behalf of the United States from judgments of the court of claims adverse to it and on behalf of the plaintiff in any case where the amount in controversy exceeds $3,000 or where his claim is forfeited to the United States by the judgment of said court.

Sec. 243. Such appeal shall be taken in 90 days after judgment.

Sec. 244. Writs of error and appeals may be taken from the supreme court and the United States district court for Porto Rico, in certain cases specified.

Sec. 246. Writs of error and appeals lie from final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of Hawaii under the same regulations and in the same classes of cases as from final judgments of the highest court of a state may be taken to the supreme court under section 237, and in all cases where the amount involved, exclusive of costs, exceeds $5,000.

Sec. 247. Writs of error and appeals lie from the district court of Alaska in certain cases.

Sec. 248. The court has jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm final judgments of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in all cases in which the constitution, or any statute, treaty, etc., of the United States is involved, or in causes in which the value in controversy exceeds $25,000 or in which the title to real estate exceeding in value $25,000 is involved.

Sec. 250. Any final judgment or decree of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia may be re-examined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the supreme court of the United States, upon writ of error or appeal, in the following cases:

1. In cases in which the jurisdiction of the trial court is in issue; but when any such case is not otherwise reviewable in said supreme court, then the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to said supreme court for decision.

2. In prize cases.

3. In cases involving the construction or application of the constitution of the United States, or the constitutionality of any law of the United States, or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its authority.

4. In cases in which the constitution, or any law of a state, is claimed to be in contravention of the constitution of the United States.

5. In cases in which the validity of any authority exercised under the United States, or the existence or scope of any power or duty of an officer of the United States is drawn in question.

6. In cases in which the construction of any law of the United States is drawn in question by the defendant.

Except as provided in the next succeeding section, the judgments and decrees of said court of appeals shall be final in all cases arising under the patent laws, the copyright laws, the revenue laws, the criminal laws, and in admiralty cases; and, except as provided in the next succeeding section, the judgments and decrees of said court of appeals shall be final in all cases not reviewable as hereinbefore provided.

Writs of error and appeals shall be taken within the same time, in the same manner, and under the same regulations as writs of error and appeals are taken from the circuit courts of appeals to the supreme court of the United States.

Sec. 251. In any case in which the judgment or decree of said court of appeals is made final by the section last preceding, it shall be competent for the supreme court of the United States to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to it for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by writ of error or appeal to said supreme court. It shall also be competent for said court of appeals, in any case in which its judgment or decree is made final under the section last preceding, at any time to certify to the supreme court of the United States any questions or propositions of law concerning which it desires the instruction of that court for their proper decision; and thereupon the supreme court may either give its instruction on the questions and propositions certified to it, which shall be binding upon said court of appeals in such case, or it may require that the whole record and cause be sent up to it for its consideration, and thereupon shall decide the whole matter in controversy in the same manner as if it had been brought there for review by writ of error or appeal.

Sec. 252. The court has appellate jurisdiction from the courts of bankruptcy from which it has appellate jurisdiction in other cases, and has a like jurisdiction not within any organized circuit of the United States and from the supreme court of the District of Columbia. An appeal may be taken from any final decision of a court of appeals, allowing or rejecting a claim in bankruptcy, under rules to be prescribed by the supreme court, in the following cases and no other:

1. Where the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000 and the question involved is one which might have been taken on appeal or writ of error from the highest court of a state to the supreme court.

2. Where some justice of the supreme court shall certify that in his opinion the determination of the question involved in the allowance or rejection of such claim is essential to the uniform construction of laws relating to bankruptcy. Controversies may be certified to the supreme court from other federal courts, and the supreme court may exercise jurisdiction thereof and may issue writs of certiorari.

Sec. 255. Any woman who shall have been a member of the bar of the highest court of any state or territory or of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia for three years and maintained a good standing there, and shall be a person of good moral character, shall be admitted to practice before the supreme court.

The Supreme Court may review a judgment of the circuit court of appeals upon certiorari in a case where no appeal lies; City & County of Denver v. New York Trust Co., 229 U. S. 123, 33 Sup. Ct. 657, 57 L. Ed. 1101.

Where the jurisdiction of the federal court of a suit brought by a trustee in bankruptcy rests in diverse citizenship alone, the judgment of the circuit court of appeals is final. If, however, the petition also discloses as an additional ground of jurisdiction that the case arises under the laws of the United States, the judgment of the circuit court of appeals is not final, but can be reviewed by this court; Lovell v. Newman, 227 U. S. 412, 33 Sup. Ct. 375, 57 L. Ed. 577. Whether the case is one arising under the laws of the United States must be determined upon the statements in the petition itself, and not upon questions subsequently arising in the progress of the case; id.; MacFadden v. U. S., 213 U. S. 288, 29 Sup. Ct. 490, 53 L. Ed. 801.

Provisions common to more than one court. Sec. 256. The jurisdiction vested in the courts of the United States in the cases and proceedings hereinafter mentioned, shall be exclusive of the courts of the several states:

1. Of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States.

2. Of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws of the United States.

3. Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it.

4. Of all seizures under the laws of the United States, on land or on waters not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; of all prizes brought into the United States; and of all proceedings for the condemnation of property taken as prize.

5. Of all cases arising under the patent-right, or copyright laws of the United States.

6. Of all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy.

7. Of all controversies of a civil nature, where a state is a party, except between a state and its citizens, or between a state and citizens of other states, or aliens.

8. Of all suits and proceedings against ambassadors, or other public ministers, or their domestics, or domestic servants, or against consuls or vice consuls.

Sec. 258. Judges appointed under the authority of the United States are forbidden to exercise the profession of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law. Disobedience is made a high misdemeanor.

Sec. 260. When any judge of any court of the United States, appointed to hold office during good behavior, resigns his office, after ten years of continuous service and having attained seventy years of age, he shall receive during his natural life the salary which was payable at the time of his retirement.

Sec. 261. Writs of ne exeat may be granted by any justice of the supreme court in cases where they might be granted by the supreme court; and by any district judge in cases where they might be granted by the district court of which he is a judge. But no writ of ne exeat shall be granted unless a suit in equity is commenced, and satisfactory proof is made that the defendant designs quickly to depart from the United States.

Sec. 262. The supreme court and the district courts shall have power to issue writs of scire facias. The supreme court, the circuit courts of appeals, and the district courts shall have power to issue all writs not specifically provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, and agreeable to the usages and principles of law.

Sec. 263. Where notice is given of a motion for an injunction in a district court, the court or a judge thereof, if there appears to be danger of irreparable injury from delay, may grant an order restraining the act sought to be enjoined until the decision upon the motion. It may be granted with or without security, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 264. Writs of injunction may be granted by any justice of the supreme court in cases where they might be granted by the supreme court; and by any judge of a district court in cases where they might be granted by such court. But no justice of the supreme court shall hear or allow any application for an injunction or restraining order in any cause pending in the circuit to which he is allotted, elsewhere than within such circuit, or at such place outside of the same as the parties may stipulate in writing, except when it can not be heard by the district judge of the district. In case of the absence from the district of the district judge, or of his disability, any circuit judge of the circuit in which the district is situated may grant an injunction or restraining order in any case pending in the district court, where the same might be granted by the district judge.

Sec. 265. The writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a state, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy.

Sec. 266. No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a state by restraining the action of any officer of such state in the enforcement or execution of such statute, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the supreme court, or by any district court, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as a district judge, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the supreme court, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the supreme court, or a circuit judge, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur. Such application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice has been given to the governor and to the attorney general of the state, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit; provided that if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the supreme court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice. The hearing of a motion for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited. An appeal may be taken direct to the supreme court from the order granting or denying an interlocutory injunction. It is further provided by the amendment of March 4, 1913, that if, before the final hearing of such application, a suit shall have been brought in a state court to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in the state court of proceedings under such statute, pending a determination of such suit by such state court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of said suit in the courts of the state. Such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing, and notice of ten days served upon the attorney general of the state that the suit in the state court is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith.

Sec. 267. Suits in equity will not be sustained in any courts of the United States in any case where a plain, adequate, and complete remedy may be had at law.

Sec. 268. The said courts shall have power to impose and administer all necessary oaths, and to punish, by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempts of their authority: Provided, that such power to punish contempts shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehavior of any person in their presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of any of the officers of said courts in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any such officer, or by any party, juror, witness, or other person to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the said courts.

Sec. 269. All of the said courts shall have power to grant new trials, in cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in the courts of law.

Sec. 270. The judges of the supreme court, and the circuit and district judges, the United States commissioners, judges and other magistrates of the several states who have authority to make arrests for offenses against the United States, shall have the like authority to hold to the security of the peace and for good behavior, in cases arising under the constitution and laws of the United States, as may be lawfully exercised by any judge or justice of the peace of the respective states.

Sec. 272. In all courts of the United States the parties may plead and manage their own causes personally, or by the assistance of such counsel or attorneys as, by the rules of the said courts respectively, are permitted to manage and conduct causes therein.

By section 289, circuit courts are, on the taking effect of the act, abolished, and whenever in any law not embraced within this act any reference is made to, or any power or duty is conferred upon, the circuit courts, such reference shall be deemed to confer such power, etc., upon the district courts.

The act was approved March 3, 1911, and took effect January 1, 1912.

The Judicial Code did not abolish the district court, but transferred to it cases pending in the circuit court; U. S. v. Mfg. Co., 195 Fed. 778. The new district court is the successor of the formerly existing circuit court and is vested with the duty of hearing and disposing of cases under the Expedition Act of 1903; Ex parte U. S., 226 U. S. 420, 33 Sup. Ct. 170, 57 L. Ed. 281.

The words inhabitant, resident, and citizen, as used in the Judicial Code, §§ 51, 52, contemplate the same condition and all include the idea of domicile; U. S. v. Gronich, 211 Fed. 548.

Under Judicial Code, § 51, where jurisdiction depends on diverse citizenship alone, plaintiff is entitled to sue in the district of his residence, but is not required under § 53 to sue in the division of the district in which he resided; Reich v. Copper Co., 209 Fed. 880.

Under R. S. § 649, and Judicial Code § 291, issues of fact may by consent be tried in the district court without a jury; such a trial no longer amounts to an arbitration and may be reviewed; Nashville I. Ry. v. Barnum, 212 Fed. 634.

An unsatisfied, justiciable claim of some right involving the jurisdictional amount is a controversy between the parties within the meaning of the statutes defining the jurisdiction of the circuit [district] court, and such jurisdiction does not depend upon the denial by the defendant of the existence of the claim or of its amount or validity; In re Metropolitan Ry. Receivership, 203 U. S. 90, 28 Sup. Ct. 219, 52 L. Ed. 403. Jurisdiction cannot be given to the federal courts based upon the alleged anticipated defense which may be set up and which is invalid under some law or provision of the constitution of the United States. The jurisdiction must affirmatively appear from the statements of the complainant's case; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 211 U. S. 149, 29 Sup. Ct. 42, 53 L. Ed. 126.

A federal court within its limitations respecting jurisdiction over the subject-matter is a court of general jurisdiction; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Perenchio, 205 Fed. 472, 123 C. C. A. 540.

The Judicial Code does not purport to embody all the law upon the subject to which it relates. Sections 292, 294, and 297 expressly bear upon the extent to which the code affects or repeals prior laws; Street & Smith v. Mfg. Co., 231 U. S. 348, 34 Sup. Ct. 73, 58 L. Ed. —.

The meaning of the phrase "drawn in question," as it occurs in § 250 of the Judicial Code, is the same as in R. S. § 709, § 5 of the Circuit Court of Appeals act, and other statutes regulating territorial appeal; U. S. v. Fisher, 227 U. S. 445, 33 Sup. Ct. 329, 57 L. Ed. 591.

If a case can be taken to the Supreme Court by appeal or writ of error under § 241, it cannot be taken there by certiorari under § 240; U. S. v. Beatty, 232 U. S. 463, 34 Sup. Ct. 392, 58 L. Ed. —.

The means of review of rulings in United States courts are prescribed by statute, by ancient English statutes, and the rules and practice of the federal courts, and are not affected by the "Conformity Act" nor the state laws or practice; Boatmen's Bank v. Trower Bros. Co., 181 Fed. 804, 104 C. C. A. 314.

By R. S. § 721, the laws of the several states, except where the constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States otherwise require or provide, are to be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law, in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply. In all cases depending upon the construction of a state statute, federal courts will follow the construction of the court of last resort of the state, when that construction is well settled, without respect to its original soundness; even when, in ignorance of a decision by the state court, the supreme court had construed the statute differently; Fairfield v. County of Gallatin, 100 U. S. 47, 25 L. Ed. 544; or when, if it were an original question, the federal court would be of a different opinion; Balkam v. Iron Co., 154 U. S. 177, 14 Sup. Ct. 1010, 38 L. Ed. 953.

While the United States courts follow the interpretation given to the laws of the state by their highest tribunals, yet in case of conflicting decisions, or in the absence of decisions at the time of consideration by the United States courts, the rule is, of course, modified; Rowan v. Runnels, 5 How. (U. S.) 139, 12 L. Ed. 85; Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (U. S.) 599, 15 L. Ed. 518. In the leading case of Burgess v. Seligman the limitations of the doctrine were thus stated by Bradley, J.: "The federal courts have an independent jurisdiction in the administration of state laws, co-ordinate with, and not subordinate to, that of the state courts, and are bound to exercise their own judgment as to the meaning and effect of those laws. The existence of two co-ordinate jurisdictions in the same territory is peculiar, and the results would be anomalous and inconvenient but for the exercise of mutual respect and deference. Since the ordinary administration of the law is carried on by the state courts, it necessarily happens that by the course of their decisions certain rules are established which become rules of property and action in the state, and have all the effect of law, and which it would be wrong to disturb. This is especially true with regard to the law of real estate and the construction of state constitutions and statutes. Such established rules are always regarded by the federal courts, no less than by the state courts themselves, as authoritative declarations of what the law is. But where the law has not been thus settled, it is the right and duty of the federal courts to exercise their own judgment, as they also always do in reference to the doctrines of commercial law and general jurisprudence. So when contracts and transactions have been entered into, and rights have accrued thereon under a particular state of the decisions, or when there has been no decision of the state tribunals, the federal courts properly claim the right to adopt their own interpretation of the law applicable to the case, although a different interpretation may be adopted by the state courts after such rights have accrued. But even in such cases, for the sake of harmony and to avoid confusion, the federal courts will lean toward an agreement of views with the state courts if the question seems to them balanced with doubt. Acting on these principles, founded as they are on comity and good sense, the courts of the United States, without sacrificing their own dignity as independent tribunals, endeavor to avoid, and in most cases do avoid any unseemly conflict with the well-considered decisions of the state courts. As, however, the very object of giving to the national courts jurisdiction to administer the laws of the states in controversies between citizens of different states was to institute independent tribunals, which, it might be supposed, would be unaffected by local prejudices and sectional views, it would be a dereliction of their duty not to exercise an independent judgment in cases not foreclosed by previous adjudication." Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 2 Sup. Ct. 10, 27 L. Ed. 359, approved Pana v. Bowler, 107 U. S. 541, 2 Sup. Ct. 704, 27 L. Ed. 424. See, also, Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S. 348, 10 Sup. Ct. 554, 33 L. Ed. 909. Ordinarily, they will follow the latest settled decisions; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 291, 8 L. Ed. 402; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black (U. S.) 599, 17 L. Ed. 261. But a change of decision by a state court in regard to the construction of a statute will not be allowed to affect rights acquired under the former decision; Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. Ed. 968; German Savings Bk. v. Franklin County, 128 U. S. 538, 9 Sup. Ct. 159, 32 L. Ed. 519. See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS, for a discussion of this doctrine, usually called the rule in Gelpcke v. Dubuque. It is otherwise when no rights have been acquired under the former decision; Fairfield v. County of Gallatin, 100 U. S. 47, 25 L. Ed. 544; Knox County v. Bank, 147 U. S. 91, 13 Sup. Ct. 267, 37 L. Ed. 93; or where the decision of the state court was made long after the rights in question accrued; Bolles v. Brimfield, 120 U. S. 759, 7 Sup. Ct. 736, 30 L. Ed. 786; Barnum v. Okolona, 148 U. S. 393, 13 Sup. Ct. 638, 37 L. Ed. 495. The federal courts will not follow the decision of an inferior court; Patapsco Guano Co. v. Morrison, 2 Woods 395, Fed. Cas. No. 10,792.

In controversies concerning the title to real property, the federal court always administers the law as if it were sitting as a local court; Slaughter v. Glenn, 98 U. S. 244, 25 L. Ed. 122; Lowndes v. Huntington, 153 U. S. 17, 14 Sup. Ct. 758, 38 L. Ed. 615. So also of statutes of limitation; Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 177, 15 Sup. Ct. 570, 39 L. Ed. 660.

Questions of international law must be decided as matters of general law, uncontrolled by local decisions; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123. Decisions of the state court on questions of local law, affecting solely the internal police of the state or the construction of a municipal ordinance, must control; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 36 L. Ed. 759.

Local law or custom, established by repeated decisions of the highest courts of the state, becomes also the law governing courts of the United States sitting in that state; Bucher v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 555, 8 Sup. Ct. 974, 31 L. Ed. 795; Detroit v. Osborne, 135

U. S. 492, 10 Sup. Ct. 1012, 34 L. Ed. 260. This is particularly true as to decisions which establish a rule of property, and the rule is observed even as to points upon which the states are at variance among themselves; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 10 Sup. Ct. 354, 33 L. Ed. 696; May v. Tenney, 148 U. S. 60, 13 Sup. Ct. 491, 37 L. Ed. 368; and where the same statute receives a different interpretation in different states, each will be followed by the federal courts as the true interpretation for the particular state in question; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Stahley, 62 Fed. 363, 11 C. C. A. 88. The supreme court will follow the construction given by the state court to a state statute of limitations, even in a case decided the other way by the circuit court before the decision of the state court; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 13 Sup. Ct. 466, 37 L. Ed. 316; and the lower federal courts will reverse their decision holding a state statute unconstitutional, when the state subsequently decides that it is constitutional, if a final decree had not been entered in the federal court; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Poe, 64 Fed. 9. In Forsyth v. City of Hammond, 71 Fed. 443, 18 C. C. A. 175, however, the circuit court of appeals declined to follow the the supreme court of Indiana where the decision of the latter was rendered after argument and before decision in the federal court.

Federal courts follow territorial decisions. The construction of a territorial statute by the local courts is of great, if not controlling weight in the supreme court; Lewis v. Herrera, 208 U. S. 309, 28 Sup. Ct. 412, 52 L. Ed. 506; which in considering the provisions of an ambiguous territorial statute will lean to the construction given to it by the territorial supreme court; Clason v. Matko, 223 U. S. 646, 32 Sup. Ct. 392, 56 L. Ed. 588; and generally the construction of a territorial statute by the local court is very persuasive upon the supreme court; Crary v. Dye, 208 U. S. 515, 28 Sup. Ct. 360, 52 L. Ed. 595; and will ordinarily be followed by it; English v. Arizona, 214 U. S. 359, 29 Sup. Ct. 658, 53 L. Ed. 1030; and will not ordinarily be reviewed; Santa Fé County Com'rs v. New Mexico, 215 U. S. 296, 30 Sup. Ct. 111, 54 L. Ed. 202. Following this rule the supreme court has followed the construction given by the Hawaiian courts to a statute legitimating children born out of wedlock; Kealoha v. Castle, 210 U. S. 149, 28 Sup. Ct. 684, 52 L. Ed. 998; or a decision upon the effect of a judgment of a land commission respecting the title to land; Lewers v. Atchery, 222 U. S. 285, 32 Sup. Ct. 94, 56 L. Ed. 202.

As to questions of state law upon which the decisions of the state courts are controlling in cases originating in or removed to federal courts, see note in 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415. It is only the highest state court which they follow; decisions of inferior courts are merely persuasive; Westerlund v. Mining Co., 203 Fed. 599, 609, 121 C. C. A. 627.

The provision of R. S. § 721, making the state law the rule of decision, embraces state rules of evidence in civil cases at common law; Vance v. Campbell, 1 Black (U. S.) 427, 17 L. Ed. 168; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co., 112 U. S. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. 119, 28 L. Ed. 708; but not in equity cases; Segee v. Thomas, 3 Blatch. 11, Fed. Cas. No. 12,633.

Some authorities treat decisions of the highest state court as equally binding with state statutes; Stewart v. Morris, 89 Fed. 290, 32 C. C. A. 203; see Nashua Savings Bank v. Anglo-American L. M. & A. Co., 189 U. S. 221, 23 Sup. Ct. 517, 47 L. Ed. 782; but these cases are based upon dicta or are cases dealing solely with statutory rules of evidence; see Ex parte Fisk, 113 U. S. 713, 5 Sup. Ct. 724, 28 L. Ed. 1117. The federal courts have not considered the state decisions as controlling in the consideration of questions of evidence on appeal; New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637, 7 Sup. Ct. 1039, 30 L. Ed. 1049. It is said in Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Kendall, 167 Fed. 62, 93 C. C. A. 422, 16 Ann. Cas. 560, that the point whether state decisions touching a general common-law rule of evidence are binding upon the federal court has never been directly decided, but many cases are enumerated as to matters in which the question arises of the scope of the rule that the federal courts are bound by the state law and practice. The decision of the highest court of Massachusetts upon the construction of the Sunday law was held binding; Bucher v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 555, 8 Sup. Ct. 974, 31 L. Ed. 795; as was also provisions of the New York Civil Code, that a physician should not be allowed to disclose as a witness any information which he acquired in a professional capacity; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co., 112 U. S. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. 119, 28 L. Ed. 708.

A New York statute permitting a party to be examined by his adversary as a witness at any time previous to the trial of an action at law is not binding because in conflict with the method of proof provided in the United States; Ex parte Fisk, 113 U. S. 713, 5 Sup. Ct. 724, 28 L. Ed. 1117; nor is the question whether the engineer and fireman of a locomotive were fellow servants; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772; where it was said:

"The question as to what is a matter of local, and what of general law, and the extent to which in the latter this court should follow the decisions of the state courts, has been often presented. The unvarying rule is, that in matters of the latter class this court, while leaning towards an agreement with the views of the state courts, always exercises an independent judgment; and as unvarying has been the course of decision, that the question of the responsibility of a railroad corporation for injuries caused to or by its servants is one of general law. In the case of Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1 [10 L. Ed. 865], the first proposition was considered at length. On page 18 it is thus stated: 'But admitting the doctrine to be fully settled in New York, it remains to be considered whether it is obligatory upon this court if it differs from the principles established in the general commercial law. It is observable that the courts of New York do not found their decisions upon this point upon any local statute, or positive, fixed, or ancient local usage, but they deduce the doctrine from the general principles of commercial law. It is, however, contended that the thirty-fourth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, c. 20, furnishes a rule obligatory upon this court to follow the decisions of the state tribunals in all cases to which they apply. That section provides "that the laws of the several states, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States shall otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision, in trials at common law, in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply." In order to maintain the argument, it is essential, therefore, to hold that the word "laws," in this section, includes within the scope of its meaning the decisions of the local tribunals. In the ordinary use of language it will hardly be contended that the decisions of courts constitute laws. They are, at most, only evidence of what the laws are, and are not, of themselves, laws. They are often re-examined, reversed, and qualified by the courts themselves, whenever they are found to be either defective, or ill-founded, or otherwise incorrect. The laws of a state are more usually understood to mean the rules and enactments promulgated by the legislative authority thereof, or long-established local customs having the force of laws. In all the various cases which have hitherto come before us for decision, this court has uniformly supposed that the true interpretation of the thirty-fourth section limited its application to state laws strictly local, that is to say, to the positive statutes of the state, and the construction thereof adopted by the local tribunals, and to rights and titles to things having a permanent locality, such as the rights and titles to real estate, and other matters immovable and intraterritorial in their nature and character.'" Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 370, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772.

So the supreme court has said: "The laws of the several states with respect to evidence within the meaning of this section (721) apply not only to the statutes but to the decisions of their highest courts." Nashua Sav. Bk. v. Anglo-American L. M. & A. Co., 189 U. S. 221, 23 Sup. Ct. 517, 47 L. Ed. 782. The opinion of the circuit court of appeals in Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Kendall, 167

Fed. 62, 67, 93 C. C. A. 422, 16 Ann. Cas. 560, stated: "The question is not otherwise considered in the case and the decisions cited to support the statement all involved statutes of the states in which the actions arose. The language just quoted was not necessary to the determination of the question before the court." And it has been held in the circuit court of appeals upon careful consideration that "the decisions of the courts of a state construing the common law rules of evidence are not obligatory on the federal courts." Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Yates, 79 Fed. 584, 25 C. C. A. 103, 40 L. R. A. 553; contra, Stewart v. Morris, 89 Fed. 290, 32 C. C. A. 203. The whole subject is very thoroughly discussed with a copious citation of authorities in the opinion of the circuit court of appeals in Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Kendall, 167 Fed. 62, 93 C. C. A. 422, 16 Ann. Cas. 560; where it is argued that common-law rules of evidence are the creation of the courts rather than "laws" within § 721, and that, in the absence of statutes, federal courts should be independent in this respect.

Under R. S. § 858, as amended January 29, 1906, it is provided that "the competency of a witness to testify in any civil action, suit, or proceeding in the courts of the United States shall be determined by the laws of the state or territory in which the court is held." U. S. Comp. Stat. (Supp.) 1911, 271.

It does not apply to questions of general jurisprudence; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 37 L. Ed. 97; or of general commercial law; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865; Oates v. Bank, 100 U. S. 239, 25 L. Ed. 580; see COMMERCIAL LAW (but they should have due weight given to them; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Mfg. Co., 52 Fed. 191, 3 C. C. A. 1, 17 L. R. A. 595); or to the general principles of equity; Neves v. Scott, 13 How. (U. S.) 271, 14 L. Ed. 140; or to criminal cases; id.; or questions of a general nature, not based upon a local statute; Hough v. R. Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Myrick v. R. Co., 107 U. S. 109, 1 Sup. Ct. 425, 27 L. Ed. 325. It is said, somewhat vaguely, that questions of general law are to be uncontrolled by decisions of the state courts, except to give them such weight as may be deemed proper, with due respect to their character as co-ordinate tribunals. It is difficult to deduce from the cases any general rule or principle, but among cases thus held to be questions of general law are: What is or is not a navigable stream; Chisolm v. Caines, 67 Fed. 285; whether a carrier may stipulate for exemption from liability for its own negligence; Eells v. Ry. Co., 52 Fed. 903; whether two employes of the same master are fellow-servants; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772. In the section last referred to, the word "laws" does not include the decisions of the local tribunals, for these are only evidence of what the laws are; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865. This generalization of Judge Story is the subject of forcible comment by Betts, J., in his opinion in the case of In re Barry, 42 Fed. 132, and reprinted in 136 U. S. 597, 34 L. Ed. 503, note.

The decisions of the state appellate courts are treated as being as obligatory as statutes; Swift v. Tyson is also cited in Coleman v. Newby, 7 Kan. 92, to the proposition that courts could never, in any manner, make laws; in Phelps v. City of Panama, 1 Wash. Ter. 523, it was held that "laws of the United States" embraced all rules of property and conduct; and in Lycoming I. Co. v. Wright, 60 Vt. 523, 12 Atl. 108, it is held that the expression "laws of the state" includes both statute and common law; and Ex parte Waddell, Fed. Cas. No. 17,027, did not include judicial decisions or rules of courts but only local statutes and local usages of a fixed and permanent operation; but the statutes are to be read in connection with the constructions of the highest local courts; such judicial exposition being regarded as becoming part of the acts by defining their true meaning, following in this view, Bank of U. S. v. Daniel, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 32, 53, 9 L. Ed. 989. It is to be observed that while the opinion in Swift v. Tyson uses precisely the expression quoted which has been frequently the subject of comment, it is claimed that this language is intended to apply to questions of a general nature and that the word "laws" in the Judiciary Act does include the construction of statutes by local tribunals and their decisions as to those having a permanent locality. This understanding of Judge Story's opinion is frequently expressed by the courts; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Thorley, 145 Fed. 117, 76 C. C. A. 87; In re Hopper-Morgan Co., 154 Fed. 249.

Where contracts are based upon laws then believed to be constitutional, there being at the time no adjudication on such laws in the state courts declaring them invalid, the federal courts will not follow subsequent decisions of state courts thereon, but will construe such statute for themselves; Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 666, 22 L. Ed. 227.

And while the rule is thoroughly settled that remedies in the courts of the United States are, at common law or in equity, according to the essential nature of the case, uncontrolled in that particular by the practice of the state courts; New Orleans v. Construction Co., 129 U. S. 45, 46, 9 Sup. Ct. 223, 32 L. Ed. 607; yet an enlargement of equitable rights by the state statute may be administered by federal courts as well as by the courts of the state; and when the case is one of a remedial proceeding, essentially of an equitable character, there can be no objection to the exercise of the jurisdiction; In re Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 503, 520, 22 L. Ed. 599; Holland v. Challen, 110

U. S. 15, 25, 3 Sup. Ct. 495, 28 L. Ed. 52; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 557, 7 Sup. Ct. 1129, 30 L. Ed. 1010.

It is frequently asserted that there is no common law of the United States in the sense that it is recognized as a rule of decision in the federal courts. This idea, which is found in varying forms of expression in opinions of the United States supreme court, seems to have had its origin in what has been characterized as a dictum of McLean, J., in Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. Ed. 1055, where he said: "It is clear there can be no common law of the United States, the said government is composed of 24 sovereign and independent states; each of which may have its local usage, customs, and common law; there is no principle which pervades the Union and has the authority of law, that is not embodied in the constitution or laws of the Union. The common law could be made a part of our federal system only by legislative adoption." This was repeated in Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 9 L. Ed. 1181. But in Bucher v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 555, 8 Sup. Ct. 974, 31 L. Ed. 795, it is said that the common law of the United States rests on the principles derived from the common law of England. Of course this explanation might apply simply to the United States as a territorial explanation, and indeed that case referred to the common law as prevailing in the District of Columbia, as did also Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 568, 8 L. Ed. 786. In Murray v. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. 24, Shiras, J., said: "To me it seems clear, beyond question, that neither in the constitution, nor in the statutes enacted by Congress nor in the judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States can there be found any substantial support for the proposition that, since the adoption of the constitution, the principles of the common law have been wholly abrogated touching such matters as are by that instrument placed within the exclusive control of the national government."

To the same effect, Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 96, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

And in an interesting article by Alton B. Parker on "The Common Law Jurisdiction of United States Courts," in 17 Yale L. J. 1, it is urged that the common law is recognized as a rule of decision in a majority of cases and that the contention to the contrary is due entirely to the unfortunate obiter dictum of Mr. Justice McLean, above quoted.

See COMMON LAW.

The original jurisdiction of the district court in certain cases, and the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court to review the decisions of state courts, depend upon the existence in the case of what is termed a federal question. This is a question arising in a litigated case, and necessary to its decision, involving the construction of the constitution, or a law or treaty of the United States. See FEDERAL QUESTION.

Where such questions are clearly presented by the answer in that court, and the decree rendered could not have been made without adversely deciding them, and they are substantial as involving the jurisdiction of the circuit court over property in its possession and the effect to be given to its decree, the writ of error will not be dismissed; Wabash R. Co. v. Adelbert College, 208 U. S. 38, 28 Sup. Ct. 182, 52 L. Ed. 379.

Where the federal jurisdiction rests upon the fact that a federal question is involved, the right of the defendant to be sued in the district of which he is an inhabitant may be waived. The fact of residence is not jurisdictional; Logan & Bryan v. Postal Telegraph & Cable Co., 157 Fed. 570.

The jurisdiction over appeals and writs of error from state courts depends on whether a federal question is involved. See that title.

Decedents' Estates. Federal equity jurisdiction extends to the administration of decedents' estates, where it concerns citizens and residents of different states; but they will be governed and controlled by the statutory rules and regulations of the particular state; Newberry v. Wilkinson, 199 Fed. 673, 118 C. C. A. 111, citing Lawrence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 215, 12 Sup. Ct. 440, 36 L. Ed. 130.

Matters of pure probate, in the strict sense of the words, are not within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Where a state law, statutory or customary, gives to the citizens of the state, in an action or suit inter partes, the right to question or assail probate, at law or in equity, the federal courts, on behalf of citizens of other states, will enforce such remedies; but such suit must relate to independent controversies, and not to those arising on an application to probate, or a mere method of procedure ancillary to the original procedure; Farrell v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. The republic whose organic law is the constitution adopted by the people of the thirteen states which declared their independence of the government of Great Britain on the fourth day of July, 1776.

When they are said to constitute one nation, this must be understood with proper qualifications. Our motto, E pluribus unum, expresses the true nature of that composite body which foreign nations regard and treat with in all their communications with our people. No state can enter into a treaty, nor make a compact with any foreign nation. To foreigners we present a compact unity, an undivided sovereignty. No state can do a national act nor legally commit the faith of the Union.

In our interstate and domestic relations we are for some purposes one. We are, so far as our constitution makes us, one, and no further; and under this we are so far a unity that one state is not foreign to another. Art. 4, § 2. A constitution, according to the original meaning of the word, is an organic law. It includes the organization of the government, the grant of powers, the distribution of these powers into legislative, executive, and judicial, and the names of the officers by whom these are exercised. And with these provisions a constitution, properly so-called, terminates. But ours goes further. It contains restrictions on the powers of the government which it organizes.

The writ of habeas corpus, the great instrument in defence of personal liberty against the encroachment of the government, shall not be suspended but in case of rebellion or invasion, and when the public safety requires it. No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed; no money shall be drawn from the treasury where there is not a regular appropriation; no title of nobility shall be granted; and no person holding office shall receive a present from any foreign government. Art. 1, § 9. To these, which are in the original constitution, may be added the eleven first amendments. These, as their character clearly shows, had their origin in a jealousy of the powers of the general government. All are designed more effectually to guard the rights of the people, and would properly, together with the restrictions in the original constitution, have a place in a bill of rights. Any act or law of the United States in violation of these, with whatever formality enacted, would be null and void, as an excess of power.

The restrictions on state sovereignty, besides those which relate to foreign nations, are that no state shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver a tender in the payment of debts, pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility. These prohibitions are absolute. In addition to these restrictions, the results of the War of Secession of 1861-1865 caused the adoption of the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, which lay still further restrictions upon the power of the states, so far as relates to slavery and the regulation of the right of suffrage. The 13th amendment provides that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction, and confers power upon congress to enforce this article by appropriate legislation; the 14th amendment provides that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, and defines who shall be so considered; the 15th amendment specifically provides that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. See CONSTITUTION OF UNITED STATES; FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

Without the consent of congress no state shall lay any duties on imports or exports, or any duty on tonnage, or keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, or enter into any agreement or compact with another state, or engage in war unless actually invaded, or in imminent danger of being so.

What constitutes a duty on exports or imports has been a matter of frequent litigation in the supreme court. It has been finally decided that the term "import" as used in the constitution does not refer to articles imported from one state to another, but only to articles imported from foreign states; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; but the prohibition contained in those provisions of the constitution which ordain that congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states; that no state shall levy any imposts or duties on imports or exports; that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the immunities and privileges of citizens of the several states, have been construed together by the supreme court; and various statutes of the different states have been declared unconstitutional because they violated them. Thus a statute allowing an additional fee to port-wardens for every vessel entering a port; Southern S. S. Co. v. Port-Wardens, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 31, 18 L. Ed. 749; a tax on passengers introduced from foreign countries; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 286, 12 L. Ed. 702; a tax on passengers going out of a state; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 18 L. Ed. 745; a tax levied upon freight brought into or through one state into another; State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232, 21 L. Ed. 146; a tonnage tax on vessels entering the harbors of a state, either from foreign or domestic ports; State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 204, 20 L. Ed. 370; Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 581, 22 L. Ed. 201; Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 577, 22 L. Ed. 417; Guy v. Baltimore, 100 U. S. 434, 25 L. Ed. 743; have all been so decided. It is said that wherever subjects, in regard to which a power to regulate commerce is asserted, are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, they are exclusively within the regulating control of congress. But the mere grant of the commercial power to congress does not forbid the states from passing laws to regulate pilotage. The power to regulate commerce includes various subjects, upon which there should be some uniform rule, and upon others different rules in different localities. The power is exclusive in congress in the former, but not so in the latter class; Achison v. Huddleston, 12 How. (U. S.) 297, 13 L. Ed. 993. See COMMERCE.

Whatever these restrictions are, they operate on all states alike, and if any state laws violate them, the laws are void; and without any legislation of congress the supreme court has declared them so; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 513, 4 L. Ed. 629; cases supra; Cooley, Const. Lim. 729.

The United States have certain powers, the principal of which are enumerated in art. 1, § 8, running into seventeen specific powers. Others are granted to particular branches of the government: as, the treaty-making power to the president and senate. These have an equal effect in all the states, and so far as an authority is vested in the government of the Union or in any department of it, and so far as the states are prohibited from the exercise of certain powers, so far in our domestic affairs we are a unity.

The United States is a sovereign and independent nation vested with the entire control of international relations, and with all the powers of government necessary to maintain that control and make it effective; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905; and see Chae Chan Ping v. U. S., 130 U. S. 606, 9 Sup. Ct. 623, 32 L. Ed. 1068.

Within these granted powers the sovereignty of the United States is supreme. The constitution, and the laws made in pursuance of it, and all treaties, are the supreme law of the land. Art. 6. And they not only govern in their words, but in their meaning. If the sense is ambiguous or doubtful, the United States, through their courts, in all cases where the rights of an individual are concerned, are the rightful expositors. For without the authority of explaining this meaning, the United States would not be sovereign.

In these matters, particularly in the limitation put on the sovereignty of the states, it has been sometimes said that the constitution executes itself. This expression may be allowed; but with as much propriety these may be said to be laws which the people have enacted themselves, and no laws of congress can either take from, add to, or confirm them. They are rights, privileges, or immunities which are granted by the people, and are beyond the power of congress or state legislatures; and they require no law to give them force or efficiency. The members of congress are exempted from arrest, except for treason, felony, and breach of the peace, in going to and returning from the seat of government. Art. 1, § 6. It is obvious that no law can affect this immunity. On these subjects all laws are purely nugatory, because if they go beyond or fall short of the provisions of the constitution, that may always be appealed to. An individual has just what that gives him,—no less and no more. It may be laid down as a universal rule, admitting of no exception, that when the constitution has established a disability or immunity, a privilege or a right, these are precisely as that instrument has fixed them, and can be neither augmented nor curtailed by any act or law either of congress or a state legislature.

It has been justly thought a matter of importance to determine from what source the United States derive their authority. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 402, 4 L. Ed. 579. When the constitution was framed, the people of this country were not an unformed mass of individuals. They were united into regular communities under state governments, and to these had confided the whole mass of sovereign power which they chose to intrust out of their own hands. The question here proposed is whether our bond of union is a compact entered into by the states, or the constitution is an organic law established by the people. To this question the preamble gives a decisive answer: We, the people, ordain and establish this constitution. The members of the convention which formed it were indeed appointed by the states. But the government of the states had only a delegated power, and, if they had an inclination, had no authority to transfer the allegiance of the people from one sovereign to another. The great men who formed the constitution were sensible of this want of power, and recommended it to the people themselves. They assembled in their own conventions and adopted it, acting in their original capacity as individuals, and not as representing states. The state governments are passed by in silence. They had no part in making it, and, though they have certain duties to perform, as, the appointment of senators [now by popular vote under the 17th amendment], are properly not parties to it. The people in their capacity as sovereign made and adopted it; and it binds the state governments without their consent. The United States as a whole, therefore, emanates from the people, and not from the states, and the constitution and laws of the states, whether made before or since the adoption of that of the United States, are subordinate to it and the laws made in pursuance of it. See Fisher, Evolution of Const.

It has very truly been said that out of the mass of sovereignty intrusted to the states was carved a part and deposited with the United States. But this was taken by the people, and not by the states as organized communities. The people are the fountain of sovereignty. The whole was originally with them as their own. The state governments were but trustees acting under a derived authority, and had no power to delegate what was delegated to them. But the people, as the original fountain, might take away what they had lent and intrust it to whom they pleased. They had the whole title, and, as absolute proprietors, had the right of using or abusing, —jus utendi et abutendi.

A consequence of great importance flows from this fact. The laws of the United States act directly on individuals, and they are directly responsible and not mediately through the state governments. This is the most important improvement made by our constitution over all previous confederacies. As a corollary from this, if not more properly a part of it, the laws act only on states through individuals. They are supreme over persons and cases, but do not touch the state: they act through them; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 368, 4 L. Ed. 97. If a state passes an ex post facto law, or passes a law impairing the obligation of contracts, or makes anything but gold or silver a tender in payment of debts, congress passes no law which touches the state: it is sufficient that these laws are void, and when a case is brought before the court, it, without any law of congress, will declare them void. They give no person an immunity, nor deprive any of a right. Again: should a state pass a law declaring war against a foreign nation, grant letters of marque and reprisal, arm troops or keep ships of war in time of peace, individuals acting under such laws would be responsible to the United States. They might be treated and punished as traitors or pirates. But congress would and could pass no law against the state; and for this simple reason, because the state is sovereign. And it is a maxim consecrated in public law as well as common sense and the necessity of the case, that a sovereign is answerable for his acts only to his God and to his own conscience.

The constitution and laws made in pursuance of it,—that is, laws within their granted powers,—and all treaties, are the supreme law of the land, art. 6; and the judicial power, art. 3, § 1, gives to the supreme court the right of interpreting them. But this court is but another name for the United States, and this power necessarily results from their sovereignty; for the United States would not be truly sovereign unless their interpretation as well as the letter of the law governed. But this power of the court is confined to cases brought before them, and does not embrace principles independent of these cases. They have no power analogous to that of the Roman prætor of declaring the meaning of the constitution by edicts. Any opinion, however strongly expressed, has no authority beyond the reasoning by which it is supported, and binds no one. But the point embraced in the case is as much a part of the law as though embraced in the letter of the law or constitution, and it binds public functionaries, whether of the states or United States, as well as private persons; and this of necessity, as there is no authority above a sovereign to which an appeal can be made.

Another question of great practical importance arose at an early period of our government. The natural tendency of all concentrated power is to augment itself. Limitations of authority are not to be expected from those to whom power is intrusted; and such is the infirmity of human nature that those who are most jealous when out of power and seeking office are quite as ready practically to usurp it as any other. A general abrogation commonly precedes a real usurpation, to lull suspicion if for no other purpose. When the constitution was new, and before it had been fully considered, this diversity of opinion was not unnatural, and was the subject of earnest argument, but is, we think, now settled, and rightly, both on technical reasoning and on that of expediency. The question is between incidental and constructive or implied powers. The government of the United States is one of delegated power. No general words are used from which a general power can be inferred. Incidental and implied are sometimes used as synonymous; but in accurate reasoning there is a plain distinction between them, and the latter, in common use, comes nearer to constructive than to incidental.

The interpretation of powers is familiar to courts of justice, as a great part of landed property in England and much in this country is held under powers. A more frequent example is that of common agency, as every agent is created by a power. Courts whose professed object is to carry into effect the intentions of parties have, on this subject, established general rules. Among these no one is more immovably fixed than this, that the interpretation is strict and not liberal. 2 Kent 617; 4 id. 330. But this strictness does not exclude incidental powers. These are included in a general and express power, both in the common and technical use of language. To take a familiar example. A merchant of Philadelphia or Boston has a cargo of tea arrive at New York, and by letter authorizes his correspondent to sell it. This is the whole extent of the power. But it necessarily and properly includes that of advertising, of removing and exhibiting the goods, etc. But it would not authorize the sale of sugar, a horse, and much less a store or real estate. These powers are not incidental to the general power, nor included in it. Or we may take an example directly from the constitution itself. The United States has power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States." This includes the power to create and appoint all inferior officers and to do all subordinate acts necessary and proper to execute the general power: as, to appoint assessors, collectors, keepers, and disbursers of the public treasures. Without the subordinate powers the general power could not be executed. And when there is more than one mode by which this general power may be executed, it includes all. The agent is not confined to any one, unless a particular mode is pointed out. Mc-Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 410, 4 L. Ed. 579. All that the constitution requires is that it should be necessary and proper. One consequence of this doctrine is that there must be a power expressly granted as a stock to bear this incidental power, or otherwise it would be ingrafted on nothing.

A constructive power is one that is inferred, not from an express power, but from the general objects to be obtained from the grant, and, perhaps, in private, powers sometimes from the general language in which they are granted. The broad distinction between them may be illustrated by two cases that came before the United States Court. The first is McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 317, 4 L. Ed. 579. The question in that case was whether the act incorporating the Bank of the United States was constitutional, or whether it lay beyond the limits of the delegated powers and was, therefore, merely void as usurped or an excess of power. The authority to create a corporation is nowhere expressly given, and if it exists it must be sought as incidental to some power that is specifically granted. The court decided that it was incidental to that of laying taxes as a keeper and disburser of the public treasure. This power could be executed only by the appointment of agents; and the United States might as well create an agent for receiving, keeping, and disbursing the public money as appoint a natural person or an artificial one already created. In the case of Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 859, 6 L. Ed. 204, the general question was presented again, and reargued, and the court reaffirmed their former decision, but, more distinctly than before, adding an important qualification. They might not only create an artificial person, but clothe it with such powers and qualities as would enable it with reasonable convenience to perform its specific duties. The taxes are collected at one end of the country and paid out at another, and the bank instead of removing the specie might pay it where collected, and repay themselves by purchasing a bill of exchange in another place, and this could be conveniently and economically done only by a power of dealing in exchange generally, which when reduced to its last analysis is merely buying specie at one place and paying for it at another. It is in this way, and this only, that the bank got its general power of dealing in exchange,—that it is essential and proper to enable it to perform its principal duty, that of transferring the funds of the United States. Thus, the authority to create a bank is incidental to that of receiving, keeping, and paying out the taxes, and is comprehended under the specific power. The argument is principally derived from Hamilton's report on a bank, which proved satisfactory to Washington, as that of Chief-Justice Marshall has to the public at large.

This is very different from a constructive power which is inferred not as included in any special grant, but from the general tenor of the power and the general objects to be obtained. The objects of the constitution are stated in the preamble, and they are to promote the common weal. But this is followed by the grant of specific powers. And it is the dictate of common sense as well as technical reasoning that this object is to be obtained by the due exercise of these powers. Where these fall short, none are granted; and if they are inadequate, the same consequence follows. No one would infer from a power to sell a ship one to sell a store, though the interest of the principal would thereby be promoted. The general power to regulate commerce is useful, and it is given, and it may be carried to its whole extent by having incidental powers ingrafted upon it. A general power to regulate the descent and distribution of intestate estates and the execution and proof of wills would be on many accounts useful, but it is not granted. The utility of a power is never a question. It must be expressly granted, or incidental to an express power,—that is necessary and proper to carry into execution one expressly granted,—or it does not exist.

The other illustrative case is that of Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 10 L. Ed. 1060. It will be found on a careful examination that in this a constructive power only is claimed. The only point involved in the case was the constitutionality of the statute of Pennsylvania under which Prigg was indicted as a kidnapper. The court decided this to be unconstitutional; and here its judicial functions properly terminated. But to arrive at this conclusion it was deemed necessary to determine that the general power of arresting and returning fugitives from labor and service was intrusted to the United States. It was not pretended that this power was expressly given, nor that it was incidental to any that was expressly given,—that is, conducive or proper to the execution of such a power. The court say that "In the exposition of this part of the constitution we shall limit ourselves to the considerations which appropriately and exclusively belong to it, without laying down any rules of interpretation of a more general nature." Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 610, 10 L. Ed. 1060. They do not, as in McCulloch's case, quote the express authority to which this is incidental; but a general argument is offered to prove that this power is most safely lodged with the United States, and that, therefore, it has been placed there exclusively. If the canon of criticism which we have endeavored to establish, and which is generally admitted, is correct, the existence of such a power cannot be inferred from its utility.

It will be seen, also, that this case stands in strong contrast with that of Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 4 L. Ed. 97, in which the opinion was delivered by the same judge. This was on the validity of the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act, authorizing an appeal from a final judgment of a state court to the supreme court of the United States; and perhaps in no case has the extent of the powers granted by the constitution been more fully and profoundly examined. In this case the court say that "the government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted by the constitution; and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given, or given by necessary implication," that is to say, as the reasoning of the court in the whole opinion proves, such as are included in the express powers, and are necessary and proper to carry them into execution. Such was the uniform language of the court whenever the question was presented previously to the rebellion. The doctrine as now held, however, is somewhat broader, finding its exposition in the decision of the supreme court in the Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287. It is there said that it is not indispensable to the existence of any power claimed for the federal government that it can be found specified in the words of the constitution, or clearly and directly traceable to some one of the specified powers. Its existence may be deduced fairly from more than one of the substantial powers expressly defined, or from them all combined. It is allowable to group together any number of them and infer from them all that the power claimed has been conferred. Before any act of congress can be held to be unconstitutional, the court must be convinced that the means adopted were not appropriate or conducive to the execution of any or all of the powers of congress, or of the government,—not appropriate in any degree; and of the degree, the court is not to judge, but congress.

We have seen that the constitution and the laws and treaties made in pursuance of it are the supreme law of the land, and that of the true meaning of these the supreme court is the rightful expositor. This necessarily results from their sovereignty. But the United States government is one of delegated powers; and nothing is better established, both by technical reasoning and common sense, than this,—that a delegate can exercise only that power which is delegated to him. All acts beyond are simply void, and create no obligation. It is a maxim also of constitutional law that the powers of sovereignty not delegated to the United States are reserved to the states. But in so complex an affair as that of government, controversies will arise as to what is given and what is reserved,—doubts as to the dividing line. When this is the case, who is to decide? This is a difficulty which the convention did not undertake to settle.

To avoid all controversy as far as possible, the plainest words in granting powers to the United States were used which the language affords. Still further to preclude doubts, the convention added, at the close of the seventeen powers expressly given, this clause: "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof." Art. 1, § 8. This clause contains no grant of power. But in the Articles of Confederation, which was a compact between the states as independent sovereignties, the word EXPRESSLY was used; and a doubt troubled congress how far incidental powers were included. Articles of Confederation, art. 2. This clause was introduced to remove that doubt. It covered incidental, but not constructive, powers.

Strange as it may appear, both those who wished larger powers granted to the United States, and, in the language of that day, thought that things must be worse before they could be better, and those who honestly feared that too much power was granted, fixed their eyes on this clause; and perhaps no part of the constitution gave greater warmth to the controversy than this. To disarm the designing and counteract the fears of the timid, the tenth amendment was offered by the friends of the constitution. But so jealous were parties of each other that it was offered in the convention of Massachusetts by Governor Hancock, who favored and had the confidence of the opposition, though it was in the handwriting of Mr. Parsons, afterwards chief justice. Life of Chief Justice Parsons. That amendment is in these words: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or the people." Were the words of the original constitution and the amendment both stricken out, it would leave the true construction unaltered. Story, Const. § 1232. Both are equally nugatory in fact; but they have an important popular use. The amendment formally admits that certain rights are reserved to states, and these rights must be sovereign.

In Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 89, 96, 97, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956, it was said (Brewer, J., delivering the opinion): "The proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the nation as a whole which belong to, although not expressed in, the grant of powers, is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a government of enumerated powers. That this is such a government clearly appears from the constitution, independently of the amendment, for otherwise there would be an instrument granting certain specified things made operative to grant other and distinct things. This natural construction of the original body of the constitution is made absolutely certain by the tenth amendment. This amendment, which was seemingly adopted with prescience of just such contention as the present, disclosed the wide-spread fear that the national government might, under the pressure of a supposed general welfare, attempt to exercise powers which had not been granted. With equal determination the framers intended that no such assumption should ever find justification in the organic act, and that if in the future further powers seemed necessary they should be granted by the people in the manner they had provided for amending that act." It reads: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." The argument of counsel ignores the principal factor in this article to wit, "the people." Its principal purpose was not the distribution of power between the United States and the states, but a reservation to the people of all powers not granted. The preamble of the constitution declares who framed it, "we, the people of the United States," not the people of one state, but the people of all the states, and article X reserves to the people of all the states the powers not delegated to the United States. The powers affecting the internal affairs of the states not granted to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, and all powers of a national character which are not delegated to the national government by the constitution are reserved to the people of the United States."

We have seen that, within their limited powers, the United States are the natural expositors of the constitution and laws: that when a case affecting individual rights arises, the supreme court stands for the United States, and that they have the sole right to explain and enforce the laws and constitution. But their power is confined to the facts before them, and they have no power to explain them in the form of an edict to effect other rights and cases. Beyond these powers the states are sovereign, and their acts are equally unexaminable. Of the separating line between the powers granted and the powers withheld, the constitution provides no judge. Between sovereigns there can be no common judge, but an arbiter mutually agreed upon. If that power is given to one party, that may draw all power to itself, and it establishes a relation not of equal sovereignties, but of sovereign and subject. On this subject the constitution is silent. The great men who formed it did not undertake to solve a question that in its own nature could not be solved. Between equals it made neither superior, but trusted to the mutual forbearance of both parties. A larger confidence was placed in an enlightened public opinion as the final umpire; and not until the war of the rebellion was this conflict between the two sovereignties finally settled by the ultima ratio regum. The status of the states and their political rights under the constitution have been considered at large by the supreme court in the case of Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227. It is there held that authority to suppress rebellion is found in the constitutional power to suppress insurrection, and carry on war; authority to provide for the restoration of state governments under the constitution when suspended and overthrown is derived from the obligation of the United States to guarantee to every state in the Union a republican form of government. The unity of the states never was a purely artificial and arbitrary relation. It began among the colonies, and grew out of common origin, mutual sympathies, kindred principles, similar interests, and geographical relations. It was confirmed and strengthened by the necessities of war, and received definite form and character and sanction from the Articles of Confederation. By these the Union was solemnly declared to be perpetual; and when these articles were found to be inadequate to the exigencies of the country, the constitution was ordained "to form a more perfect union." But the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union by no means imply the loss of distinct and individual existence, or of the right of self-government by the states. On the contrary, it may, not unnecessarily, be said that the preservation of the states and the maintenance of their government are as much within the design and care of the constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the national government. The constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union composed of indestructible states. See SECESSION.

"There is no body of federal common law separate and distinct from the common law existing in the several states, in the sense that there is a body of statute law enacted by congress separate and distinct from the body of statute law enacted by the several states. But it is an entirely different thing to hold that there is no common law in force generally throughout the United States, and that the countless multitude of interstate commercial transactions are subject to no rules and burdened by no restrictions other than those expressed in the statutes of congress. . . . Can it be that the great multitude of interstate commercial transactions are freed from the burdens created by the common law as so defined, and are subject to no rule except that to be found in the statutes of congress? We are clearly of opinion that this cannot be so, and that the principles of the common law are operative upon all interstate commercial transactions except so far as they are modified by congressional enactment." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Call Pub. Co., 181 U. S. 92, 101, 102, 21 Sup. Ct. 561, 45 L. Ed. 765, quoted in Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 96, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

In Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 97, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956, it was said: "International law is no alien in this tribunal. In The Habana, 175 U. S. 677, 700, 20 Sup. Ct. 290, 44 L. Ed. 320, Mr. Justice Gray declared: 'International law is part of our law and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice of appropriate jurisdiction, as often as questions of right depending upon it are duly presented for their determination.' And in delivering the opinion on the demurrer in this case Chief Justice Fuller said (Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 146, 23 Sup. Ct. 552, 46 L. Ed. 833): "Sitting, as it were, as an international, as well as a domestic tribunal, we apply federal law, state law, and international law, as the exigencies of the particular case may demand."

In a qualified sense and to a limited extent the separate states are sovereign and independent, and the relations between them partake something of the nature of international law; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

Where wrongs affect the public at large and are in respect of matters which by the constitution are entrusted to the care of the nation, and concerning which the nation owes a duty to all its citizens of securing to them their common rights, the nation may take measures to discharge those constitutional duties, though it has no pecuniary interest in the controversy; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092, cited in Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 251, 44 L. Ed. 347.

The government of the United States as a nation by its very nature benefits the citizen and his property wherever found, and no imaginary barrier shuts that government off from exercising the power which inherently belongs to it by reason of its sovereignty; U. S. v. Bennett, 232 U. S. 299, 34 Sup. Ct. 433 (here a foreign-built yacht which was never, during the tax year, used within United States territory).

Territories are instrumentalities created by congress for the government of the people within their respective borders, with authority to subdelegate the governmental power to the municipal corporations therein, and the latter are therefore instrumentalities of the federal government; Farmers' Bank v. Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516, 34 Sup. Ct. 354, 58 L. Ed. —.

The United States is not, under the New York statutes, a corporation in the sense that it will be exempted from an inheritance tax on personal property bequeathed to it by will; U. S. v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 16 Sup. Ct. 1073, 41 L. Ed. 287.

If the nation comes down from its position of sovereignty and enters the domain of commerce, it submits itself to the same laws that govern individuals therein. It assumes the position of an ordinary citizen and it cannot recede from the fulfilment of its obligations; U. S. v. Commercial Co., 74 Fed. 145, following Cooke v. U. S., 91 U. S. 398, 23 L. Ed. 237.

UNITY. An agreement or coincidence of certain qualities in the title of a joint-estate or an estate in common.

In a joint-estate there must exist four unities: that of interest, that of title, and, therefore, their estates must be created by one and the same act; that of time, for their estates must be vested at one and the same period; and, lastly, the unity of possession: hence joint-tenants are seised per my et per tout, or by the half or moiety and by all: that is, each of them has an entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole; 2 Bla. Com. 170. Coparceners must have the unities of interest, title, and possession. In tenancies in common, the unity of possession is alone required; 2 Bla. Com. 192. See ESTATE IN COMMON; ESTATE IN COPARCENARY; ESTATE OF JOINT-TENANCY; TENANT.

UNITY OF POSSESSION. This term is used to designate the possession by one person of several estates or rights. For example, a right to an estate to which an easement is attached, or the dominant estate, and to an estate which an easement incumbers, or the servient estate, in such case the easement is extinguished; see Cro. Jac. 121. But a distinction has been made between a thing that has its being by prescription, and one that has its being ex jure naturæ: in the former case unity of possession will extinguish the easement; in the latter, for example, the case of a watercourse, the unity will not extinguish it; Pothier, Contr. 166.

UNIVERSAL AGENT. One appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do. Such an agency may potentially exist; but it is difficult to conceive of its practical existence, since it puts the agent completely in the place of the principal; Story, Ag. § 21.

UNIVERSAL LEGACY. In Civil Law. A testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease. La. Civ. Code, art. 1606.

UNIVERSAL PARTNERSHIP. The name of a species of partnership by which all the partners agree to put in common all their property, universorum bonorum, not only what they then have, but also what they shall acquire. Pothier, Du Contr. de Société, n. 29. See PARTNERSHIP.

UNIVERSAL SUCCESSION. "A succession to a universitas juris. It occurs when one man is vested with the legal clothing of another, becoming at the same moment subject to all his liabilities and entitled to all his rights." Maine, Anc. L. 179.

UNIVERSITAS. In Civil Law. A universitas or corporate body existed when a number of persons were so united that the law takes no notice of their separate existence, but recognizes them only under a common name. Hunter, Rom. L. 314.

UNIVERSITAS JURIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A quantity of things of various kinds, corporeal and incorporeal, taken together as a whole, e. g. an estate. It is used in contradistinction to universitas facti, which is a whole made up of corporeal units. Mackeldy, Civ. Law § 149.

A collection of rights and duties united by the single circumstance of their having belonged at one time to some one person. It is, as it were, the legal clothing of some given individual. Maine, Anc. L. 178.

UNIVERSITAS RERUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Several things not mechanically united, but which, taken together, in some legal respects are regarded as one whole. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 149.

UNIVERSITY. The name given to certain societies or corporations which are seminaries of learning where youth are sent to finish their education. Among the civilians, by this term is understood a corporation. See CHANCELLOR'S COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES; COLLEGE; STUDENTS.

UNJUST. That which is done against the perfect rights of another; that which is against the established law; that which is opposed to a law which is the test of right and wrong. Hein. Lec. El. § 1080.

UNJUST ENRICHMENT. A phrase much used by Prof. James Barr Ames to designate a principle which lies at the foundation of the great bulk of quasi-contracts—that one shall not unjustly enrich himself at the expense of another. An instance is to be found in the early law in the action of account. One who received money from another to be applied in a particular way was bound to give account of his stewardship. If he fulfilled his commission, that was a valid discharge. If he failed to do so, the plaintiff would have a judgment for its recovery. See Ames, Lectures on Leg. Hist. 162.

UNKNOWN. When goods have been stolen from some person unknown, they may be so described in the indictment; but if the owner be really known, an indictment alleging the property to belong to some person unknown is improper. 8 C. & P. 773; Com. v. Manley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 174.

In an indictment, where the name of the defendant is unknown, and he refuses to disclose it, he may be described as a person whose name is to the jurors unknown, but who is personally brought before them by the keeper of the prison. State v. Angel, 29 N. C. 27; but an indictment against him as a person to the jurors unknown, without something to ascertain whom the grand jury meant to designate, will be insufficient; R. & R. 489. The practice is to indict the defendant by a specific name, as, John No-name, and if he pleads in abatement, to send in a new bill, inserting the real name, which he then discloses, by which he is bound. This course is in some states prescribed by statute; Geiger v. State, 5 Ia. 484.

UNLAGE (Sax.). An unjust law. Cowell.

UNLAWFUL. That which is contrary to law.

See CONDITION; VOID.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY. A disturbance of the public peace by three or more persons who meet together with an intent mutually to assist each other in the execution of some unlawful enterprise of a private nature, with force and violence.

An assembly of three or more persons:—
1. With intent to commit a crime by open force. 2. With intent to carry out a common purpose, lawful or unlawful, in such a manner as to give firm and courageous persons in the neighborhood of such assembly reasonable grounds to apprehend a breach of the peace in consequence of it. Steph. Dig. Cr. Law, art. 75. If they move forward towards its execution, it is then a rout; and if they actually execute their design, it amounts to a riot; 4 Bla. Com. 140.

In England public meetings held for political purposes are not unlawful as such, but may, by their conduct when assembled, become unlawful, and will be so from the outset if held for purposes of sedition. In such cases all those who use seditious words or openly applaud those who use them will be participators in the unlawful assembly, but not those who attend a meeting which they suppose to be lawful and who take no part in the unlawful conduct. Magistrates and the police may use whatever force is necessary to disperse an unlawful assembly. The degree of force to be exercised will depend on the circumstances of each case; 9 C. & P. 431.

See RIOT; ROUT; PUBLIC MEETING; SEDITION.

UNLAWFUL IMPRISONMENT. Unlawful deprival of an alien's right to enter the country constitutes unlawful imprisonment, to obtain freedom from which habeas corpus lies; U. S. v. Williams, 193 Fed. 228. See TROOPS, FOREIGN; HABEAS CORPUS.

UNLAWFULLY. Illegally; wrongfully. Dickinson v. New York, 92 N. Y. 584. See State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445. This word is frequently used in indictments in the description of the offence: it is necessary when the crime did not exist at common law, and when a statute, in describing an offence which it creates, uses the word; 1 Mood. C. C. 339; but is unnecessary whenever the crime existed at common law and is manifestly illegal; 1 Chit. Cr. L. *241.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES. Such damages as are unascertained. In general, such damages cannot be set off. No interest will be allowed on unliquidated damages. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

UNMARRIED. Its primary meaning is "never having been married"; but it is a word of flexible meaning and it may be construed as not having a husband or wife at the time in question. 9 H. L. Cas. 601. A divorced woman has been held an unmarried woman; In re Giles, 158 Fed. 596, 85 C. C. A. 418.

UNQUES (L. Fr.). Still; yet. A word frequently used in pleas; as, Ne unques executor, Ne unques guardian, Ne unques accouple, and the like.

UNSEATED LAND. A phrase used in Pennsylvania to designate uncultivated land subject to taxation. A tract of land ceases to be unseated as soon as it is actually occupied with a view to permanent residence; Wallace v. Scott, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 248.

UNSEAWORTHY SHIP. See SEAWORTHINESS.

UNSHIPMENT. Throwing goods overboard protected in such manner that they may be recovered, may constitute unshipment. U. S. v. Hutchinson, 1 Hask. 146, Fed. Cas. No. 15431.

UNSOLEMN WAR. That war which is not carried on by the highest power in the states between which it exists, and which lacks the formality of a declaration. Grotius, de Jure Bcl. ac Pac. l. 1, c. 3, § 4.

UNSOLEMN WILL. In the Civil Law. One in which an executor is not appointed. Swinb. Wills 29.

UN SOUND MIND, UNSOUND MEMORY. See INSANITY.

UN SOUNDNESS. See SOUNDNESS.

UNTIL. When a charter continues the incorporation of a company until a day named, until is exclusive in its meaning, unless the context show that the contrary is intended; People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 502; Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94. That it is inclusive of the date see Houghwout v. Boisauvin, 18 N. J. Eq. 315; Rogers v. R. Co., 70 Ga. 717.

UNTRUE. Prima facie inaccurate, but not necessarily wilfully false. 3 B. & S. 929.

UNVALUED POLICY. One in which the value of the interest at risk is not fixed in the policy but is estimated by a certain standard, and, in case of loss, is made out by proof. Peninsular & O. S. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 185 Fed. 172.

UNWHOLESOME FOOD. Food not fit to be eaten; food which if eaten would be injurious. See ADULTERATION; HEALTH; FOOD AND DRUG LAWS.

UNWRITTEN LAW. See LEX NON SCRIPTA.

A popular expression to designate a supposed rule of law that a man who takes the life of his wife's paramour or daughter's seducer is not guilty of a criminal offence. A trial judge is said to have expressed to a jury his approval of a verdict based upon such a theory; see 43 Canada L. J. 764; it is said to have received recognition in California; see 19 Green Bag 721, an article from the London L. J.; see also 12 Law Notes 224. The rule was much urged upon a jury in the common pleas of Philadelphia: Biddle, J., said to counsel: "In this court the 'unwritten law' is not worth the paper it isn't written on."

In Knights of Pythias v. Crenshaw, 129 Ga. 195, 58 S. E. 628, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258,

121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 12 Ann. Cas. 307, on a policy of life insurance which provided that "the death of the insured at the hands of justice, either punitive or preventive," or "in violation of or attempt to violate any criminal law," should avoid the policy (in the latter instance pro tanto), it was held that the killing of the insured by an injured husband was not within the policy.

UPLIFTED HAND. When a man accused of a crime is arraigned, he is required to raise his hand, probably in order to identify the person who pleads. Perhaps for the same reason when a witness adopts a particular mode of taking an oath, as when he does not swear upon the Gospel, but by Almighty God, he is to hold up his hand.

UPPER BENCH. The king's bench was so called during Cromwell's protectorate, when Rolle was chief-justice. 3 Bla. Com. 202.

UPSET PRICE. The price at which any subject, as lands or goods, is exposed to sale by auction, below which it is not to be sold. In a final decree in foreclosure, the decree should name an upset price large enough to cover costs and all allowances made by the court, receiver's certificates and interest, liens prior to the bonds, amounts diverted from the earnings, and all undetermined claims which will be settled before the confirmation and sale; Blair v. R. Co., 25 Fed. 232.

URBAN SERVITUDES. All servitudes are established either for the use of houses or for the use of lands. Those of the first kind are called urban servitudes, whether the buildings to which they are due be situated in the city or in the country. Those of the second kind are called rural servitudes.

The principal kinds of urban servitudes are the following: the right of support; that of drip; that of drain, or of preventing the drain; that of view or lights, or of preventing the view or lights from being obstructed; that of raising buildings or walls, or of preventing them from being raised; that of passage; and that of drawing water. See 3 Toullier 441.

URBS (Lat.). A walled city. Often used for civitas. Ainsworth, Dict. It is the same as oppidum, only larger. Urbs, or urbs aurea, meant Rome. Du Cange. In the case of Rome, urbs included the suburbs. Dig. 50. 16. 2. pr. It is derived from urbum, a part of the plough by which the walls of a city are first marked out. Ainsworth, Dict.

USAGE. Uniform practice.

Usage and custom are now used interchangeably, though custom seems to have been originally confined to local usages immemorially existing; Browne, Us. & Cust. 13.

A usage must be established; that is, it must be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law; but it may be of very recent origin; 4 B. & Ald. 210; McMas- ters v. R. Co., 69 Pa. 374, 8 Am. Rep. 264; Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 10 Am. Rep. 407; Power v. Bowdle, 3 N. Dak. 107, 54 N. W. 404, 21 L. R. A. 328, 44 Am. St. Rep. 511; and no usage is good which conflicts with an established principle of law; East B. L. Co. v. Dennis, 85 Ala. 565, 5 South. 317, 2 L. R. A. 836, 7 Am. St. Rep. 73; Pickering v. Weld, 159 Mass. 522, 34 N. E. 1081. Parties who contract on a subject-matter concerning which known usages prevail incorporate such usages by implication into their agreements, if nothing is said to the contrary; Hostetter v. Park, 137 U. S. 30, 11 Sup. Ct. 1, 34 L. Ed. 568.

The usages of trade afford ground upon which a proper construction may be given to contracts. By their aid the indeterminate intention of parties and the nature and extent of their contracts arising from mere implications or presumptions, and acts of an equivocal character may be ascertained; and the meaning of words and doubtful expressions may become known; McComber v. Parker, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 182; 2 C. & P. 525; Mechanics' Bank v. Bank, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 100; Nordaas v. Hubbard, 48 Fed. 921. Among commercial and business men in a locality, it need not be so ancient "that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," nor that it should contain all the other elements of a common-law custom, as defined in the books; Lane v. Bank, 3 Ind. App. 299, 29 N. E. 613. One seeking to avoid the effect of a notorious and uniform usage of trade must show that he was ignorant of it; Robertson v. S. S. Co., 139 N. Y. 416, 34 N. E. 1053.

General usage may be proved in proper cases to remove ambiguities and uncertainties in a contract, or to annex incidents, but it cannot destroy, contradict or modify what is otherwise manifest. It cannot make a contract where there is one, nor prevent the effect of settled rules of law; First N. Bk. v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 686, 25 L. Ed. 766, followed in Moore v. U. S., 196 U. S. 166, 25 Sup. Ct. 202, 49 L. Ed. 428; Adams v. Goddard, 48 Me. 212; Home Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 180 N. Y. 389, 73 N. E. 65, 105 Am. St. Rep. 772; evidence of an established custom among men in the same line of work is not admissible to justify negligence per se; Larson v. Ring, 43 Minn. 88, 44 N. W. 1078; evidence is admissible in a suit on a fire policy to show whether the parties intended standard or solar time, as fixing the expiration of the policy; Globe & Rutgers F. Ins. Co. v. David Moffat Co., 154 Fed. 13, 83 C. C. A. 91.

A local usage must be one known to both contracting parties; Chateaugay O. & I. Co. v. Blake, 144 U. S. 476, 12 Sup. Ct. 731, 36 L. Ed. 510. See East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Johnston, 75 Ala. 596, 51 Am. Rep. 489; Van Hoesen v. Cameron, 54 Mich. 609, 20 N. W. 609; Park v. Viernow, 16 Mo. App. 383.

Modern English cases incline to extend the functions of usages, but in America the authorities vary greatly; Lawson, Us. & Cust. 25; 7 E. & B. 266; Van Horn v. Gilbough, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 347.

See CUSTOM; Lawson; Browne, Us. & Cust.

USAGE OF TRADE. A course of dealing; a mode of conducting transactions of a particular kind; Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 535.

USANCE. In Commercial Law. The time which, by usage or custom, is allowed in certain countries for the payment of a bill of exchange. Pothier, Contr. du Change, n. 15.

The time of one, two, or three months after the date of the bill, according to the custom of the places between which the exchanges run.

Double or treble is double or treble the usual time, and half usance is half the time. Where it is necessary to divide a month upon a half usance (which is the case when the usance is for one month or three), the division, notwithstanding the difference in the length of the months, contains fifteen days. Byles, Bills *80, *205.

The practice is not now recognized.

USE. A confidence reposed in another, who was made tenant of the land, or terretenant, that he would dispose of the land according to the intention of the cestui que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. Plowd. 352; Gilb. Uses 1; Saund. Uses 2; 2 Bla. Com. 328.

A right in one person, called the cestui que use, to take the profits of land of which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same and of making estates thereof according to the direction of the cestui que use.

Uses have been said to have been derived from the fidei commissum of the Roman law; but see TRUST. It was the duty of a Roman magistrate, the prætor fidei commissarius, whom Bacon terms the particular chancellor for uses, to enforce the observance of this confidence. Inst. 2. 23. 2. They were introduced into England by the ecclesiastics in the reign of Edward III., before 1377, for the purpose of avoiding the statutes of mortmain; and the clerical chancellors of those times held them to be fidei commissum, and binding in conscience. To obviate many inconveniences and difficulties which had arisen out of the doctrine and introduction of uses, the Statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10, commonly called the Statute of Uses, or, in conveyances and pleadings, the statute for transferring uses into possession, was passed. It enacts that "when any person shall be seised of lands, etc., to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or body politic, the person or corporation entitled to the use in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, or years, or otherwise, shall from thenceforth stand and be seised or possessed of the land, etc., of and in the like estate as they have in the use, trust, or confidence; and that the estates of the persons so seised to the uses shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the use, in such quality, manner, form, and condition as they had before in the use." The statute thus executes the use,—that is, it conveys the possession to the use, and transfers the use to the possession, and, in this manner, making the cestui que use complete owner of the lands and tenements, as well at law as in equity; 2 Bla. Com. 333.

A modern use is an estate of right which is acquired through the operation of the statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10; and which, when it may take effect according to the rules of the common law, is called the legal estate, and when it may not be denominated a use, with a term descriptive of its modification: Cornish, Uses 35.

The common-law judges decided, in the construction of this statute, that a use could not be raised upon a use; Dy. 155 (A); and that on a feoffment to A and his heirs to the use of B and his heirs in trust for C and his heirs, the statute executed only the first use, and that the second was a mere nullity. The judges also held that as the statute mentioned only such persons as were seised to the use of others, it did not extend to a term of years, or other chattel interests, of which a term is not seised but only possessed; 2 Bla. Com. 336. The rigid literal construction of the statute by the courts of law again opened the doors of the chancery courts; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 448.

Uses and trusts are often spoken of together by the older and some modern writers, the distinction being those trusts which were of a permanent nature and required no active duty of the trustee being called uses; those in which the trustee had an active duty to perform, as, the payment of debts, raising portions, and the like, being called special or active trusts, or simply trusts; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 448.

For the creation of a use, a consideration either valuable, as, money, or good, as relationship in certain degrees, was necessary; 3 Swanst. 591; 7 Co. 40; Shephard v. Little, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 210. See RESULTING USE. The property must have been in esse, and such that seisin could be given; Cro. Eliz. 401. Uses were alienable, although in many respects resembling choses in action, which were not assignable at common law; 2 Bla. Com. 331; when once raised, it might be granted or devised in fee, in tail, for life, or for years; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 455.

The effect of the statutes of uses was much restricted by the construction adopted by the courts: it practically resulted, it has been said, in the addition of these words, to the use, to every conveyance; Will. R. P. 133. The intention of the statute was to destroy the estate of the feoffee to use, and to transfer it by the very act which created it to the cestui que use, as if the seisin or estate of the feoffee, together with the use, had, uno flatu, passed from the feoffor to the cestui que use. A very full and clear account of the history and present condition of the law of uses is given in 2 Wash. R. P. 91, 156. See, as to a use upon a use, Tud. L. Cas. R. Pr. 335. Consult Spence, Eq. Jur.; Bisph. Eq.

The statute executed the use and vested the title in the cestui que use when the feoffee to use had no active duty to perform; if he had he was a feoffee to trusts and not to uses; and this might occur even if the word "use" were employed. The employment of the word "use" is not essential to bring the limitation within the statute; it is a question of the intent of the parties; Jenks, Mod. Land L. 127; [1897] A. C. 658.

It was said in Symson v. Turner, 1 Eq. Cas. Ab. 383, that a use or trust can be created which will not be executed by the statute;

1. By limiting it upon a term of years; 2. By limiting it to A to the use of or in trust for B to the use of or in trust for C; 3. By limiting it to trustees with active duties.

A corporation cannot be seised to a use; see Jenks, Mod. Land L. 127. They are bound by equitable interests, at least when those interests are limited in favor of charities; id., citing 10 Rep. 23.

It is said that the word used is not derived from the Latin usus but comes from the Latin opus; through an Anglo-French form oepe. Pollock, Contracts 5; 3 L. Quart. Rev. 115.

See CHARITABLE USES; TRUSTS; The Origin of Uses, by James Barr Ames, Lect. on Leg. Hist. 233.

In its untechnical sense, the word use has been variously constructed; Heaston v. Randolph Co., 20 Ind. 398; Cannell v. Ins. Co., 59 Me. 582; Stockbridge I. Co. v. Iron Co., 107 Mass. 324; thus, "to use a port" means to enter it, so as to derive advantage from its protection; Snow v. Ins. Co., 48 N. Y. 624, 8 Am. Rep. 578. The "use of liquors to excess" in a life insurance application means habitual, and not occasional, use to excess; Provident S. L. A. Soc. v. Bank, 126 Fed. 360, 61 C. C. A. 310.

In Civil Law. A right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary to daily sustenance. It differs from usufruct, which is a right not only to use, but to enjoy. 1 Bro. Civ. Law 184.

USE AND OCCUPATION. When a contract has been made, either by express or implied agreement, for the use of a house or other real estate, where there was no amount of rent fixed and ascertained, the landlord can recover a reasonable rent in an action of assumpsit for use and occupation; Gunn v. Scovil, 4 Day (Conn.) 228, 4 Am. Dec. 208; Abeel v. Radcliff, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 297, 7 Am. Dec. 377; Fitchburg Cotton Manufactory Corp. v. Melven, 15 Mass. 270; McGunagle v. Thornton, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 251. This is under the Stat. of Westm. 2. See 2 Harv. L. Rev. 377.

The action for use and occupation is founded not on a privity of estate, but on a privity of contract; Wood, L. & T. 1332; Henwood v. Cheeseman, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 500; therefore it will not lie where the possession is tortious; Ryan v. Marsh, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 156; Henwood v. Cheeseman, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 500; Hill v. U. S., 149 U. S. 593, 13 Sup. Ct. 1011, 37 L. Ed. 862; or where the party is in possession by the license of the owner; Reed v. Lammel, 40 Minn. 397, 42 N. W. 202. It will lie for the occupation of land in another state; Henwood v. Cheeseman, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 502.

USEFUL. That which may be put into beneficial practice. See PATENT.

USEFULNESS. Capabilities for use. The word pertains to the future as well as to the past. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Dyer Co., 87 Tenn. 712, 11 S. W. 943.

USER. The enjoyment of a thing.

USES, STATUTE OF. See TRUSTS; USE.

USHER. This word is said to be derived from the French huissier, and is the name of an inferior officer in some English courts of law. Archb. Pr. 25. The office of usher of the court of chancery was abolished in 1852.

USQUE AD MEDIUM FILUM VIÆ (Lat.). To the middle thread of the way. See AD MEDIUM FILUM.

USUAL TERMS. A phrase in the common-law practice, which meant pleading issuably, rejoining gratis, and taking short notice of trial. When a defendant obtained further time to plead, these were the terms usually imposed. Wharton.

USUCAPION, or USUCAPTION. In Civil Law. The manner of acquiring property in things by the lapse of time required by law.

It differs from prescription, which has the same sense, and means, in addition, the manner of acquiring and losing, by the effect of time regulated by law, all sorts of rights and actions. Merlin, Répert. Prescription. See PRESCRIPTION.

USUFRUCT. In Civil Law. The right of enjoying a thing the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advantage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. Heintzen v. Binninger, 79 Cal. 6, 21 Pac. 377.

Perfect usufruct is of things which the usufructuary can enjoy without altering their substance, though their substance may be diminished or deteriorated naturally by time or by the use to which they are applied; as, a house, a piece of land, animals, furniture, and other movable effects.

Imperfect or quasi usufruct is of things which would be useless to the usufructuary if he did not consume and expend them or change the substance of them; as, money, grain, liquors. In this case the alteration may take place; Pothier, Tr. du Douaire, n. 194.

USUFRUCTUARY. In Civil Law. One who has the right and enjoyment of a usufruct.

Domat points out the duties of the usufructuary, which are—to make an inventory of the things subject to the usufruct, in the presence of those having an interest in them; to give security for their restitution when the usufruct shall be at an end; to take good care of the things subject to the usufruct; to pay all taxes and claims which arise while the thing is in his possession as a ground rent; and to keep the thing in repair at his own expense.

USURA MARITIMA. See FÆNUS NAUTICUM.

USURIOUS CONTRACT. See USURY.

USURPATION. The unlawful assumption of the use of property which belongs to another; an interruption or the disturbing a man in his right and possession. Toml.

There are two kinds of usurpation: first, when a stranger, without right, presents to a church and his clerk is admitted; and, second, when a subject uses a franchise of the king without lawful authority. Co. Litt. 277 b.

In Governmental Law. The tyrannical assumption of the government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country.

USURPED POWER. In Insurance. An invasion from abroad, or an internal rebellion, where armies are drawn up against each other, when the laws are silent, and when the firing of towns becomes unavoidable. These words cannot mean the power of a common mob; 2 Marsh. Ins. 390. By an article of the printed proposals which are considered as making a part of the contract of insurance, it is provided that "no loss of damage by fire, happening by any invasion, foreign enemy, or any military or usurped power whatsoever, will be made good by this company."

It is in use in the standard policy; Richards, Ins. 368. The clause was considered in Ætna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. Ed. 395.

USURPER. One who assumes the right of government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country. Toul. Droit. Civ., n. 32.

One who intrudes himself into an office which is vacant, and ousts the incumbent without any color of title whatever; his acts are void in every respect; McCraw v. Williams, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 513; Hooper v. Goodwin, 48 Me. 80.

USURY. The excess over the legal rate charged to a borrower for the use of money.

Taking an illegal profit for the use of money. MacRackan v. Bank, 164 N. C. 24, 80 S. E. 184, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043.

Originally, the word was applied to all interest reserved for the use of money; and in the early ages taking such interest was not allowed. In the later Roman law, usury was sanctioned; and it is said that taking usury was not an offence at common law; Tyler, Usury 64; but see Ord. Usury 17.

Unless there is a law limiting the rate of interest that can be charged for money, there can be no usury; Newton v. Wilson, 31 Ark. 484; Reynolds v. Neal, 91 Ga. 609, 18 S. E. 530; Lamprey v. Mason, 148 Mass. 231, 19 N. E. 350. The enactment of a usury law cannot affect prior contracts; Swint v. Carr, 76 Ga. 322, 2 Am. St. Rep. 44; Richardson v. Campbell, 34 Neb. 181, 51 N. W. 753, 33 Am. St. Rep. 633. If a contract is usurious, no custom can legalize it; Harmon v. Lehman, Durr & Co., 85 Ala. 379, 5 South. 197, 2 L. R. A. 589. A note void for usury in its inception cannot be enforced by an innocent purchaser for value; Littauer v. Rodecker, 59 Fed. 857, 8 C. C. A. 320, 19 U. S. App. 455.

"The shifts and devices of usurers to evade the statutes against usury have taken every shape and form that the wit of man could devise, but none have been allowed to prevail. Courts have been astute in getting at the true intent of the parties and giving effect to the statute." Quackenbos v. Sayer, 62 N. Y. 346.

There must be a loan in contemplation of the parties; Nichols v. Fearson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 109, 8 L. Ed. 623; Schermerhorn v. Talmann, 14 N. Y. 93; and if there be a loan, however disguised, the contract will be usurious, if it be so in other respects. Where a loan was made of depreciated bank-notes, to be repaid in sound funds, to enable the borrower to pay a debt he owed, dollar for dollar, it was considered as not being usurious; Burton v. School Com'rs, 1 Meigs (Tenn.) 585. The bona fide sale of a note, bond, or other security at a greater discount than would amount to legal interest is not per se a loan, although the note may be indorsed by the seller and he remains responsible; Corcoran v. Powers, 6 Ohio St. 19; Newman v. Williams, 29 Miss. 212. But if a note, bond, or other security be made with a view to evade the laws of usury, and afterwards sold for a less amount than the interest, the transaction will be considered a loan; Munn v. Commission Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 44, 8 Am. Dec. 219; Turner v. Calvert, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 46; Corcoran v. Powers, 6 Ohio St. 19; and a sale of a man's own note indorsed by himself will be considered a loan. Usury cannot arise from the purchase from brokers of a note at a discount; Chase Nat. Bank v. Faurot, 72 Hun 373, 25 N. Y. Supp. 447. Nor is there usury in a transaction for the sale and repurchase of securities, where there is no loan; Struthers v. Drexel, 122 U. S. 487, 7 Sup. Ct. 1293, 30 L. Ed. 1216. It is a general rule that a contract which in its inception is unaffected by usury can never be invalidated by any subsequent usurious transaction; Nichols v. Fearson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 109, 8 L. Ed. 623; Williams v. Reynolds, 10 Md. 57. On the other hand, when the contract was originally usurious, and there is a substitution by a new contract, the latter will generally be considered usurious; Bridge v. Hubbard, 15 Mass. 96, 8 Am. Dec. 86; but a note or other contract for the payment of money is not usurious and void for providing for the payment of more than the statutory interest after maturity; Green v. Brown, 22 Misc. 279, 49 N. Y. Supp. 163.

There must be a contract for the return of the money at all events; for if the return of the principal with interest, or the principal only, depend upon a contingency, there can be no usury; Spain v. Brent, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 17 L. Ed. 619; but if the contingency extend only to interest, and the principal be beyond the reach of hazard, the lender will be guilty of usury if he receive interest beyond the amount allowed by law. Where the principal is put to hazard in insurances, annuities, and bottomry, the parties may charge and receive greater interest than is allowed by law in common cases, and the transaction will not be usurious; U. S. Bank v. Owens, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 537, 7 L. Ed. 508. See Tiffany v. Boatman's Institution, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 375, 21 L. Ed. 868.

To constitute usury, the borrower must not only be obliged to return the principal at all events, but more than lawful interest; this part of the agreement must be made with full consent and knowledge of the contracting parties; 3 B. & P. 154. The fact that the usurious interest is paid in notes of another party, instead of money, is immaterial; Pritchard v. Meekins, 98 N. C. 244, 3 S. E. 484; Savannah Sav. Bank v. Logan, 99 Ga. 291, 25 S. E. 692.

When the contract is made in a foreign country, the rate of interest allowed by the laws of that country may be charged, and it will not be usurious, although greater than the amount fixed by law in this; Story, Conf. of Laws § 292. Parties may contract for interest according to the place of the contract or the place of performance; Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 298, 17 L. Ed. 540; Houston v. Potts, 64 N. C. 33. Where there is no agreement made, the law of the place of the contract governs, in the absence of any intent to evade the usury laws; Merchants' Bank v. Griswold, 72 N. Y. 472, 28 Am. Rep. 159. A note made, dated, and payable in New York, without intent of maker that it should be elsewhere discounted, if negotiated in another state at a rate of interest lawful there, but excessive in New York, is usurious; Rorer, Int. St. Law 112; Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573, 33 Am. Rep. 671. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

To constitute usury both parties must be cognizant of the facts which make the transaction usurious; Powell v. Jones, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 521; but a mistake in law will not protect the parties; Maine Bank v. Butts, 9 Mass. 49; though a miscalculation will, it seems; Bank of Utica v. Smalley, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 770, 14 Am. Dec. 526. If a contract be usurious in itself it must be taken to have been so intended; Burwell v. Burgwyn, 100 N. C. 389, 6 S. E. 409. An agreement by a mortgagor to pay taxes on the mortgage debt is not necessarily usurious; Banks v. McClellan, 24 Md. 62, 87 Am. Dec. 594; nor is a clause in a bill of exchange, providing attorney fees for collection; First Nat. Bank v. Canatsey, 34 Ind. 149; and so of a mortgage, or of a note;

It has been held that the maker of a note may be estopped to set up the defence of usury; Hungerford B. & C. Co. v. Brigham, 47 Misc. 240, 95 N. Y. Supp. 867. It is said that the defence of usury is personal to the borrower; Thomas v. Security Co., 156 Ky. 260, 160 S. W. 1037.

The defence of usury must be supported by clear proof; Frank v. Morris, 57 Ill. 138, 11 Am. Rep. 4; Grant v. Merrill, 36 Wis. 390; White v. Benjamin, 138 N. Y. 623, 33 N. E. 1037; which may be extrinsic to the contract; Scott v. Lloyd, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 418, 9 L. Ed. 178; an express agreement for usury need not be proved; Train v. Collins, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 145. Where a state law makes usury a crime, the burden is strongly on one who would avoid a debt on that ground; Houghton v. Burden, 228 U. S. 161, 33 Sup. Ct. 491, 57 L. Ed. 780.

Usurious interest does not render a mortgage void; Holliday v. Banking Co., 92 Ga. 675, 19 S. E. 28; where a loan is originally usurious, the defence of usury applies to all renewals; and when action is brought on any renewal note, no matter how remote, all payments of interest on such usurious loan may be applied on the principal; Exeter N. Bk. v. Orchard, 39 Neb. 485, 58 N. W. 144; Lukens v. Hazlett, 37 Minn. 441, 35 N. W. 265; and a second note renewing a former one, but including an additional sum, is usurious; Webb v. Bishop, 101 N. C. 99, 7 S. E. 698.

National banks may charge interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state where the bank is located, and no more, except that where, by the laws of any state, a different rate is limited for banks of issue organized under state laws, they may charge such rate. When no rate is fixed by the laws of the state, the bank may charge a rate not exceeding seven per centum, and such interest may be taken in advance. And the purchase, discount, or sale of a bona fide bill of exchange, payable at another place than the place of such purchase, at not more than the current rate of exchange for sight drafts, in addition to the interest, shall not be considered as usurious; R. S. § 5197. The charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed when knowingly done shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest. In case the greater rate of interest has been paid, the person by whom it has been paid, or his legal representatives, may recover back, in an action in the nature of an action of debt, twice the amount of the interest thus paid, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious action occurred; R. S. § 5198. It is now conclusively settled that the penalty declared in R. S. § 5198 is superior to and exclusive of any state penalty; Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Gadsden, 191 U. S. 451, 24 Sup. Ct. 129, 48 L. Ed. 258; Brown v. Bank, 72 Pa. 209; Wiley v. Starbuck, 44 Ind. 298.

A national bank is not justified in charging a usurious rate of interest because the statutes of the state permit usurious interest to be taken only by certain specified banks; 11 Bank. Mag. 787. National banks are prohibited from making usurious contracts. When sued on such a contract, the debtor may plead the usury. There is no statute of limitations as to this defence; but it runs against the debtor, when suing, from the time of payment. If the bank deducts usurious interest in advance, the debtor may plead usury, but may not recover double the amount paid; there is no locus pœnitentiæ, except when the bank, having charged usury, refuses to accept it; McCarthy v. Bank, 223 U. S. 493, 32 Sup. Ct. 240, 56 L. Ed. 523.

See INTEREST; 9 L. R. A. 292.

UTAH. One of the states of the United States; it was admitted to the Union July 4, 1896, under the act of January 16, 1894. The constitution was adopted Nov. 5, 1895; it was amended in 1900 (initiative and referendum), and again in 1906 and 1908.

UTERINE (Lat. uterus). Born of the same mother.

UTFANGENETHEF, UTFANGTHEF. The right of a lord to punish a thief dwelling out of his liberty, and committing theft without the same, if taken within the jurisdiction of the manor. Cowell.

The right of the lord of a manor to hang a thief caught with the stolen goods, whether or not the capture was made on the manor. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 11.

See INFANGENETHEF.

UTI POSSIDETIS (Lat. as you possess). A phrase used to signify that the parties to a treaty are to retain possession of what they have acquired by force during the war. Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law § 545.

A treaty which terminates a war may adopt this principle or that of the status quo ante bellum (q. v.), or a combination of the two. In default of any treaty stipulation, the former doctrine prevails. See TREATY OF PEACE.

An interdict in the Roman law. See Hunter, Rom. L. 367.

UTLAGATUM. See OUTLAW.

UTTER. In Criminal Law. To offer; to publish.

To utter and publish a counterfeit note is to assert and declare, directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that the note offered is good. It is not necessary that it should be passed in order to complete the offence of uttering; Com. v. Searle, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 338, 4 Am. Dec. 446; Cl. Cr. L. 301.

It seems that reading out a document, although the party refuses to show it, is a sufficient uttering; Jebb, Cr. Cas. 282. The merely showing a false instrument with intent to gain a credit, when there was no intention or attempt made to pass it, it seems,

Dorsey v. Wolff, 142 Ill. 589, 32 N. E. 495, 18 L. R. A. 428, 34 Am. St. Rep. 99.

Where the statute declares that the penalty of usury shall be the forfeiture of all interest contracted to be paid, the lender may in an action on the contract recover the sum actually loaned or paid, but no interest; Carter v. Carusi, 112 U. S. 478, 5 Sup. Ct. 281, 28 L. Ed. 820; Mallin v. Wenham, 209 Ill. 252, 70 N. E. 564, 65 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 233; Fletcher v. Alpena Cir. Judge, 136 Mich. 511, 99 N. W. 748; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, 195 Mo. 564, 94 S. W. 516; Leipziger v. Van Saun, 64 N. J. Eq. 37, 53 Atl. 1; Erwin v. Morris, 137 N. C. 48, 49 S. E. 53.

In some states statutes have been enacted which adopt the equitable rule and permit the usurious lender to recover the principal sum actually loaned with legal interest thereon; Noble v. Walker, 32 Ala. 456; Phila. Loan Co. v. Towner, 13 Conn. 249; Harrell v. Blount, 112 Ga. 711, 38 S. E. 56; Tuxbury v. Abbott, 59 Me. 466; Van Auker v. Dunning, 81 Pa. 464; Crim v. Post, 41 W. Va. 397, 23 S. E. 613. It is generally provided, further, that in an action brought by the lender on the usurious contract, any usurious payments already made shall be credited on the sum otherwise recoverable; Rogers v. Buckingham, 33 Conn. 81; Haas v. Flint, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 67; Lombard v. Gregory, 81 Ia. 569, 47 N. W. 298; Cadiz Bank v. Slemmons, 34 Ohio, 142, 32 Am. Rep. 364; Jones v. Rider, 60 N. H. 452.

A bona fide sale by one person of a bond of another, at an exorbitant rate of discount, is not illegal; Donnington v. Meeker, 3 N. J. Eq. 362. A sale of a note or mortgage for less than its face, with a guarantee of payment in full, is not usurious; Goldsmith v. Brown, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 484; nor is a contract to pay a bushel and a half of corn within a year, for the loan of a bushel; Morrison v. McKinnon, 12 Fla. 552. An agreement to pay interest on accrued interest is not invalid; Quimby v. Cook, 10 Allen (Mass.) 32; Stewart v. Petree, 55 N. Y. 621, 14 Am. Rep. 352; but it has been held that compounding interest on a note is usurious; Cox v. Brookshire, 76 N. C. 314; but see Bowmau v. Neely, 46 Ill. App. 139.

Interest may be collected on coupons; Richardson v. Campbell, 34 Neb. 181, 51 N. W. 753, 33 Am. St. Rep. 633.

The ordinary commissions allowed by the usages of trade may be charged without tainting a contract with usury; but it must plainly appear that the commissions are charged for other services, and are not merely a device to evade the law; Hopkins v. Baker's Adm'r, 2 Pat. & H. (Va.) 110. A bonus paid to an agent in addition to legal interest renders the loan usurious, when it enures to the benefit of the principal under the agent's contract; McBroom v. Investment Co., 153 U. S. 318, 14 Sup. Ct. 852, 38 L. Ed. 729. Commission may be charged by a merchant for accepting a bill; Jones v. McLean, 18 Ark. 456; but a commission charged in addition to interest for advancing money is usurious; Haven v. Hudson, 12 La. Ann. 660. Where a banker discounts a bill payable in a distant place, he may charge the usual rate of exchange on that place; but if such charge be an excess of the usual rate, it will be considered a device to cover usurious interest; State Bank v. Rodgers, 3 Ind. 53. See Cockle v. Flack, 93 U. S. 344, 33 L. Ed. 949, where it was properly left as a question of fact for the jury to decide whether or not there was a device to cover usury.

Where a gratuity is given to influence the making of a loan, it will be considered usurious; Lockwood v. Mitchell, 7 Ohio St. 387, 70 Am. Dec. 78. The fact that an agent, authorized to lend money for lawful interest, exacts for his own benefit and without his principal's knowledge, more than the lawful rate, does not render the loan usurious; Call v. Palmer, 116 U. S. 98, 6 Sup. Ct. 301, 29 L. Ed. 559. The burden of proof is on the person pleading usury; Holland v. Chambers, 22 Ga. 193; Holt v. Kirby, 57 Ark. 251, 21 S. W. 432; and where the contract is valid on its face, affirmative proof must be made that the agreement was corruptly made to evade the law; Omaha Hotel v. Wade, 97 U. S. 13, 24 L. Ed. 917. Where parties exchange their notes for mutual accommodation, and both or either are sold at a higher than the legal rate, they are usurious; Blodgett v. Wadhams, Labor's Supp. (N. Y.) 65.

The common practice of reserving the interest on negotiable paper at the time of making the loan is very ancient, and is sanctioned by law; Sewell, Banking. An agreement to pay annually in advance is not usurious; Rose v. Munford, 36 Neb. 148, 54 N. W. 129; Maxwell v. Willett, 49 Ill. App. 564.

The offence of taking usury is not condoned by the absence of intent to violate the statute; Fiedler v. Darrin, 50 N. Y. 437; but see Fay v. Lovejoy, 20 Wis. 407.

The one who has contracted to pay usury may set up the defence; Studabaker v. Marquardt, 55 Ind. 341; Pritchett v. Mitchell, 17 Kan. 355, 22 Am. Rep. 287; and so may his privies; Merchants Exch. N. Bk. v. Warehouse Co., 49 N. Y. 636; Lehman, Durr & Co. v. Marshall, 47 Ala. 362; and his legal representatives; Moses v. Loan Ass'n, 100 Ala. 465, 14 South. 412; and his surety; Stockton v. Coleman, 39 Ind. 106 (but see Lamoille County Bank v. Bingham, 50 Vt. 105, 28 Am. Rep. 490; Freese v. Brownell, 35 N. J. L. 285); or a guarantor; Huntress v. Patten, 20 Me. 28; but one who buys an equity of redemption cannot set up the defence against the mortgage; Conover v. Hobart, 24 N. J. Eq. 120; nor can a second mortgagee set up usury as a defence to a prior mortgage; Pritchett v. Mitchell, 17 Kan. 355, 22 Am. Rep. 287 (but see Cole v. Bausemer, 26 Ind. 94; Carow v. Kelly, 59 Barb. [N. Y.] 239).

would not amount to an uttering; Russ. & R. 200. Using a forged instrument in some way, in order to get money or credit upon it, or by means of it, is sufficient to constitute an uttering; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 475.

The word uttering, used of notes, does not necessarily import that they are transferred as genuine; it includes any delivery of a note for value (as by a sale of the notes as spurious) with the intent that they should be passed upon the public as genuine; 1 Abb. U. S. 135.

The offence is complete when a forged instrument is offered; it need not be accepted;

2 Bish. Cr. L. § 605. Recording a forged deed is uttering it; Perkins v. People, 27 Mich. 386; so is bringing suit on a forged paper; Chahoon v. Com., 20 Gratt. (Va.) 733. The legal meaning of the word utter is in substance to offer; Bish. Cr. L. § 607.

UTTER BARRISTER. See BARRISTER.

UXOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. A woman lawfully married.

UXORICIDE. The killing of a wife by her husband; one who murders his wife. It is not a technical term of the law. Black, L. Dict.

V

VACANCY. A place which is empty. The term is principally applied to cases where the office is not filled. As applied to an office, it has no technical meaning; People v. Edwards, 93 Cal. 153, 28 Pac. 831; State v. Bemenderfer, 96 Ind. 374.

By the constitution of the United States, the president has the power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate. See TENURE OF OFFICE; OFFICER; RESIGNATION.

VACANT. Public lands are vacant and open to settlement, and therefore not subject to selection in lieu of relinquished forest reserve lands, only when they are unoccupied by others, are free from other claim of record, and are non-mineral in character; Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Oil Co., 112 Fed. 4, 50 C. C. A. 79, 61 L. R. A. 230. Land was held not vacant and open to settlement and subject to selection where, at the time of the application, it was in the actual occupancy of others engaged in exploring it for oil; id.

See OFFICER.

VACANT POSSESSION. A term applied to an estate which has been abandoned by the tenant: the abandonment must be complete in order to make the possession vacant, and, therefore, if the tenant have goods on the premises it will not be so considered. 2 Chitty, Bail. 177; 2 Stra. 1064.

A dwelling-house furnished throughout, from which the owner has removed for a season, intending to return and resume possession, was held not vacant, within the meaning of a policy of insurance; Herrman v. Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 184, 37 Am. Rep. 488. See INSURANCE.

VACANT SUCCESSION. An inheritance for which the heirs are unknown.

VACANTIA BONA. In Civil Law. Goods without an owner. Such goods escheat.

VACATE. To annul; to render an act void: as, to vacate an entry which has been made on a record when the court has been imposed upon by fraud or taken by surprise.

A street is vacated when its character as such is destroyed, and it is thereafter held in private ownership the same as the adjacent lots to which it has accreted; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shawnee, 183 Fed. 85, 105 C. C. A. 377.

VACATION. That period of time between the end of one term and beginning of another. During vacation, rules and orders are made in such cases as are urgent, by a judge at his chambers. See TERM.

VACATION BARRISTER. See BARRISTER.

VACCINATION. State-supported facilities for vaccination began in England in 1808 with the national vaccine establishment. In 1840 vaccination fees were made payable out of the rates. The first compulsory act was passed in 1853, the guardians of the poor being intrusted with the carrying out of the law. In 1867 an act was passed rather to remove some technical difficulties than to enlarge the scope of the former act; and in 1871 an act was passed which compelled the board of guardians to appoint vaccination officers. The guardians also appoint a public vaccinator, who must be duly qualified to practice medicine, and whose duty it is to vaccinate any child resident within his district brought to him for that purpose, to examine the same a week after, to give a certificate and to certify to the vaccination officer the fact of vaccination or of insusceptibility.

The parent of any child born in England must have it vaccinated within six months, except in the case of a parent who within four months of birth makes and files a statutory declaration that he conscientiously believes that vaccination would be prejudicial to the health of his child.

Vaccination was made compulsory in Bavaria in 1807; Denmark, 1810; Sweden, 1814; Württemberg, Hesse and other German states, 1818; Prussia, 1835; Roumania, 1874; Hungary, 1876; and Servia, 1881.

It is required by some acts that a child shall be vaccinated as a condition to his being admitted to or attending public schools; Com. v. Smith, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 129; although small-pox is not prevalent or apprehended in the community. Under other statutes the rule is held to apply only where there is a reasonably well-founded belief that small-pox is prevalent in the community or is approaching thereto; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 242, 66 N. E. 719, 67 L. R. A. 935; State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 35 S. E. 459, 49 L. R. A. 588, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691. It has been held in such a case that an unvaccinated pupil may be excluded from the school, even if he is not a fit subject for vaccination; Hammond v. Hyde Park, 195 Mass. 29, 80 N. E. 650. It is provided in some acts that, before a pupil may attend the public schools, he must present a certificate of a reputable physician that he has been successfully vaccinated; Com. v. Rowe, 218 Pa. 168, 67 Atl. 56; or has had small-pox; Field v. Robinson, 198 Pa. 638, 48 Atl. 873; or one excusing him from vaccination; State v. Board of Education of Barbertown, 76 Ohio St. 297, 81 N. E. 568, 10 Ann. Cas. 879; such as a certificate that by repeated trials he has been shown to be immune from vaccination; Anten v. School Bd., 83 Ark. 431, 104 S. W. 130.

Statutes requiring or authorizing a school-board to require the vaccination of pupils as a condition to their being admitted to or attending schools have been held to be a valid exercise of the police power; Stull v. Reber, 215 Pa. 156, 64 Atl. 419, 7 Ann. Cas. 415; and have also been held not to be in contravention of the provision of the federal constitution that no person shall be deprived of any right without due process of law; Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 183, 32 Atl. 348, 29 L. R. A. 251; or of a provision of a state constitution relating to the maintenance of public schools wherein all children of eligible age may receive an education; Viemeister v. White, 179 N. Y. 235, 72 N. E. 97, 70 L. R. A. 796, 103 Am. St. Rep. 859, 1 Ann. Cas. 334.

An adult is not deprived of the liberty secured by the 14th amendment, by the enforcement against him of a compulsory vaccination law; at least where he does not show, with reasonable certainty, that he is not at the time a fit subject of vaccination, or that vaccination, by reason of his then condition, will seriously impair his health, or possibly cause his death; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; this case gives much historical information, as well as a full consideration of the various statutory provisions on the subject.

The report of the Pennsylvania State Vaccination Commission, Emil Rosenberger, Chairman, is that the "protective power of vaccination against smallpox has been conclusively established and that vaccination is a relatively harmless procedure" (two members dissenting). It refers to the vaccination requirements of all European nations except Austria and Russia and states that, except in respect of the conscientious objection provision in England (supra), the rigor of the requirements in the two last decades has increased.

VADIMONIUM. In Civil Law. An ancient form of suretyship. Hunter, Rom. L. 526.

VADIUM MORTUUM (Lat.). A mortgage or dead pledge; it is a security given by the borrower of a sum of money, by which he grants to the lender an estate in fee, on condition that if the money be not repaid at the time appointed, the estate so put in pledge shall continue to the lender as dead or gone from the mortgagor. 2 Bla. Com. 257. See Gage of Land, 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H.

VADIUM PONERE. To take bail for the appearance of a person in a court of justice. Toml.

VADIUM VIVUM (Lat.). A species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of the land; it was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost, and were not left in dead pledge, but this was a living pledge, for the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt. Littleton § 206; 1 Powell, Mortg. 3.

VAGABOND. One who wanders about idly, who has no certain dwelling. It is not synonymous with vagrant. Johnson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 562, 13 S. W. 1005.

VAGRANCY. When not defined by a statute, it must be considered such a vagabondage as fairly comes within the common-law meaning of the word. In matter of Sarah Way, 41 Mich. 299, 1 N. W. 1021; In re Jordan, 90 Mich. 3, 50 N. W. 1087.

VAGRANT. A person who lives idly, without any settled home. A person who refuses to work, or goes about begging. This latter meaning is the common one in statutes punishing vagrancy. See In re Jordan, 90 Mich. 3, 50 N. W. 1087.

One who came within the statutory definition of a vagrant is such, though he had $40 on his person; Branch v. State, 165 S. W. 605.

See TRAMP.

VAGRANT ACT. In English Law. The statute 5 Geo. IV, c. 83, which is an act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons. 2 Chit. Stat. 145.

The act of 17 Geo. II divided vagrants into idle and disorderly persons (those who threatened to run away and leave their wives and children on the parish, or refuse to work for the usual wages, or begged from door to door in the streets). They were committed to the house of correction at hard labor for not to exceed a month. Rogues and vagabonds (including those who gathered alms on pretense of fire, etc., or as collectors for prisons, etc., common players, minstrels, jugglers, pretended gypsies, those who practice palmistry, or tell fortunes, or bet on any unlawful games, or who desert their wives and children, peddlers not duly licensed, persons wandering about and not giving a good account of themselves, or pretending to be soldiers, etc.). These were publicly whipped or sent to the house of correction at hard labor for not exceeding six months. Incorrigible rogues (including all persons apprehended as rogues and vagabonds and escaping, etc., or giving a false account of themselves, and those who had been punished before as rogues and vagabonds). They were punished by not to exceed two years at hard labor in the House of Correction and to be whipped during confinement. If a male and above 12 years, he might be put into the army or navy, and if he escaped from the house of correction, he might be transported.

Other statutes were passed as late as 32 Geo. III bearing on this subject. A full account of this will be found in Jacob's Law Dict. s. v. Vagrant.

VAGUENESS. Uncertainty.

Certainty is required in contracts, wills, pleadings, judgments, and, indeed, in all the acts on which courts have to give a judgment, and if they be vague so as not to be understood, they are, in general, invalid; 5 R. & C. 583. A charge of frequent intemperance and habitual indolence is vague and too general; State v. Winthrop, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 530. See 36 Ch. Div. 348; CERTAINTY; NONSENSE; UNCERTAINTY.

VALESHERIA. See ENGLESHIRE.

VALID. Having force, of binding force; legally sufficient or efficacious; authorized by law. Anderson, L. Dict.

VALIDITY. Legal sufficiency in contradistinction to mere regularity. An official sale, an order, judgment, or decree may be regular; the whole practice in reference to its entry may be correct, but it may still be invalid for reasons going behind the regularity of its forms. Sharpleigh v. Surdam, 1 Flipp. 487, Fed. Cas. No. 12,711.

"The term 'validity,' as applied to treaties, admits of two descriptions—necessary and voluntary. By the former is meant that which results from the treaties having been made by persons authorized by, and for purposes consistent with, the constitution. By voluntary validity is meant that validity which a treaty, voidable by reason of violation by the other party, still continues to retain by the silent acquiescence and will of the nation. It is voluntary, because it is at the will of the nation to let it remain or to extinguish it. The principles which govern and decide the necessary validity of a treaty are of a judicial nature, while those on which its voluntary validity depends are of a political nature." 2 Paine 688, as paraphrased in 5 Moore, Int. L. Dig. 183.

VALLEY. The common understanding of the word valley, as applied to a mountainous country, is as meaning lowlands in contradistinction to mountain slopes and ridges; Whaley v. R. Co., 167 Fed. 664.

VALOR BENEFICIORUM (Lat.). The value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which the first-fruits and tenths are collected and paid. The valuation by which the clergy are at present rated was made 26 Hen. VIII., and is commonly called The King's Books. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. *284.

VALOR MARITAGII (Lat.). The amount forfeited under the ancient tenures by a ward to a guardian who had offered her a marriage without disparagement, which she refused. It was so much as a jury would assess, or as any one would give bona fide, for the value of the marriage. Littleton 110. A writ which lay against the ward, on coming of full age, for that he was not married by his guardian, for the value of the marriage, and this though no convenient marriage had been offered. Termes de la Ley.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

VALUABLE SECURITY. Every valuable security is a valuable thing, but many valuable things are not valuable securities. The words "other valuable things" include everything of value; State v. Thatcher, 35 N. J. L. 452; as a promissory note; State v. Tomlin, 29 N. J. L. 13. Ice has been held a valuable article; State v. Pottmeyer, 33 Ind. 402, 5 Am. Rep. 224. Valuable papers are not papers having a money value, but only such as are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person; Marr v. Marr, 2 Head (Tenn.) 306. They have been defined to be such as are regarded by a testator as worthy of preservation: in his estimation, of some value. The term is not confined to deeds for lands or slaves, obligations for money or certificates of stock; Hooper v. McQuary, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 129.

VALUABLE THING. A month's lodging is a valuable thing within the meaning of a statute providing against the obtaining of any valuable thing by personating a United States officer. U. S. v. Ballard, 118 Fed. 757.

VALUATION. The act of ascertaining the worth of a thing. The estimated worth of a thing. State v. R. Co., 7 Nev. 99. See VALUE.

VALUATION LIST. In English Law. A list of all the ratable hereditaments in a parish.

VALUE. The utility of an object. The worth of an object in purchasing other goods. The first may be called value in use; the latter, value in exchange.

When applied without qualification to property of any description, necessarily means the price which it will command in the market; Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 399. In an indictment, it has been held to be a synonym of "effect" or "import." Chidester v. State, 25 Ohio St. 438.

Value differs from price, q. v. The latter is applied to live cattle and animals; in a declaration, therefore, for taking cattle, they ought to be said to be of such a price: and in a declaration for taking dead chattels, or those which never had life, it ought to lay them to be of such a value; 2 Lilly, Abr. 629. See Lawrence v. Boston, 119 Mass. 126.

It is also distinguished from income when applied to property; Troy I. & N. Factory v. Corning, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 247. As used in reference to lands taken under eminent domain, it is a relative term, depending on the circumstances. Salable value, actual value, and cash value all mean the same thing and are designed to effect the same purpose; Burr. Tax. 227. See Cummings v. Bank, 101 U. S. 162, 25 L. Ed. 903. See INTRINSIC VALUE. Upon the question of the value of an article evidence of its original cost is relevant; Burke v. Pierce, 83 Fed. 95, 27 C. C. A. 462.

VALUE RECEIVED. A phrase usually employed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a consideration has been given for it. These words are not necessary; 11 A. & E. 702; Mehlberg v. Tisher, 24 Wis. 607; though it is otherwise in some states if the bill or note be not negotiable; Bristol v. Warner, 19 Conn. 7; Hoyt v. Jaffray, 29 Ill. 104; extrinsic evidence is admissible between immediate parties to prove absence, failure, or illegality of consideration; Green v. Shepherd, 5 Allen (Mass.) 589; Aldrich v. Stockwell, 9 Allen (Mass.) 45.

The expression value received, when put in a bill of exchange, will bear two interpretations; the drawer of the bill may be presumed to acknowledge the fact that he has received value from the payee; 3 Maule & S. 351; Benjamin v. Tillman, 2 McLean 213, Fed. Cas. No. 1,304; or when the bill has been made payable to the order of the drawer and accepted, it implies that value has been received by the acceptor; 5 Maule & S. 65; Thurman v. Van Brunt, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 409. In a promissory note, the expression imports value received from the payee; 5 B. & C. 360; and sufficiently expresses a consideration; Moses v. Bank, 149 U. S. 298, 13 Sup. Ct. 900, 37 L. Ed. 743; although not necessarily in money; Osgood v. Bringolf, 32 Ia. 265.

The words are not required by the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act.

See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

VALUED POLICY. See POLICY.

VARA. A measure used in Mexican land grants equal to 32.9927 inches. Ainsa v. U. S., 161 U. S. 219, 16 Sup. Ct. 544, 40 L. Ed. 673.

VARIANCE. A disagreement or difference between two parts of the same legal proceeding which ought to agree together. Variances are between the writ and the declaration, and between the declaration, or bill in equity, and the evidence.

Variance in matter of substance is fatal to the action; Stephenson v. Mansony, 4 Ala. 319; Lawrence v. Knies, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 141; and is ground for demurrer or arrest of judgment; Wilbur v. Brown, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 356; Christian Bank v. Greenfield, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 290; but if in matter of form merely, must be pleaded in abatement; Humphreys v. Collier, Breese (Ill.) 298; How v. McKinney, 1 McLean 319, Fed. Cas. No. 6,749; or special demurrer; Sargent v. Hayne, 2 Hill (S. C.) 585; and a variance between the allegations and evidence upon some material points only is as fatal as if upon all; 7 Taunt. 385; but, if it be merely formal or immaterial matter, will be disregarded; Ferguson v. Harwood, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 408, 3 L. Ed. 386. The court may allow a technical variance between the pleadings and proofs to be cured by an amendment not in-roducing any other cause of action or affecting the merits of the case between the parties; Gormley v. Bunyan, 138 U. S. 623, 11 Sup. Ct. 453, 34 L. Ed. 1086. Slight variance from the terms of a written instrument which is professedly set out in the words themselves is fatal; Hampst. 294.

It is too late after plea to take advantage of a variance between the description in the writ and the declaration of property replevied; Reeder v. Moore, 95 Mich. 594, 55 N. W. 436.

Where, in an action on a contract, the pleader did not set out the exact words of the contract, and a different contract expressed in different words was proved, there is no real variance, as the difference between the declaration and the proofs must be real and tangible to constitute a variance; Beckwith v. Thompson, 63 Fed. 232, 11 C. C. A. 149, 25 U. S. App. 58. Where the plaintiff declared that his cattle died of "Texas cattle fever," and that it was contagious, and the court found that the cattle died of "Texas fever," and it was infectious, held that the variance was immaterial; Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U. S. 468, 16 Sup. Ct. 1064, 41 L. Ed. 230. So where in an indictment the name of the "National State Bank," "carrying on a national banking business at the city of Exeter," was used instead of "The National Granite State Bank of Exeter;" Putnam v. U. S., 162 U. S. 687, 16 Sup. Ct. 923, 40 L. Ed. 1118.

A variance between proof and declaration should be called to the attention of the court when the declaration can be amended; George A. Fuller Co. v. McCloskey, 228 U. S. 194, 33 Sup. Ct. 471, 57 L. Ed. 795.

VASECTOMY. A comparatively simple and painless operation, consisting of the removal of a small part of each vas deferens through which the semen flows from the testicles to the seminal vesicles, or a tying off or ligaturing of the same. It effectively sterilizes the male, but does not impair his health or take away his sexual instincts.

Several states have passed statutes providing for compulsory asexualization of inmates of insane asylums and prisons, by which the advisability of the operation is commonly referred to a board composed of the chief physician of such institution, one or more surgeons specially appointed, and such other health officers as seem necessary, and the opinion of a majority of the board is sufficient for a decision. It is apparently an exercise of the police power, for the protection of society by preventing further procreation of undesirable citizens, or for partial protection of women in cases of escape.

Indiana provides for sterilizing confirmed criminals, idiots, rapists and imbeciles; Laws 1907, c. 215. Connecticut provides in explicit terms for both vasectomy and oophorectomy, where it is probable that the children of inmates would inherit a tendency to crime, insanity, feeble-mindedness, idioy or imbecility; Acts 1909, c. 209; the attorney-general has declared it not to be unconstitutional. California regards the beneficial effect of the operation on the subject himself, and further provides that it shall not be performed on a criminal unless he has been committed twice for some sexual offense, or at least three times for any other crime, and gives evidence of being a moral and sexual pervert; life convicts are included in the last provision; Stat. 1909, c. 720. Iowa substantially follows California, with the addition of drunkards, persons addicted to drugs, epileptics and syphilitics, and makes it a punishment for prostitution and detaining females for prostitution; Laws 1911, c. 129. Washington prescribes it as a punishment for rape, statutory rape, and habitual criminality, to be imposed by the court in its discretion, with other punishment; Rem. & Bal. Code § 2237.

Michigan has passed an act applicable to mentally defective or insane persons.

It is held not to be a cruel punishment; State v. Feilen, 70 Wash. 65, 126 Pac. 75, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 512.

See 27 Med. Leg. Journ. 134.

A statute to prevent procreation by a surgical operation, in order to be valid, must not deny the equal protection of the law; Smith v. Bd. of Examiners (N. J.) 88 Atl. 963, declaring invalid an act for sterilizing idiots, imbeciles, epileptics, rapists, certain criminals and other defectives, as based upon a classification which bears no reasonable relation to the object sought.

The Iowa act has been declared void in the federal district court (not yet reported), and an injunction was granted to an inmate of the penitentiary.

It is interesting to notice that, in Roman law, castrating any person, slave or free, even with his consent, was punishable; Hunter, Rom. Law 1069.

VASSAL. In Feudal Law. The name given to the holder of a fief bound to perform feudal service: this word was then always correlative to that of lord, entitled to such service.

The vassal himself might be lord of some other vassal.

In after-times, this word was used to signify a species of slave who owed servitude and was in a state of dependency on a superior lord. 2 Bla. Com. 53.

VASSAL STATES are states which are supposed to possess only those rights and privileges which have been expressly granted to them, but actually they seem to be well-nigh independent. Hershey, Int. L. 106. Egypt was such; also Crete.

VAVASOUR (diminutive from vasalus, or, according to Bracton, from vas sortitus ad valitudinem). One who was in dignity next to a baron. Britton 109; Bracton, lib. 1, c. 8. One who held of a baron. Encyc. Brit.

VECTIGALIA. In Roman Law. Duties which were paid to the prince for the importation and exportation of certain merchandise. They differed from tribute, which was a tax paid by each individual. Code 4. 61. 5. 13.

Rent from state lands. Hunter, Rom. L. 901.

VEHICLE. The word includes every description of carriage or other artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on land; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4; a street sprinkler is a vehicle; St. Louis v. Woodruff, 71 Mo. 92; but not a street car; Monongahela Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 114 Pa. 484, 8 Atl. 233; or a ferry boat; Duckwall v. Albany, 25 Ind. 286. See BICYCLE; TEAM.

VEIN. See LODGE.

VENAL. Something that is bought. The term is generally applied in a bad sense; as, a venal office is an office which has been purchased.

VENDEE. A purchaser; a buyer.

VENDITION. A sale; the act of selling.

VENDITIONI EXPONAS (Lat.). That you expose to sale.

In Practice. The name of a writ of execution, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to sell goods or chattels, and in some states, lands, which he has taken in execution by virtue of a fiery facias, and which remain unsold.

Under this writ the sheriff is bound to sell the property in his hands, and he cannot return a second time that he can get no buyers; Cowp. 406.

VENDITOR REGIS (Lat.). The king's salesman, or person who exposes to sale goods or chattels seized or distrained to answer any debt due to the king. Cowell. This office was granted by Edw. I. to Philip de Lordiner, but was seized into the king's hands for abuse thereof. 2 Edw. II.

VENDOR. A seller; one who disposes of a thing in consideration of money.

VENDOR'S LIEN. An equitable lien allowed the vendor of land sold for the unpaid purchase-money. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1260. See LIEN.

VENIRE FACIAS (Lat.). That you cause to come. According to the English law, the proper process to be issued on an indictment for any petit misdemeanor, on a penal statute, is a writ called venire facias.

It is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear; 4 Bla. Com. 18, 351. See Thomp. & M. Juries 62.

VENIRE FACIAS DE NOVO (Lat.). The name of a new writ of venire facias; this is awarded when, by reason of some irregularity or defect in the proceeding on the first venire, or the trial, the proper effect of the venire has been frustrated, or the verdict become void in law; as, for example, when the jury has been improperly chosen, or an uncertain, ambiguous, or defective verdict has been rendered. Steph. Pl. 120; or when a judgment is reversed on a writ of error.

A motion for a venire facias de novo is properly denied, where there is no defect, ambiguity, or uncertainty in the verdict; Knight v. Knight, 6 Ind. App. 268, 33 N. E. 456. Upon reversal of a judgment, the awarding the writ is controlled by the character of the case and the sound discretion of the appellate court; Fries v. R. Co., 98 Pa. 142.

But federal courts, in reversing a judgment for plaintiff at law, cannot direct a judgment for defendant, but must order a venire facias de novo; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879. As to a distinction between venire facias de novo and venire de novo, see 1 Wils. 48. See also 47 Am. L. Rev. 377.

VENIRE FACIAS JURATORES (Lat.). (Frequently called venire simply.)

The name of a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to cause to come from the body of the county, before the court from which it issued, on some day certain and therein specified, a certain number of qualified citizens who are to act as jurors in the said court. Steph. Pl. 104. See Cridland v. Floyd, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 414; 3 Chitty, Pr. 797; JURY.

VENTE (Fr.). A sale.

Vente a réméré. A sale made, reserving a right in the seller to repurchase the property sold by returning the price paid for it.

The term is used in Canada and Louisiana. The time during which a repurchase may be made cannot exceed ten years, and, if by the agreement it so exceed, it shall be reduced to ten years.

Vente aleatoire. A sale subject to an uncertain event.

Vente aux enchères. An auction.

VENTER, VENTRE (Lat. the belly). The wife; for example, a man has three children by the first and one by the second venter. A child is said to be en ventre sa mere before it is born; while it is a fœtus. See UNBORN CHILD.

VENTRE INSPICIENDO. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO; JURY OF WOMEN; PHYSICAL EXAMINATION.

VENUE (L. Lat. visnetum, neighborhood. The word was formerly spelled visne. Co. Litt. 125 a).

The county in which the facts are alleged to have occurred, and from which the jury are to come to try the issue. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 102; McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. (U. S.) 241, 11 L. Ed. 117. Some certain place must be alleged as the place of occurrence for each traversable fact; Com. Dig. Pleader (C. 20). Generally, in modern pleading, in civil practice, no special allegation is needed in the body of the declaration, the venue in the margin being understood to be the place of occurrence till the contrary is shown; Cocke v. Kendall, Hempst. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 2,929 b.

In local actions the true venue must be laid; that is, the action must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose, where the property is situated, in actions affecting real property; Deacon v. Shreve, 23 N. J. L. 204. Thus, where an action is brought on a lease at common law, founded on privity of contract, as debt or covenant by lessor or lessee; 1 Saund. 241 b; Henwood v. Cheeseman, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 500; venue is transitory, but when founded in privity of estate, as in case of assignment, the venue is local; 1 Saund. 257. By various early statutes, however, actions on leases have become generally transitory. In such action, some particular place, as, a town, village, or parish, must formerly have been designated; Co. Litt. 125. But it is said to be no longer necessary except in replevin; 2 East 503; 1 Chitty, Pl. 251. As to where the venue is to be laid in case of a change of county lines, see Murphy v. Winter Co., 18 Ga. 690; People v. Stokes, 102 Cal. 501, 36 Pac. 834.

In transitory actions the venue may be laid in any county the plaintiff chooses; that is, he may bring suit wherever he may find the defendant, and lay his cause of action to have arisen there, even though the cause of action arose in a foreign jurisdiction; Steph. Pl. 306; Murphy v. Winter, 18 Ga. 690; McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. (U. S.) 241, 11 L. Ed. 117. In case the cause was to be tried in a different county from that in which the matter actually arose, the venue was anciently laid by giving the place of occurrence, with a scilicet giving the place of trial; McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. (U. S.) 241, 11 L. Ed. 117; Duyckinck v. Ins. Co., 23 N. J. L. 279. In some cases, however, by statutes, the venue in transitory actions must be laid in the county where the matter occurred or where certain parties reside; 3 Bla. Com. 294.

An action against a municipal corporation must be brought in the county where it is situated; Jones v. Statesville, 97 N. C. 86, 2 S. E. 346; even though it is brought on a trespass committed in another county; Heckscher v. Philadelphia, 20 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 52. In Phillips v. Baltimore, 110 Md. 431, 72 Atl. 902, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711, it was held that transitory actions for personal injuries must be brought in the courts of the municipality; but if the action be for trespass to real property, it must be brought in the county where the trespass occurred; Baltimore v. Turnpike Co., 104 Md. 35, 65 Atl. 35, 10 Ann. Cas. 35.

A township cannot be sued in another county than the one of which it forms a part; Pack v. Greenbush Tp., 62 Mich. 122, 28 N. W. 746; but it has been held that where the action is against a town for an injury caused by a defective road, it can be brought in the county of either party; Hunt v. Pownal, 9 Vt. 411.

In criminal proceedings the venue must be laid in the county where the occurrence actually took place; 4 C. & P. 363; and the act must be proved to have occurred in that jurisdiction; Heikes v. Com., 26 Pa. 513; Searcy v. State, 4 Tex. 450; People v. Lafuente, 6 Cal. 202. Where the offence is committed by letter, the sender may be tried at the place where the letter is received by the person to whom it is addressed; In re Palliser, 136 U. S. 256, 10 Sup. Ct. 1034, 34 L. Ed. 514. See In re Cook, 49 Fed. 843. An indictment for murder charging that an offence was committed on board of an American vessel on the high seas within the jurisdiction of the court and within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States, sufficiently avers the locality of the offence; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936. One who obtains goods from a salesman under false pretences may be tried in the county from which the goods were shipped; Com. v. Karpowski, 167 Pa. 225, 31 Atl. 572.

An offence committed at any inappreciable distance from a county line may be tried in either county; Buckrice v. People, 110 Ill. 29; Bayliss v. People, 46 Mich. 221, 9 N. W. 257; so of a distance of 500 yards; People v. Davis, 36 N. Y. 77; and (by statute) of a distance of 100 rods; Bayliss v. People, 46 Mich. 221, 9 N. W. 257. Statutory provisions are usually made. Where the blow was struck in one county and the person dies in another county, the trial must be in the former; State v. Blunt, 110 Mo. 322, 19 N. W. 650; Riley v. State, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 646; Moran v. Territory, 14 Okl. 544, 78 Pac. 111; contra, Nash v. State, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 286; Com. v. Jones, 118 Ky. 889, 82 S. W. 643, 4 Ann. Cas. 1192 (where the accused was in the latter county). It is held that the trial may in such case be in either; State v. Jones, 38 La. Ann. 792.

One stealing a horse may be tried in the county into which he takes it; Rex v. Peas, 1 Root (Conn.) 69; Whizenant v. State, 71 Ala. 383; so of a steer; State v. Williams, 147 Mo. 14, 47 S. W. 891; Hurlburt v. State, 52 Neb. 428, 72 N. W. 471; Rose v. State (Tex.) 65 S. W. 911. That he can be tried in either county, see Green v. State, 114 Ga. 918, 41 S. E. 55.

Where a murder is planned and preparations are made, including control of the victim, but the actual killing takes place in another county, the courts of either county have jurisdiction; People v. Thorn, 12 N. Y. Cr. R. 236, 47 N. Y. Supp. 46. Where one in California prepared there a poisonous article and sent it to another in Delaware, who was killed by it, this was an offence committed in California; People v. Botkin, 132 Cal. 231, 64 Pac. 286, 84 Am. St. Rep. 39.

The sixth amendment to the federal constitution provides for the right of trial of a criminal offence in a district where it is committed; there is no constitutional provision for a trial in the place of residence of the accused; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 30 Sup. Ct. 249, 54 L. Ed. 569, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112.

The trial of any crime committed on the high seas, or elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of any state or district, shall be in the district where the offender is found or into which he is just brought; U. S. R. S. § 730 (now Jud. Code § 41).

Where a continuing crime runs through several jurisdictions, the offence is committed in each; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 153 Fed. 1, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400.

Where the place of the act and of an unlawful combination under the U. S. R. S. § 5440 were in different federal districts, the provisions of section 731 (now Jud. Code § 42) apply and create a jurisdiction in either district; Hyde v. U. S., 225 U. S. 347, 32 Sup. Ct. 793, 56 L. Ed. 1114, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 614.

The offence of importing an alien woman for prostitution is complete the moment she is landed in the United States and is triable at the place where she is landed; Ex parte Lair, 177 Fed. 789.

The federal court at the place where the agreement was made for compensation to perform services forbidden by U. S. R. S. § 1782, has jurisdiction to try the offence, even if the agreement was negotiated or tentatively accepted at another place, and although the defendant may not, at that time, have been at that place; Burton v. U. S., 202 U. S. 345, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 392.

Statement of venue in the margin and reference thereto in the body of an indictment is a sufficient statement of venue; State v. Conley, 39 Me. 78; McDonald v. State, 8 Mo. 283; and the venue need not be stated in the margin if it appears from the indictment; Com. v. Quin, 5 Gray (Mass.) 478; State v. Powers, 25 Conn. 48.

A state statute providing for a change of venue upon the application of the state does not violate the right of trial by jury at common law; Barry v. Traux, 13 N. D. 131, 99 N. W. 769, 65 L. R. A. 762, 112 Am. St. Rep. 662, 3 Ann. Cas. 191; People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593, 61 N. W. 865; State v. Miller, 15 Minn. 344 (Gil. 277); Com. v. Davidson, 91 Ky. 162, 15 S. W. 53; People v. Harris, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 150; Price v. State, 8 Gill (Md.) 295; and this view seems to have the weight of authority, although other cases hold that the constitutional right includes that of having a jury of the county in which the offence was committed; People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 25 Pac. 481, 11 L.

R. A. 75; Kirk v. State, 1 Cold. (Tenn.) 344; although this right was held to be one which the accused could waive as well as insist upon; State v. Potter, 16 Kan. 80.

Want of any venue is a cause for demurrer; Briggs v. Bank, 5 Mass. 94; or abatement; Archb. Civ. Pl. 78; or arrest of judgment; Searcy v. State, 4 Tex. 450. So defendant may plead or demur to a wrong venue; Blake v. Freeman, 13 Me. 130. Change of venue may be made by the court to prevent, and not to cause, a defeat of justice; 3 Bla. Com. 294; Hungerford v. Cushing, 2 Wis. 397; Curran v. Beach, 20 Ill. 259; both in civil; Witter v. Taylor, 7 Ind. 110; Weeks v. State, 31 Miss. 490; and criminal cases; Ex parte Banks, 28 Ala. 28; State v. Windsor, 5 Har. (Del.) 512; and such change is a matter of right on compliance with the requirements of the law; Baldwin v. Marygold, 2 Wis. 419; Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 511; Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606. That such change is a matter of discretion with the court below, see Weeks v. State, 31 Miss. 490; Vaughn v. Hixon, 50 Kan. 773, 32 Pac. 358; Thorp v. Bradley, 75 Ia. 50, 39 N. W. 177; King v. State, 91 Tenn. 617, 20 S. W. 169; Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 9 Sup. Ct. 696, 33 L. Ed. 110.

See JURISDICTION; VISNE; TRANSITORY ACTIONS.

VERAY. An ancient manner of spelling vrai, true. In the English law there are three kinds of tenants: veray, or true tenant, who is one who holds in fee-simple; tenant by the manner (see TENANT); and veray tenant by the manner, who is the same as tenant by the manner, with this difference only, that the fee-simple, instead of remaining in the lord, is given by him or by the law to another. Hamm. N. P. 394.

VERBAL. Parol; by word of mouth: as verbal agreement; verbal evidence. Sometimes incorrectly used for oral.

VERBAL NOTE. In diplomatic language, a memorandum or note, not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time, without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which perhaps the affair does not require, and, on the other hand, not to afford any ground for supposing that it is forgotten, or that there is no intention of prosecuting it any further, is called a verbal note.

VERBAL PROCESS. In Louisiana. A written account of any proceeding or operation required by law, signed by the person commissioned to perform the duty, and attested by the signature of witnesses. See PROCES VERBAL.

VERDERER (fr. French verdeur, fr. vert or verd, green; Law L. viridarius). An officer in the king's forest, whose office is properly to look after the vert, for food and shelter for the deer. He is also sworn to keep the assizes of the forest, and receive and enrol the attachments and presentments of trespasses within the forest, and certify them to the swanimote or justice-seat; Cowell; Manwood, For. Law 332.

VERDICT. The decision made by a jury and reported to the court on the matters lawfully submitted to them in the course of a trial of a cause.

A general verdict is one by which the jury pronounce at the same time on the facts and the law, either in favor of the plaintiff or defendant. Co. Litt. 228; 4 Bla. Com. 461.

A general verdict is a finding by the jury in the terms of the issue referred to them. Settle v. Alison, 8 Ga. 208, 52 Am. Dec. 393; Tidd, Pr. 798.

A general verdict must be regarded as affirming the truth of every fact necessary to support the general conclusion arrived at, and every reasonable presumption arises in its favor, while nothing will be presumed in aid of the special findings as against the general verdict; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hedges, 118 Ind. 5, 20 N. E. 530. If there is any reasonable hypothesis whereby a general verdict and the special finding can be reconciled, judgment must follow the general verdict; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Ellison, 117 Ind. 234, 20 N. E. 135; and a general verdict on an indictment is sufficient if supported by any one of the counts; State v. Dalton, 101 N. C. 680, 8 S. E. 154; May v. State, 85 Ala. 14, 5 South. 14; Babcock v. U. S., 34 Fed. 873.

The jury may find such a verdict whenever they think fit to do so.

A partial verdict in a criminal case is one by which the jury acquit the defendant of a part of the accusation against him, and find him guilty of the residue.

A privy verdict is one delivered privily to a judge out of court. A verdict of this kind is delivered to the judge after the jury have agreed, for the convenience of the jury, who, after having given it, separate. This verdict is of no force whatever; and this practice, being exceedingly liable to abuse, is seldom, if ever, allowed in the United States. The jury, however, are allowed in some states, in certain cases, to seal their verdict and return it into court, as, for example, where a verdict is agreed upon during the adjournment of the court for the day. When this is done in criminal cases it is usually the right of the defendant to have the jury present in court when the verdict is opened; Doyle v. U. S., 10 Fed. 269. See PRESENCE; SEALING A VERDICT.

A private verdict must afterwards be given publicly in order to give it any effect.

A public verdict is one delivered in open court.

A special verdict is one by which the facts are found, and the law is submitted to the judges. Brown v. Ralston, 4 Rand. (Va.) 504; Bellows v. Bank, 2 Mason, 31, Fed. Cas.

No. 1279. The jury may find a special verdict in criminal cases, but they are not obliged in any case to do so; Cooley, Const. Lim. 393. The special verdict or findings of a jury in order to sustain a judgment, must pass upon all the material issues made in the pleadings so as to enable the court to say upon the pleadings and verdict, without looking at the evidence, which party is entitled to judgment; Lane v. Lenfest, 40 Minn. 375, 42 N. W. 84; Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. 230, 37 L. Ed. 1195. A special verdict need only find such facts as are alleged in the pleadings upon one side and denied upon the other; Cole v. Crawford, 69 Tex. 124, 5 S. W. 646.

The jury have an option, instead of finding the negative or affirmative of the issue, as in a general verdict, to find all the facts of the case as disclosed by the evidence before them, and, after so setting them forth, to conclude to the following effect: That they are ignorant, in point of law, on which side they ought upon those facts to find the issue; that if upon the whole matter the court shall be of opinion that the issue is proved for the plaintiff, they find for the plaintiff accordingly, and assess the damages at such a sum, etc.; but if the court are of an opposite opinion, they find for defendant. This form of finding is called a special verdict. In practice they have nothing to do with the formal preparation of the special verdict. When it is agreed that a verdict of that kind is to be given, the jury merely declare their opinion as to any fact remaining in doubt, and then the verdict is adjusted without their further interference. It is settled under the correction of the judge, by the counsel on either side, according to the state of the facts as found by the jury, with respect to all particulars on which they have delivered an opinion, and, with respect to other particulars, according to the state of facts which it is agreed that they ought to find upon the evidence before them. The special verdict, when its form is thus settled, is, together with the whole proceedings on the trial, then entered on record; and the question of law, arising on the facts found, is argued before the court in banc; 3 Bla. Com. 377.

There is another method of finding a special verdict: this is when the jury find a verdict generally for the plaintiff, but subject nevertheless to the opinion of the judges or the court above on a special case, stated by the counsel on both sides, with regard to a matter of law; 3 Bla. Com. 378. See Porter v. Rummery, 10 Mass. 64.

A juror may dissent at any time from a verdict to which he had before agreed until the same is recorded; 15 Am. L. Rev. 423. A mistake in the verdict may be corrected before it is recorded and the jury discharged; State v. Shelly, 98 N. C. 873, 4 S. E. 530.

Where a jury being equally divided in opinion come to an agreement by lot, it was formerly held that its verdict was legitimate; 1 Keble 811; but such verdicts are now held to be illegal, and will be set aside. The "quotient" verdict is so called from the fact that the jurors, having agreed to find for the plaintiff, further agree that their verdict shall be in such sum as is ascertained by each juror privately marking down the sum of money to which he thinks the plaintiff entitled, the total of these sums being divided by twelve. This method is almost universally condemned, the ground of the objection being that such an agreement cuts off all deliberation on the part of the jurors, and places it in the power of one of their number by naming a sum extravagantly high or ridiculously low to make the quotient unreasonably large or small; Goodman v. Cody, 1 Wash. Ty. 329, 34 Am. Rep. 808; Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. McDaniel, 134 Ind. 166, 32 N. E. 728, 33 N. E. 769; so of a verdict in a criminal case fixing the term of imprisonment; Pruitt v. State, 30 Tex. App. 156, 16 S. W. 773; contra, in the case of a fine in a criminal case for libel; Smith v. Com., 98 Ky. 437, 33 S. W. 419. But where the calculation is purely informal, for the purpose of ascertaining the sense of the jury, the objection is obviated, and the verdict will stand; Cochlin v. People, 93 Ill. 410; Sullens v. R. Co., 74 Ia. 659, 38 N. W. 545, 7 Am. St. Rep. 501; Ponca v. Crawford, 23 Neb. 662, 37 N. W. 609, 8 Am. St. Rep. 144; Hunt v. Elliott, 77 Cal. 588, 20 Pac. 132; Kinsley v. Morse, 40 Kan. 588, 20 Pac. 222. A verdict obtained by taking one-twelfth of the aggregate amount of the several estimates of the jurors is not objectionable when there was no antecedent agreement to be bound by the result, and when each juror deliberately accepted the amount thus ascertained; Consolidated Ice-Mach. Co. v. Ice Co., 57 Fed. 898; Cortelyou v. McCarthy, 37 Neb. 742, 56 N. W. 620; but if in pursuance of an agreement to be bound by the result, the verdict must be set aside; East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Winters, 85 Tenn. 246, 1 S. W. 790; Roy v. Goings, 112 Ill. 656; Congdon v. Winsor, 17 R. I. 240, 21 Atl. 540. So where two of the jurors agree that if one places a coin and the other guesses heads or tails, and the guess is right, they will agree with the majority; Donner v. Palmer, 23 Cal. 47; or where a verdict is reached by drawing lots it will be set aside; Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182; Wright v. Abbott, 160 Mass. 395, 36 N. E. 62, 39 Am. St. Rep. 499. See JURY.

A verdict allowing a larger sum than is claimed in the petition must be set aside; Harwick v. Weddington, 73 Ia. 300, 34 N. W. 868. Where a verdict in an action for breach of covenant is larger than the plaintiff's claim a remittitur is properly allowed; Tarbell v. Tarbell, 60 Vt. 486, 15 Atl. 104; and a remission of a part of the verdict, followed by a judgment for the remaining sum, as a condition of the denial of a new trial, does not deprive the defendant of his constitutional right to have the question of damages tried by a jury, or constitute a re-examination of the facts tried by the jury in violation of the 7th amendment of the United States constitution; Arkansas Val. L. & C. Co. v. Mann, 130 U. S. 69, 9 Sup. Ct. 458, 32 L. Ed. 854.

A verdict received on Sunday is valid; Stone v. U. S., 64 Fed. 667, 12 C. C. A. 451, 29 U. S. App. 32; a third successive verdict was set aside in Brown v. U. S., 164 U. S. 225, 17 Sup. Ct. 33, 41 L. Ed. 410.

A verdict of "no cause of action" is a verdict for defendant; Felter v. Mulliner, 2 Johns. 181; a verdict is good if the court can understand it; Jones v. Julian, 12 Ind. 274.

Where a verdict allows interest, but does not compute it, the court may compute it, if it can be done by a mathematical calculation; Miller v. Steele, 153 Fed. 714, 82 C. C. A. 572; Martin v. Silliman, 53 N. Y. 615. Where a master states an account between partners, but without adding interest, the court may add interest from the filing of the bill; Young v. Winkley, 191 Mass. 575, 78 N. E. 377. Where there is a verdict on a note, but without interest, the court may add interest in entering judgment; Fletcher v. Nelson, 6 N. D. 94, 69 N. W. 53; otherwise where the jury did not include interest and interest was not a legal incident of the debt; Akin v. Jefferson, 65 Tex. 137; the court cannot add it in entering judgment; Butler v. Holmes, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 48, 68 S. W. 52. Where, on the day after the verdict, all the jury made affidavit that they had intended to add interest, the court added it in entering judgment; Elliott v. Gilmore, 145 Fed. 964. But where the jury were directed to find for the debt, interest and attorney fees, and failed to find interest, the court refused to add the interest; McCrary v. Gano, 115 Ga. 295, 41 S. E. 580. So in the case of an action on a foreign judgment; Hallum v. Dickinson, 47 Ark. 120, 14 S. W. 477.

In eminent domain proceedings, if the jury find a lump sum, the court cannot add interest, though the jury were instructed to do it; Butte Electric Ry. Co. v. Mathews, 34 Mont. 487, 87 Pac. 460.

VERGE. An uncertain quantity of land, from fifteen to thirty acres. Toml. A space within 12 miles around the place where the king was actually residing was called the verge. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 80.

See COURT OF THE MARSHALSEA; VIRGA.

VERIFICATION. An averment by the party making a pleading that he is prepared to establish the truth of the facts which he has pleaded.

Whenever new matter is introduced on either side, the plea must conclude with a verification, in order that the other party may have an opportunity of answering it; 1 Saund. 103, n. 1. This applies only to pleas.

In one instance, however, new matter need not conclude with a verification, and then the pleader may pray judgment without it: for example, when the matter pleaded is merely negative; Lawes, Pl. 145. The reason of it is evident: a negative requires no proof; and it would, therefore, be impertinent or nugatory for the pleader, who pleads a negative matter, to declare his readiness to prove it.

The usual form of verification of a plea containing matter of fact is, "And this he is ready to verify," etc. See 3 Bla. Com. 309.

It is not error to permit a proctor to sign and verify a libel in admiralty, where a large number of persons join and they are out of the jurisdiction, but the practice is not to be commended; The Oregon, 133 Fed. 609, 68 C. C. A. 603.

See BILL; INJUNCTION.

In Practice. The examination of the truth of a writing; the certificate that the writing is true. See AUTHENTICATION.

VERIFY. The swearing to an affidavit. To confirm and substantiate by oath. It is used of substantiating by argument. De Witt v. Swift, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 284.

VERMONT. One of the United States.

At the outbreak of the Revolution the people of Vermont joined their brethren in the contest, though independent of the federal government. In 1777 they declared their territory to be "a free independent jurisdiction," and adopted a constitution which with subsequent amendments is still the constitution of the state. Under this constitution the state maintained its government and its independence for fourteen years, until its admission to the Union in 1791. The institutions of Vermont were modelled in large part from those of Connecticut (Art. 25).

The constitution was amended in 1786, 1793, 1828, 1836, 1850, 1870, and other years to 1913.

VERSUS (Lat.). Against; as, A B versus C D. This is usually abbreviated v. or vs.

Vs. and versus have become ingrafted upon the English language; their meaning is as well understood and their use quite as appropriate as the word against could be; Smith v. Butler, 25 N. H. 523. See TITLE.

VERT. Everything bearing green leaves in a forest. Manwood, For. Law 146.

VERY LORD AND VERY TENANT. They that are immediate lord and tenant one to another. Cowell.

VESSEL. A ship, brig, sloop, or other craft used in navigation. 1 Boulay-Paty, tit. 1, p. 100. The term is rarely applied to any watercraft without a deck; U. S. v. Open Boat, 5 Mas. 120, Fed. Cas. No. 15967; but has been used to include everything capable of being used as a means of transportation by water; Chaffee v. Ludeling, 27 La. Ann. 607.

By U. S. R. S. § 3, "the word 'vessel' includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water." See The Annie S. Cooper, 48 Fed. 703.

A floating elevator towed from place to place, and used to transfer grain, is a vessel; The Hezekiah Baldwin, 8 Bened. 556, Fed. Cas. No. 6,449. So of a scow adapted only for use in port in carrying ballast to and from vessels, having neither steam power nor sails nor rudder, and moving by steam tugs; Endner v. Greco, 3 Fed. 411; so of canal boats; id. (contra, Farmers' Delight v. Lawrence, 5 Wend. [N. Y.] 564); so of a scow built for carrying a steam shovel worked by the steam engine of the scow; The Pioneer, 30 Fed. 206; and a barge having no sails, masts, or rudders and used only for the transportation of bricks, suitable only to be towed by a tug; Disbrow v. Walsh Bros., 36 Fed. 607; so of a floating scow fitted with steam appliances for deepening channels; Aitcheson v. Chain Dredge, 40 Fed. 253; a steam dredge; The Atlantic, 53 Fed. 607; The International, 83 Fed. 840; a barge and scow; The Starbuck, 61 Fed. 502; Saylor v. Taylor, 77 Fed. 476, 23 C. C. A. 343. The means of propulsion makes no difference; The Devonshire, 13 Fed. 39, 8 Sawy. 209.

Vessel includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on water; U. S. v. Holmes, 104 Fed. 884; a barge with a pile driver thereon and moved from place to place by tugs; In re P. Sanford Ross, Inc., 196 Fed. 921; a structure intended for the transportation of a permanent cargo as a scow, carrying a pile driver and engine, which has to be towed in order to navigate; The Raithmoor, 186 Fed. 849; a derrick hoist; The Sallie, 167 Fed. 880, and a pump-boat, which consists of a floating structure equipped with engines and pumps for pumping out coal barges, moved by poles or ropes, or towed; Charles Barnes Co. v. One Dredge Boat, 169 Fed. 895. Rafts are included in the general term of vessels; The Mary, 123 Fed. 609; but, quære, The Annie S. Cooper, 48 Fed. 703.

Vessel is broad enough to include a vessel's tackle, apparel, furniture, chronometer and appurtenances; The Frolic, 148 Fed. 921.

A vessel, although wrecked and abandoned by owners and underwriters and her register closed, but which still retains her hull, though damaged, and her machinery, remains a vessel in a maritime sense, and is subject to dry dock charges while undergoing repairs after she has been raised, and to a maritime lien for such charges; The George W. Elder, 196 Fed. 137; so of a "foreign-built" yacht which burned and sunk and was repaired, but remained a "foreign-built" yacht; U. S. v. Blair, 190 Fed. 372. A steamer which has been taken on shore by her owners for the purpose of being dismantled, and from which the masts and engines had been removed, so long as the dismantling process had not proceeded so far as to render her wholly incapable of being navigated as a tow or otherwise, continues to be a vessel; The O. H. Northam, 181 Fed. 983. That a vessel is not enrolled or licensed does not affect the question of jurisdiction to enforce a maritime lien against her, nor does it make any difference whether she is unfit for sea when a contract is made on her behalf; if the object and effect of it be to enable her to pursue her business upon the sea, it is in its nature maritime; The George W. Elder, 196 Fed. 138.

An open boat is not a vessel; U. S. v. Open Boat, 5 Mas. 120, Fed. Cas. No. 15,967; nor a raft; Moores v. Underwriters, 14 Fed. 236. An open clinker-built gasoline launch about 18 feet long, arriving at Seattle from a port of British Columbia and not shown to be a foreign vessel or to contain merchandise, is not required to report to the customs officer of the port; U. S. v. One Gasoline Launch, 133 Fed. 42, 66 C. C. A. 148.

A vessel is built to navigate the seas and not to stay in a port, and does not acquire a situs in one port rather than another by reason of frequently visiting it; Southern Pac. Co. v. Kentucky, 222 U. S. 63, 32 Sup. Ct. 13, 56 L. Ed. 96.

An American vessel, outside the jurisdiction of a foreign power, is, for some purposes at least, a part of the American territory; The Scotia, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 170, 20 L. Ed. 822.

Foreign-built vessels registered under the act of August 24, 1912, are not permitted to engage in coastwise trade.

Vessels navigated to a port are subject to distinct duties and obligations, and are not dutiable as imported merchandise; The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 41 L. Ed. 937.

Vessels must have their names marked on them; 2 Supp. R. S. 541.

By proclamation of November 21, 1913, the president promulgated certain rules for the measurement of vessels for the Panama Canal, applying to vessels, all commercial, army and navy, supply, and hospital ships, and rules applicable to vessels of war.

By act of Aug. 18, 1914, the words "not more than five years old at the time they apply for registry" were stricken from section five of the Panama Canal Act, and the president was authorized to suspend the provision of law that all watch officers of all United States vessels registered for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States, and those requiring survey, inspection and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built vessels admitted to registry under the act.

The Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, which was signed at London, January 20, 1914, but which the United States Senate has not yet ratified, provides: "At no moment of its voyage may a ship have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and the pontoon life-rafts on board." The number and arrangement of the boats, and (where they are allowed) of the pontoon rafts, depend upon the total number of persons which the ship is intended to carry; provided the total capacity is greater than that necessary to accommodate all the persons on board. Each boat must be of sufficient strength to enable it to be safely lowered with its full complement of persons and equipment. Suitable arrangements shall be made for embarking passengers in the boats. The davits shall be of sufficient strength to lower the boats with their full complement, the ship being assumed to have a list of 15 degrees. The davits must be fitted with a gear of sufficient power to ensure that the boat can be turned out against the maximum list under which the lowering of the boats is possible.

A life jacket of an approved type, or other appliance of equal buoyancy and capable of being fitted on the body, shall be carried for every person on board, and in addition a sufficient number of life jackets or equivalent appliances suitable for children.

Each boat or raft is required to have a minimum number of certificated lifeboatmen, by which is meant a member of the crew who holds a certificate of efficiency issued under the authority of the administration concerned, in accordance with the regulations of the Convention. Special duties for emergencies shall be allotted to each member of the crew and the muster list must show these special duties and indicate each man's station and his duties.

The carriage, either as cargo or ballast, of goods which by reason of their nature, quantity, or mode of stowage, are, either singly or collectively, likely to endanger the lives of the passengers or the safety of the ship, is forbidden.

Limitation of Liability of Vessel Owners. While the civil as well as the common law made the owner responsible to the whole extent of damage caused by the wrongful act or negligence of the master or crew; Davies 175; 9 East 432; under the maritime law of modern Europe the owner's liability was merely coextensive with his interest in the vessel and its freight, and ceased by his abandonment and surrender of these to the parties sustaining loss.

As said by Brown, J., in The Main v. Williams, 152 U. S. 126, 14 Sup. Ct. 486, 38 L. Ed. 381, this rule is stated in the code known as Consolato del Mare, but there is no reference to it in the Laws of Oleron, or of Wisby, or of the Hanse towns, which were the maritime codes followed in Northern Europe (see Code). The earliest legislation in England was in 1734.

The whole subject is now covered in England by the Merchants Shipping Act of 1894, which provides for limiting the liability of the shipowners in the case of loss of life or personal injury to an aggregate amount not exceeding £15 for each ton of the ship's tonnage, and in respect to loss or damage to vessels, goods, merchandise or other things, to an aggregate amount not exceeding £8 for each ton of the ship's tonnage. See MacLachlan, Merchant Shipping (5th Ed.) p. 129.

U. S. R. S. § 4282 (Act March 3, 1851), provides that the liability of the owner of any vessel for embezzlement, loss or destruction, etc., of any person or any property, etc., on board a vessel, or for any loss or damage by collision or for any act, matter or thing, loss, damage or forfeiture, done, occasioned or incurred "without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount of value of the interest of such owner in such vessel or her freight then pending." Section 4284 provides for apportionment of losses between the owners. The act of February 18, 1875, excepted from section 4282 the owner of any canal-boat, barge or lighter or vessel of any description used in rivers or inland navigation. The act of June 26, 1884, provided that the individual liability of the shipowner shall be limited to the proportion of the debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole; "and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of the vessel on account of the same shall not exceed the value of such vessel and freight pending," provided that this provision shall not prevent any claimant from joining all the owners in one action, and shall not apply to wages.

The act of June 19, 1886, extended the provisions of the act of 1884 to all sea-going vessels and all vessels used on lakes or rivers and all inland navigation, including canal-boats, barges and lighters which had been exempted by the above act of 1875.

The act of 1884 extended the provisions of the act of 1851 (which applied only to cases ex delicto) to liability against contractual obligations incurred on account of the ownership in the vessel; Hughes, Adm. 308. See The Annie Faxon, 75 Fed. 312, 21 C. C. A. 366; Gokey v. Fort, 44 Fed. 364.

These acts were held constitutional; Lord v. S. S. Co., 102 U. S. 541, 26 L. Ed. 224; Craig v. Ins. Co., 141 U. S. 638, 12 Sup. Ct. 97, 35 L. Ed. 886.

Proceedings under U. S. R. S. § 4283 et seq., are exclusive of any separate suit against an owner on account of the ship. Every person may assert his claim in those proceedings; The San Pedro, 223 U. S. 365, 32 Sup. Ct. 275, 56 L. Ed. 473, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1221, where it was left undecided whether a highly meritorious salvage service is entitled to preference.

The benefits of the acts may be claimed by any part owner who had no "privity or knowledge" of the fault which gave rise to the liability; The S. A. McCaulley, 99 Fed.

302. This means the personal privity or knowledge of the owners, and not the mere privity or knowledge of their agents, except in the case of a corporation, where the privity or knowledge of the president or other high officer above the grade of an employee is the privity or knowledge of the corporation, and would defeat the right of the corporation to the exemption; In re Meyer, 74 Fed. 881; Kimball S. S. Co. v. Weisshaar, 194 U. S. 638, 24 Sup. Ct. 859, 48 L. Ed. 1162; Lord v. S. S. Co., 102 U. S. 541, 26 L. Ed. 224; The Colima, 82 Fed. 665; In re Jeremiah Smith & Sons, 193 Fed. 395, 113 C. C. A. 391.

The end of the voyage is the time as of which the exemption can be claimed, the voyage being taken as the unit. If the voyage is broken up by a disaster, as, for example, when the vessel is totally lost, that is taken as the time; The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468, 6 Sup. Ct. 1150, 30 L. Ed. 134. The part owners are liable each to the extent of their proportionate interest in the vessel, except that a part owner personally negligent, cannot claim the exemption at all; Whitcomb v. Emerson, 50 Fed. 128. The value of the vessel and pending freight is taken just after the accident, or end of the voyage, if the voyage is not broken up by the accident; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. Ed. 1001.

The owner must also surrender damages recovered from another vessel; O'Brien v. Miller, 168 U. S. 287, 18 Sup. Ct. 140, 42 L. Ed. 469; as well as pending freight; The Main v. Williams, 152 U. S. 122, 14 Sup. Ct. 486, 38 L. Ed. 381; but salvage and insurance need not be surrendered; The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468, 6 Sup. Ct. 1150, 30 L. Ed. 134; In re Meyer, 74 Fed. 881. Under the express provisions of the statute, all claims filed, whether they have an admiralty lien attached or are mere personal claims against the owner, are paid pro rata; The Catskill, 95 Fed. 700.

A claim for damages under a Delaware statute for death caused by tort extends to the case of a citizen of that state wrongfully killed while on the high seas in a vessel belonging to a Delaware corporation by the negligence of another vessel belonging to a Delaware corporation, and this can be enforced against the owner of one of the vessels in admiralty, brought by such owner to limit his liability; The Hamilton, 207 U. S. 398, 28 Sup. Ct. 133, 52 L. Ed. 264.

In a proceeding to limit liability instituted by the owners of a foreign vessel lost on the high seas, the right to exemption must be determined by the law as administered in the courts of the United States; La Bourgogne, 210 U. S. 95, 28 Sup. Ct. 664, 52 L. Ed. 973, where it was held that the fault of the officers and crew of that vessel resulting in the collision and loss of that vessel was not with the privity and knowledge of the owner, so as to deprive the owner of the right to limited liability under the act of 1851 (distinguishing The Main v. Williams, 152 U. S. 122, 14

Sup. Ct. 486, 38 L. Ed. 381). It was held that the pending freight does not include the freight earned on the outward trip or any part of an annual subsidy contract from a foreign government for carrying the mails; also, that in determining whether claims for wrongful death are enforceable in limited liability proceedings, though based on a right of action given by the country to which the vessel belongs, the question of whether the vessel was in fault or the fund liable must be determined by the law of the United States.

The case of The Titanic, 233 U. S. 718, 34 Sup. Ct. 754, 58 L. Ed. —, was held to fall within the general provision that a foreign ship may resort to the courts of the United States for limitation of liability; following The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. Ed. 1001. It was also held that the owner of such foreign vessel can maintain such proceedings where it appears that the law of the foreign country to which the vessel belongs makes provision for the vessel owner's liability upon terms and conditions different from those prescribed by the statutes of this country. This case settled only the jurisdictional question. In the same proceedings it will be open for claimants to prove that the fault was committed with the privity and knowledge of the owner.

In Ryan et al. v. Oceanic Steam & Navigation Co., 30 T. L. R. 302, a case brought under Lord Campbell's act for loss of life on the Titanic, a judgment based upon a verdict that her loss was due to negligent navigation, was sustained in the Court of Appeal in England.

Where, in a collision, both vessels belong to the same owner, and both are in fault, both must be surrendered; The San Rafael, 141 Fed. 270, 72 C. C. A. 388.

The Harter Act is an act limiting the liability of owners. This, however, regulates not so much the question of their liability in amount as the question whether they are responsible at all or not. For the text of that act and its application, see HARTER ACT.

VEST. To give an immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment. An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment; and an estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 2.

VESTED ESTATE. A vested estate, whether present or future, may be absolutely or defeasibly vested. L'Etourneau v. Henquet, 89 Mich. 428, 50 N. W. 1077, 28 Am. St. Rep. 310.

VESTED INTEREST. See next title.

VESTED REMAINDER. An estate by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in futuro, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate has been spent. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1831. It imports, ex vi termini, a present title in the remainderman; Starnes v. Hill, 112 N. C. 1, 16 S. E. 1011, 22 L. R. A. 598. See REMAINDER; Tudor, L. Cas. R. P. 820.

VESTED RIGHT. It is interesting to note that in Pearsall v. R. Co., 161 U. S. 668, 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 40 L. Ed. 838, it was said in the opinion of the court by Brown, J.: "I have epitomized these cases (explaining the meaning of the words 'vested rights,' when used in the charters of railroads and other similar corporations) not because they have any decisive bearing upon the question at issue, but for the purpose of showing the general trend of opinion in this court on the subject of corporate charters and vested rights."

See RIGHT.

VESTIGIAL WORDS. Those contained in a statute which by reason of a succession of statutes on the same subject-matter, amending or modifying previous provisions of the same, are rendered useless or meaningless by such amendments. They should not be permitted to defeat the fair meaning of the statute; Saltonstall v. Birtwell, 164 U. S. 70, 17 Sup. Ct. 19, 41 L. Ed. 348.

VESTING ORDER. An order which may be granted by the chancery division of the high court of justice (and formerly by chancery) passing the legal estate in lieu of a conveyance.

VESTRY. The place in a church where the priest's vestments are kept. Also an assembly of the minister, church wardens, and parishioners, held in the vestry of the church. There was formerly no separate body known as a vestry, except in a few parishes, especially in the city of London, where there existed by custom a representative body called a "Select Vestry." White, Church Law 306.

In America, from an early date, a body elected by a church congregation to administer the affairs of the church. They were provided for in New York by the Duke of York's laws of 1664; and in Maryland by an act of 1692. They can act only when assembled; People's Bank v. Roman Catholic Church, 109 N. Y. 512, 17 N. E. 408; United Brethren Church v. Vandusen, 37 Wis. 54; they may preserve order; Beckett v. Lawrence, 7 Abb. Prac. N. S. (N. Y.) 403.

VESTURE OF LAND. A phrase including all things, trees excepted, which grow upon the surface of the land and clothe it externally.

He who has the vesture of land has a right, generally, to exclude others from entering upon the superficies of the soil. Co. Litt. 4 b; Hamm. N. P. 151. See 7 East 200.

VETERA STATUTA (Lat.). The name of vetera statuta—ancient statutes—has been given to the statutes commencing with Magna Carta and ending with those of Edward II. Crabb, Eng. Law 222. See NOVA STATUTA.

VETERINARY SURGEON. One who treats domestic animals for injuries or diseases. The same rules are applicable to the case of a veterinary surgeon bringing an action to recover for the value of his services as are applicable to other surgeons; Boom v. Reed, 69 Hun 428, 23 N. Y. Supp. 421. He must possess and exercise a reasonable degree of learning and skill, and use reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in the exercise of his skill and the application of his knowledge; Boom v. Reed, 69 Hun 428, 23 N. Y. Supp. 421; Barney v. Pinkham, 29 Neb. 352, 45 N. W. 694, 26 Am. St. Rep. 389; Hathorn v. Richmond, 48 Vt. 557. See PHYSICIAN.

VETITUM NAMIUM (Law Lat. vetitum, forbidden, namium, taking). Where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin, the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction in placitum de vetito namio. Co. 2d Inst. 140; 2 Bla. Com. 148. See WITHERNAM; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 575.

VETO (Lat. I forbid). A term including the refusal of the executive officer whose assent is necessary to perfect a law which has been passed by the legislative body, and the message which is usually sent to such body by the executive, stating such refusal and the reasons therefor. See EXECUTIVE POWER.

By the constitution of the United States (art. 1, § 7), the president has a power to prevent the enactment of any law, by refusing to sign the same after its passage, unless it be subsequently enacted by a vote of two-thirds of each house. When a bill is engrossed, and has received the sanction of both houses, it is transmitted to the president for his approbation. If he approves it, he signs it. If he does not, he sends it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, and that house enters the objections on the journal and may proceed to reconsider the bill. If passed by that house by a two-thirds (yea and nay vote) it is sent, with the objections, to the other house; if it pass that house by a like vote, it becomes a law. If not returned by the president in ten days (Sundays excepted) it becomes a law, unless congress by adjournment prevents its return. Kent. Similar powers are possessed by the governors of many of the states. See STATUTE.

The veto power of the British sovereign has not been exercised for two centuries. It was exercised once during the reign of Queen Anne. 10 Edinburgh Rev. 411; Parks, Lect. 126. But anciently the king frequently replied, Le roi s'aviserà, (the king will consider it), which was in effect withholding his assent. "The king must assent to, or (as it is inaccurately expressed) cannot veto, any bill passed by parliament." Dicey, Constit. 25. See Hearn, Govt. of England; Encycl. Br. s. v. Veto.

VEXATION. The injury or damage which is suffered in consequence of the tricks of another.

VEXATIOUS ACTIONS ACT. An act of parliament of 1896, authorizing the High Court to make an order, on the application of the attorney-general, that a person shown to be habitually and vexatiously litigious, without reasonable ground, shall not institute legal proceedings in that or any other court, without leave of the High Court judge thereof, upon satisfactory proof that such legal proceedings are not an abuse of the process of the court and that there is a prima facie ground therefor. The order when made is published in the Gazette. See 76 L. T. 351; [1913] W. N. 274 (Div. Ct.).

VEXATIOUS SUIT. A suit which has been instituted maliciously, and without probable cause, whereby a damage has ensued to the defendant.

The suit is either a criminal prosecution, a conviction before a magistrate, or a civil action. The suit need not be altogether without foundation: if the part which is groundless has subjected the party to an inconvenience to which he would not have been exposed had the valid cause of complaint alone been insisted on, it is injurious; 4 Co. 14; Ray v. Law, 1 Pet. C. C. 210, Fed. Cas. No. 11,592; Sommer v. Wilt, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 19, 23.

To make it vexatious the suit must have been instituted maliciously. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

VEXED QUESTION. A question or point of law often discussed or agitated, but not determined or settled.

VI ET ARMIS (Lat.). With force and arms. See TRESPASS.

VIA (Lat.). A cart-way,—which also includes a foot-way and a horse-way. See WAY.

VIABILITY (from the French vie). Capability of living. A term used to denote the power a new-born child possesses of continuing its independent existence; a power not acquired as a rule before the sixth or seventh month of intra-uterine life.

That a child may be viable, it is not only necessary that its organs should be in a normal state, but also that all the physiological and pathological conditions which are capable of opposing the establishment or prolongation of its life should be absent.

Although a child may be born with every appearance of health, yet, from some malformation, it may not possess the physical power to maintain life. Under these circumstances, it can only be said to have existed temporarily or only so long indeed as was necessary to prove that it was not viable.

It is important to make a distinction between a viable and a non-viable child, although the latter may outlive the former. The viable child may die of some disease on the day of its birth, while a non-viable child may live a fortnight. The former possesses the organs essential to life, in their integrity; while the latter has some imperfection which prevents the complete establishment of life.

As it is no evidence of non-viability that a child dies within a few hours of its birth, neither is it a proof of viability if a child appears to be well and the function of respiration be fully established.

The question of viability presents itself to the medical jurist under two aspects: first, with respect to infanticide, and second, with respect to testamentary gifts and inheritances. Billard on Infants, translation by James Stewart, M. D., Appendix; Briand, Méd. Lég. 1ère partie, c. 6, art. 2. See 2 Savigny, Dr. Rom. Append. III., for a learned discussion of this subject; also 2 Taylor, Med. Jurispr.

VICARAGE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The living or benefice of a vicar: usually consisting of the small tithes. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law 75, 79.

VICARIUS APOSTOLICUS. An officer through whom the Pope exercises authority in parts remote, and who is sometimes sent with episcopal functions into provinces where there is no bishop resident or there has been a long vacancy in the see, or into infidel or heretical countries. 2 Phill. Int. L. 529.

VICE. A term used in the civil law and in Louisiana, by which is meant a defect in a thing; an imperfection. For example, epilepsy in a slave, roaring and crib-biting in a horse. Redhibitory vices are those for which the seller will be compelled to annul a sale and take back the thing sold. Pothier, Vente 203; La. Civ. Code, art. 2498.

VICE-ADMIRAL. The title of a naval officer next in rank after an admiral.

Under R. S. § 1362 it was provided that the grades of admiral and vice-admiral in the United States navy should not be filled and that when a vacancy occurred the grades should cease to exist.

VICE-ADMIRAL OF THE COAST. A county officer in England appointed by the admiral "to be answerable to the high admiral for all the coasts of the sea, when need and occasion shall be." He also had power to arrest ships, when found within a certain district, for the use of the king. His office was judicial as well as ministerial. The appointment to the office is still made for a few countries of England. For a detailed account of this office and its functions, see "The Office of Vice-Admiral of the Coast," by Sir G. Sherston Baker.

VICE-CHANCELLOR. A judge, assistant to the chancellor.

He held a separate court, and his decrees were subject to be reviewed by the chancellor. He was first appointed 53 Geo. III. In 1841 two additional vice-chancellors were appointed; and there were then three vice-chancellors' courts. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 54, n. There is a vice-chancellor of the county palatine of Lancaster; 3 Steph. Com. 331. By the Judicature Act of 1873, the vice-chancellors were transferred to the high court of justice and appointed judges of the chancery division, and on their death or retirement their successors were styled judges of her majesty's high court of justice. Sir L. Shadwell was the last of the vice-chancellors. The office exists in New Jersey. See CHANCELLOR; CHANCELLOR'S COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES.

VICE-CONSUL. An officer who performs the duties of a consul within a part of the district of a consul, or who acts in the place of a consul. He is not a deputy, but an acting consul; In re Herris, 33 Fed. 165. The president (R. S. §§ 1695, 1703) can appoint vice-consuls and fix their compensation; U. S. v. Eaton, 169 U. S. 331, 18 Sup. Ct. 374, 42 L. Ed. 767.

See CONSUL.

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. The title of the second officer, in point of rank, in the government of the United States.

As to his election, see PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. His office in point of duration is coextensive with that of the president. The constitution of the United States, art. i. s. 3, clause 4, directs that "the vice-president of the United States shall be president of the senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided." And by article 2, s. 1, clause 6, it is provided that "in case of the removal of the president from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the vice-president."

When the vice-president exercises the office of president, he is called the President of the United States.

VICE-PRINCIPAL. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

VICE VERSA (Lat.). On the contrary; on opposite sides.

VICECOMES. The sheriff.

VICECOMES NON MISIT BREVE (Lat.) the sheriff did not send the writ). An entry made on the record when nothing has been done by virtue of a writ which has been directed to the sheriff.

VICINAGE. The neighborhood; the venue. See Ex parte McNeeley, 36 W. Va. 84, 14 S. E. 436, 15 L. R. A. 226, 32 Am. St. Rep. 831; JURY.

VICINETUM (Lat.). The neighborhood; vicinage; the venue. Co. Litt. 158 b. See VISNE.

VICINITY. Etymologically, by common understanding, it admits of a wider latitude than proximity or contiguity, and may embrace a more extended space than that lying contiguous to the place in question; and, as applied to towns and other territorial divisions, may embrace those not adjacent; Halley v. Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 545; Langley v. Barnstead, 63 N. H. 246. In a statute authorizing the extension of the street and an appointment of benefits upon lots in the vicinity the term is a relative one and does not denote any particular definite distance from the extension of the street but must be construed according to the circumstances of each case; Hancock St. Extension, 18 Pa. 26. The meaning of vicinity of a city must depend upon the size of the city, etc., and its particular surroundings; Timmerman v. Dever, 52 Mich. 36, 17 N. W. 230, 50 Am. Rep. 240. See NEIGHBORHOOD.

VICONTIEL. Belonging to the sheriff.

VIDELICET. A Latin adverb, signifying to wit, that is to say, namely; scilicet. This word is usually abbreviated viz.

The office of the videlicet is to mark that the party does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances alleged; and in such cases he is not required to prove them; Steph. Pl. 309; Gleason v. McVickar, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 42; Dicken v. Smith, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 209. See Yelv. 94; 3 Saund. 291 a; 4 B. & P. 465; Brown v. Berry, 47 Ill. 175. See SS.; SCILICET.

VIDUITY. Widowhood.

VIEW. Inspection; a prospect.

See ANCIENT LIGHTS; NUISANCE; VIEWERS; 16 Am. L. Rev. 628; Wakefield v. R. R., 63 Me. 385.

VIEW, DEMAND OF. In most real and mixed actions, in order to ascertain the identity of land claimed with that in the tenant's possession, the tenant is allowed, after the demandant has counted, to demand a view of the land in question, or, if the subject of claim be rent, or the like, a view of the land out of which it issues. Com. Dig. View; 2 Saund. 45 b.

This right, however, is confined to real or mixed actions; for in personal actions the view does not lie. In the action of dower unde nihil habet, it has been much questioned whether the view be demandable or not; 2 Saund. 44, n. 4; and there are other real and mixed actions in which it is not allowed. The view being granted, the course of proceeding was to issue a writ commanding the sheriff to cause the defendant to have a view of the land. The duty of suing out the writ lies upon the demandant; and when the sheriff causes view to be made, the demandant is to show to the tenant in all ways possible, the thing in demand, with its metes and bounds. On the return of the writ into court, the demandant must count de novo—that is, declare again; Com. Dig. Pleader (2 Y 3); and the pleadings proceed to issue. This proceeding of demanding view is, in the present rarity of real actions, unknown in practice. It is said in Union P. R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 251, 11 Sup. Ct. 1000, 35 L. Ed. 734, that there are only two cases in the books (1 Arn. 244; 8 Dowl. Pr. C. 201) where orders to inspect a building were requested. Both were refused.

The right to grant an application for the jury to view the premises during the trial of a case rests in the discretion of the trial judge; Andrews v. Youmans, 82 Wis. 81, 52 N. W. 23; Saint v. Guerrerio, 17 Colo. 448, 30 Pac. 335, 31 Am. St. Rep. 320; Jenkins v. R. Co., 110 N. C. 438, 15 S. E. 193; Leidlein v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 586, 55 N. W. 367. Where the facts are such that they can be accurately described to the jury the court may properly deny a request to view the premises; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wrape, 4 Ind. App. 100, 30 N. E. 428; Roberts v. Com., 94 Ky. 499, 22 S. W. 845; Mise v. Com. (Ky.) 80 S. W. 457, where a careful survey had been made and the place was 15 miles distant over mountain roads; also where a motion is made to have the jury view the scene of an accident several years after it happened, and where the condition of the premises had changed in the meanwhile; Stewart v. R. Co., 89 Mich. 315, 50 N. W. 852, 17 L. R. A. 539.

In an action of nuisance against a fertilizer company, it was held that an inspection of the premises was discretionary; Jones v. Royster Guano Co., 6 Ga. App. 506, 65 S. E. 361. A request for a view of the place of an accident should not be made before the jury; Hearn v. R. Co., 1 Boyce (Del.) 271, 76 Atl. 629. The trial judge may accompany the jury to the place of view; Lee v. R. Co., 84 S. C. 125, 65 S. E. 1031.

It is error to tell the jury that the verdict may be based on what they saw, and not on the evidence; Payson v. Milan, 144 Ill. App. 204; Keller v. Harrison, 151 Ia. 320, 128 N.

W. 551, 131 N. W. 53, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 300; but it is held that what they saw may be applied in determining the credibility of the testimony; American States Security Co. v. Ry. Co., 139 Wis. 199, 120 N. W. 844.

The practice of directing a view should be exercised with caution, and a view not allowed unless the jury cannot otherwise reach a just conclusion. Refusal to view the locality of a fire is proper; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Frost (Ky.) 124 S. W. 821.

In a controversy over the price of a cow, it was error to permit an inspection of the cow, if she were not shown to be in the same condition as at the sale; Mitchell v. Rowley, 63 Misc. 643, 118 N. Y. Supp. 751; but it was held a proper exercise of discretion in an action for deceit in selling a mule, to permit the jury to see the mule; Sulser v. Sayre, 4 Ala. App. 452, 58 South. 758; and in an action for death by wrongful act, the widow's expectancy of life may be reckoned by the jury upon a personal inspection of her, in the absence of other proof; Helena Gas Co. v. Rogers, 104 Ark. 59, 147 S. W. 473.

A view is not a right of the accused; State v. Hancock, 148 Mo. 488, 50 S. W. 112. The jury may not measure distances at the place in order to verify the evidence; State v. Mortensen, 26 Utah, 312, 73 Pac. 562, 633; a denial of a request for a view, made after the jury had retired, and with notice to the district attorney, was proper; State v. Sirmay, 40 Utah, 525, 122 Pac. 748 (where there was a statute).

In Pennsylvania (act of 1895), in proceedings under eminent domain, either party may require a view of the premises.

Where, on a trial for murder, the jury viewed the locus of the crime, but the accused, at his special request, did not accompany them, the court held that the view was not a part of the trial, and a conviction was affirmed; People v. Thorn, 156 N. Y. 286, 50 N. E. 947, 42 L. R. A. 368 (on the ground that the view was not part of the trial). Authority and reason are said to be the other way; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 212, citing People v. Palmer, 43 Hun 401; People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 623, 10 Pac. 169.

See PHYSICAL EXAMINATION; JURY.

VIEW OF FRANKPLEDGE. An examination to see if every freeman within the district had taken the oath of allegiance, and found nine freemen pledges for his peaceable demeanor. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 7. It took place, originally, once in each year, after Michaelmas, and subsequently twice, after Easter and Michaelmas, at the sheriff's town or court-leet at that season held. See COURT-LEET; SHERIFF'S TOWN.

VIEWERS. Persons appointed by the courts to see and examine certain matters and make a report of the facts, together with their opinion, to the court. In practice, they are usually appointed to lay out roads, and the like.

VIFGAGE. See VADIUM VIVUM.

VIGILANCE. Proper attention in proper time.

The law requires a man who has a claim to enforce it in proper time, while the adverse party has it in his power to defend himself; and if by his neglect to do so he cannot afterwards establish such claim, the maxim vigilantibus non dormientibus leges subveniunt acquires full force in such case. See LACHES.

VILL. In England this word was used to signify the parts into which a hundred or wapentake was divided. Fortescue, de Laud. c. 24. See Co. Litt. 115 b. It also signified a town or city. Barrington, Stat. 133.

The proper English word for the village community, and the only one for which there is ancient authority, is "township," afterwards latinized as "vill." Pollock, English Manor, in Oxford Lectures 124. See VILLAGE; TOWNSHIP.

VILLAGE. Any small assemblage of houses for dwellings or business, or both, in the country, whether they are situated upon regularly laid out streets and alleys, or not. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Spangler, 71 Ill. 569. See Russell v. Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 410, 45 N. W. 356, 35 L. R. A. 396, n.

The fabric of the village community, or, to speak more generally and correctly, of the township community, is substantially organic. It grows, and is not based on agreement, people cannot accede to it or recede from it without being admitted, by some natural process, birth, marriage, adoption, to the union of the holdings, and, theoretically, it is the holdings in their unconscious and unwilling combination which form the group and define its aims. External forces—the action of the king, the intrusion of foreign conquerors, the misdeeds of a magnate may cut through this customary combination and modify it; it may grow and send out offshoots, but all these facts will not be the results of any artificial agreement binding only those who have entered in under certain conditions: the reclaiming of new fields, the extension of the original unit and its shrinking through colonization are events which proceed from the organic whole or from outward pressure and not from passing agreements of certain joint owners. Vinogradoff, Growth of the Manor 325.

See HAMLET; TOWN; TOWNSHIP; VILL.

VILLAIN. An epithet used to cast contempt and contumely on the person to whom it is applied. To call a man a villain in a letter written to a third person will entitle him to an action without proof of special damages. 1 B. & P. 331.

VILLANUS. See VILLEIN.

VILLEIN. The villeins are a composite class. They are made up of those slaves which were known to the Anglo-Saxon law and of those free yet dependent cultivators of the soil whose tenure was defined by the Norman lawyers to be unfree. These diverse classes were thrown together by the Norman and Angevin lawyers and classed as villeins; and under the influence of conceptions borrowed from Roman law many of the rules and maxims of the Roman conception of slavery were applied to them. Their lord has absolute power over their bodies and their goods. He can sell them and treat them as he pleases; for they are his chattels. They are all equally things—"there are no degrees of personal unfreedom." Subsequently the general theory of the law was modified in every direction, and the status of the villein became one of the greatest curiosities of the mediæval common law.

The villein held a plot of land and made a living out of it; while the lord might change his tenement, it appears that sales of villeins were infrequent. There came to be a great gulf between the villein and the slave. While the lord might imprison and beat his villein, the criminal law protected him against grosser forms of violence. While he was, as against his lord, rightless, or nearly so, as against the rest of the world he was regarded as free. It was purely a relation of a person to his lord. It came to be a very relative kind of prædial serfdom, tempered by custom of the manor and by communal life. In the last phase, the chief profit to be made from villeins is from manumissions. At the end of the sixteenth century, both villein tenure and villein status were obsolete. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 376-395. See also A. M. Eaton in 1902 Rept. Am. Bar Assoc. 299.

See SERF.

VILLEIN SOCAGE (Sax. soc, free, or Lat. soca, a plough). The villeins, from living on one piece of land, came at last to be allowed to hold it by tenure of villeinage, e. g. uncertain menial services. These services at last became fixed; the tenure was then called villein socage. 1 Washb. R. P. 26.

VILLEINAGE. See VILLEIN.

VILLENIOUS JUDGMENT. In Old English Law. A judgment given by the common law in attain, or in cases of conspiracy. Its effects were to make the object of it lose his liberam legem and become infamous. He forfeited his goods and chattels, and his lands during life; and this barbarous judgment further required that his lands should be wasted, his houses razed, his trees rooted up, and that his body should be cast into prison. He could not be a juror or witness. 4 Bla. Com. 136.

VINCULO MATRIMONII. See A VINCULO MATRIMONII; DIVORCE.

VINCULUM JURIS. In Civil Law. The tying of two persons together in an obligation. It is implied in the old contract of nexum. Hunter, Rom. L. 453.

VINDICATIO REI. See CONVICTIO.

VINDICTIVE DAMAGES. See DAMAGES; EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

VINTNER. One who sells wine. A covenant prohibiting the trade of a vintner includes a person selling wines not to be drunk on the premises. 25 L. T. N. s. 312.

VIOLATION. The result of an act done unlawfully and with force. In the English statute of 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2, it is declared to be high treason in any person who shall violate the king's companion; and it is equally high treason in her to suffer willingly such violation. This word has been construed under this statute to mean carnal knowledge. 3 Inst. 9; Bacon, Abr. Treason (E).

VIOLENCE. The abuse of force. That force which is employed against common right, against the laws, and against public liberty. Merl. Répert.

Violence is synonymous with physical force, and the two are used interchangeably, in relation to assaults, by elementary writers on criminal law. State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 212. See ASSAULT; ROBBERY.

VIOLENT. Not natural or spontaneous, not intentional, voluntary, expected or usual. Bacon v. Acc. Ass'n, 44 Hun 606.

VIOLENTLY. In Pleading. This word was formerly supposed to be necessary in an indictment, in order to charge a robbery from the person; but it has been holden unnecessary; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law *244. The words "feloniously and against the will," usually introduced in such indictments, seem to be sufficient. It is usual, also, to aver a putting in fear; though this does not seem to be requisite.

VIRGA. An obsolete word, which signifies a rod or staff, such as sheriffs, bailiffs, and constables carry as a badge or ensign of their office. More commonly, spelled verge, q. v. Hence verger, one who carried a white wand before the judges. Toml. A verger now commonly signifies an inferior officer in a cathedral or parish church. Moz. & W. The stick or wand with which persons are in England admitted as tenants.

VIRGATA. A quarter of an acre of land. It might also be used to express a quarter of a hide of land.

Acres did not always contain the same quantity of land. The acre was usually, but not always, estimated by a day's work, as a man might in a day plow a strip that is four rods wide and forty long. But the rods employed in two neighboring villages were not strictly, or even approximately, equal. When an acre was divided, it was always by a line that was parallel, not to its short ends, but to its long sides, for convenience in plowing, and so when men thought of dividing it, they spoke only of its breadth. Hence it follows that the quarter of an acre is a "rood" or "yard," or virga or virgata of land. Its width is a rod or land-yard. The typical tenement is a hide. If a man is given a quarter of a hide (an equitable quarter, equal in value as well as in extent to every remaining quarter), he is given a quarter of every acre in the hide. The virgate is not a primary unit like the hide, the rod or the acre. It is derivative; it is compound. In its origin it is a rod's breadth in every acre of a hide. Maitl. Domesday Book 334.

The hide was divided into virgates and acres. Each acre generally consisted of four rods or furrows lying side by side. Hence the virga or rod meant the quarter of an acre. But by reckoning in hides and not in acres, "virgate," which means one-fourth of an acre, is used to signify one-fourth of a hide, i. e., a holding of about thirty acres in the common fields. 2 Holds. Hist. E. L. 56.

VIRGINIA. One of the thirteen original United States.

The name was given to the colony in honor of Queen Elizabeth. In 1606, James I. granted letters patent for planting colonies in Virginia. The government prescribed was that each should have a council, consisting of thirteen persons, appointed by the king, to govern and order all matters according to laws and instructions given them by the king. There was also a council in England, of thirteen persons, appointed by the crown to have the supervising, managing, and direction of all matters that should concern the government of the colonies. This charter was followed by royal instructions dated the 20th November, 1606. See 1 Hening, Va. Stat. 76, 571. Under this charter a settlement was made at Jamestown in 1607, by the first colony. Upon the petition of the company, a new charter was granted by king James, on the 23d May, 1609, to the treasurer and company of the first (or southern) colony for the further enlargement and explanation of the privileges of that company. 1 Hening, Stat. 80.

This charter granted to the company in absolute property the lands extending from Cape or Point Comfort (at the mouth of James River) along the sea-coast two hundred miles to the northward, and from the same point along the sea-coast two hundred miles to the southward, and up into the land throughout, from sea to sea, west and northwest, and, also, all islands lying within one hundred miles of the coast of both seas of the precinct aforesaid. A new council in England was established, with power to the company to fill all vacancies therein by election.

On the 12th of March, 1611/12, king James granted a third charter to the first company, enlarging its domain so as to include all islands within three hundred leagues from its borders on the coast of either sea. In 1612, a considerable proportion of lands previously held and cultivated in common was divided into three-acre lots and a lot appropriated in absolute right to each individual. Not long afterwards, fifty acres were surveyed and delivered to each of the colonists. In 1618, by a change of the constitution of the colony, burgesses elected by the people were made a branch of the legislature. Up to this time the settlement had been gradually increasing in number, and in 1624, upon a writ of quo warranto, a judgment was obtained dissolving the company and revesting its power in the crown. In 1651 the plantation of Virginia came, by formal act, under the obedience and government of the commonwealth of England, the colony, however, still retaining its former constitution. A new charter was to be granted, and many important privileges were secured. In 1680 a change was made in the colonial government, divesting the burgesses of the exercise of judicial power in the last resort, as had before that time been practised by that body and allowing appeals from judgments of the general courts, composed of the governor and council, to the king in council, where the matter in controversy exceeded the value of £300 sterling. Marshall, Col. 163; 1 Campb. 337.

By the treaty of 1763, all the conquests made by the French in North America, including the territory east of the Mississippi, were ceded to Great Britain.

The constitution of the colonial government of Virginia seems never to have been precisely fixed and accurately adjusted in any written memorials that are now accessible. The powers exercised by the burgesses varied at different periods. The periods of their election and the length of time they continued in office it is difficult to ascertain from the records of colonial history, and the qualifications of voters to elect them varied much at different periods. See Rev. Code 38, Leigh's note; 2 Burk, App. L. On the 12th of June, 1776, a declaration of rights pertaining to the people, as a basis and foundation of government, was adopted by the convention. This declaration still remains a part of the Virginia Code. On the 29th of June, 1776, Virginia adopted a constitution by a unanimous vote of the convention. The Articles of Confederation were not finally adopted by congress until the 15th of November, 1777, and were adopted, subject to the ratification of the states. These articles were laid before the Virginia Assembly on the 9th of December, 1777, and on the 15th unanimously assented to. In compliance with the recommendation of congress, by a resolution of September 6, 1780, Virginia, by an act passed the 2d of January, 1781, proffered a cession of her western lands. The cession was finally completed and accepted in 1784. Virginia as early as 1785 prepared to erect Kentucky into a state, and this was finally effected in June, 1792.

The state constitution framed and adopted by Virginia in 1776 gave way to a second that was framed in convention, adopted by the people, and went into operation in 1830. This second constitution was superseded by a third, which was framed in convention of 1851, and, being adopted by the people, took effect in 1852.

A convention assembled at Alexandria February 13, 1864, composed of delegates from such portions of Virginia as were then within the lines of the Union army and had not been included in the recently formed state of West Virginia. This convention adopted a constitution April 11, 1864, but it was not submitted to the people for ratification. A constitution of the state was framed by a convention called under the reconstruction act of congress which met at Richmond and completed its labors in 1868. Under the authority of an act of congress approved April 10, 1869, the instrument was submitted to the vote of the people and adopted. The present constitution was adopted in 1902.

As to litigation between Virginia and West Virginia, see WEST VIRGINIA.

VIRILIA (Lat.). The privy members of a man, to cut off which was felony at common law, though the party consented to it. Bract. lib. 3, p. 144.

VIRTUTE OFFICII (Lat.). By virtue of his office.

VIS (Lat. force). Any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person or his property.

A person does anything by force (vis) when he does what he is forbidden to do by the owner. Hunter, Rom. L. 252.

VIS IMPRESSA (Lat.). Immediate force; original force. This phrase is applied to cases of trespass when a question arises whether an injury has been caused by a direct force or one which is indirect. When the original force, or vis impressa, had ceased to act before the injury commenced, then there is no force, the effect is mediate, and the proper remedy is trespass on the case.

When the injury is immediate consequence of the force, or vis proxima, trespass vi et armis lies; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3483.

VIS MAJOR (Lat.). A superior force. In law it signifies inevitable accident.

This term is used in the civil law in nearly the same way that the words act of God (q. v.) are used in the common law, but for some purposes it is a wider phrase; 1 C. P. Div. 429. Generally, no one is responsible for an accident which arises from the vis major; but a man may be so where he has stipulated that he would, and when he has been guilty of a fraud or deceit; 2 Kent 448.

A loss by vis major is one that results immediately from a natural cause without the intervention of man, and could not have been prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care. The George Shiras, 61 Fed. 300, 9 C. C. A. 511, 17 U. S. App. 528. See ACT OF GOD; PERIL OF THE SEA.

VISA. In Civil Law. The formula put upon an act, a register, a commercial book, in order to approve of it and authenticate it.

VISCOUNT (Lat. vice-comes). Used as an arbitrary title of honor, without any office pertaining to it, by Henry VI. for the first time. The sheriff or earl's deputy holds the office of vice-comes, of which viscount is a translation, but used, as we have just seen, in a different sense. The dignity of a viscount is next to and below that of an earl. 1 Bla. Com. 397.

VISÉ (Fr.). Countersigned; accepted; approved; e. g. in connection with a passport, and the approval or acceptance by an official of the nation in which it is being used.

VISIGOTHORUM, LEX ROMANA. See BREVIARIUM ALARICIANUM. The Code is being translated and published under the auspices of the Comparative Law Bureau of the American Bar Association.

VISINETUM. See VISNE.

VISIT, RIGHT OF. In International Law. The right of a public vessel to stop and board a private vessel on the high seas for the purpose of inspecting its papers and determining its character. The right of visit is determined by the right of search which accompanies it. See SEARCH, RIGHT OF.

VISITATION. The act of examining into the affairs of a corporation.

The power of visitation is applicable only to ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations. 1 Bla. Com. 480. The visitation of civil corporations is by the government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice. See 2 Kent 240. In the United States, the legislature is the visitor of all corporations founded by it for public purposes; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629.

All of the above was quoted in Guthrie v. Harkness, 199 U. S. 148, 157, 26 Sup. Ct. 4, 50 L. Ed. 130, 4 Ann. Cas. 433.

See ELEEMOSYNARY CORPORATION.

All eleemosynary corporations who are to receive the charity of the founder have visitors if they are ecclesiastical corporations; and if a particular visitor is not provided by the founder, then the Ordinary of the place is the visitor; if they are lay corporations, the founder and his heirs are perpetual visitors; 5 Mod. 404. It is a necessary incident of an eleemosynary corporation; 1 Mod. 82; "a power to correct abuses and to enforce due observance of the statutes of the charity, but not a power to revoke the gifts, to change uses or divest rights;" Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 229, per Story, J.

A visitor has the right of inspecting the affairs of the corporation, and superintending all officers who have charge of them according to the statutes of the founder, without any control or revision of any other person or body, except the judicial tribunals, by whose authority and jurisdiction he may be restrained and kept within the limits of the granted powers, and made to regard the general laws of the land; In re Murdock, 24 Mass. 303. No appeal lay from a visitor unless he visits qua Ordinary, when an appeal lay to the Crown in Chancery. It was said by Lord Camden that visitation is despotism uncontrolled and without appeal; Grant, Corp. 534. See, generally, Tudor, Charitable Trusts; Stephens, Statutes Relating to Ecclesiastical, etc., Institutions; Report of Oxford Commission (1852); 7 Com. Dig. 545; 21 Viner, Abr. 587. See 34 L. Mag. & Rev. 40, as to Oxford and Cambridge Universities.

In Massachusetts it is held that the visitation of eleemosynary corporations according to the common law is in force except as altered by statute; In re Murdock, 24 Mass. 303; such statutes may vest visitatorial power in the courts, in the absence of a personal visitor, or even where there is one; In re Taylor Orphan Asylum, 36 Wis. 534; but where visitatorial power is conferred on certain public officers, the courts may not interfere unless such visitors should act contrary to law; Nelson v. Cushing, 2 Cush. (56 Mass.) 519.

Even where a testator, in founding a hospital, directed that the trustees should annually report their acts to the court and give bonds, it was held that the court had no visitatorial power or other supervision; Jenkins v. Berry, 119 Ky. 350, 83 S. W. 594.

The visitatorial power of a court over a cemetery association does not authorize it to substitute its own business judgment for that of the association; Roanoke Cemetery Co. v. Goodwin, 101 Va. 605, 44 S. E. 769.

Under the visitatorial powers of a state over corporations doing business within its borders, it is competent for it to compel such corporations to produce their books and papers for investigation and to require the testimony of their officers and employees to ascertain whether its laws have been complied with, and this power extends to the production of books and papers kept outside of the state, and a statute requiring such production does not amount to an unreasonable search or seizure or a denial of due process of law; Consolidated R. Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658; Hammond P. Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645. A corporation, being the creature of the state, has not the constitutional right to refuse to submit its books and papers for an examination at the suit of the state, and an officer of a corporation charged with criminal violation of a statute cannot plead the criminality of the corporation as a refusal to produce its books; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652. A corporation is bound to furnish information when called for by the state, so far as reasonably possible, and state the facts which excuse them from answering more fully; State v. Express Co., 81 Minn. 87, 83 N. W. 465, 50 L. R. A. 667, 83 Am. St. Rep. 366; by statute the right exists in Kansas; see Western U. Tel. Co. v. Austin, 67 Kan. 208, 72 Pac. 850.

It may be considered that, to a certain extent, railroad commissions are the machinery created by law for the exercise of visitatorial power.

This power does not include the common law right of the shareholder to inspect the books of the corporation; Guthrie v. Harkness, 199 U. S. 148, 26 Sup. Ct. 4, 50 L. Ed. 130, 4 Ann. Cas. 433.

VISITATION BOOKS. Compilations made out or collected by the heralds in the circuits which their commissions authorized them to make, for the purpose of inquiring into the state of families and registering marriages and descents which were verified to them by oath. They are good evidence of pedigree. 3 Bla. Com. 105.

VISITOR. An inspector of the government, of corporations, or bodies politic. 1 Bla. Com. 482.

VISNE, VISINETUM. The neighborhood; a neighboring place; a place near at hand; the venue.

The district from which juries were drawn at common law. Ex parte McNeeley, 36 W. Va. 84, 14 S. E. 436, 15 L. R. A. 226, 32 Am. St. Rep. 831.

Formerly the visne was confined to the immediate neighborhood where the cause of action arose, and many verdicts were disturbed because the visne was too large, which becoming a great grievance, several statutes were passed to remedy the evil. The 21 James I. c. 13, gives aid after verdict, where the visne is partly wrong,—that is, where it is warded out of too many or too few places in the county named. The 16 & 17 Charles II. c. 8, goes further, and cures defects of the visne wholly, so that the cause is tried by a jury of the proper county. See VENUE.

VITAL STATISTICS. Public records kept by a state, city or other governmental subdivision, under a statutory provision, of births, marriages and deaths, and disease.

Certificates required by statute to be made by officers may, as a rule, be introduced in evidence; Marlow v. School Dist. No. 4, 29

Okl. 304, 116 Pac. 797. Duly authenticated copies of official registers of births &c., are admissible in evidence; Succession of Derigny, 128 La. 853, 55 South. 552; to show the cause of death; Healy v. Hoy, 115 Minn. 321, 132 N. W. 208; National Council of K. & L. of Security v. O'Brien, 112 Ill. App. 40; McKinstry v. Collins, 74 Vt. 147, 52 Atl. 438; so of a physician's certificate, filed in the health commissioner's office according to law and properly authenticated; Ohmeyer v. Woodmen Circle, 91 Mo. App. 189; contra, Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World v. Grandon, 64 Neb. 39, 89 N. W. 448; and of an unsigned and undated death certificate, not certified to be a part of the records of the office; Lucas v. Cattle Co., 186 Mo. 448, 85 S. W. 359. See WEATHER BUREAU.

An act requiring physicians and midwives to investigate and certify whether the birth was or was not legitimate, the name, residence, color or race, birthplace, age and occupation of the parents, the number of children the mother has borne, her maiden name, etc., for use in the bureau of vital statistics, and which provides no compensation for the collection of such information, is unconstitutional; State v. Boone, 84 Ohio St. 346, 95 N. E. 924, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 683; contra, Com. v. McConnell, 116 Ky. 358, 76 S. W. 41.

The Census Act of 1902 provides for collecting data of vital statistics.

VIVA VOCE (Lat. with living voice). Verbally. It is said a witness delivers his evidence viva voce when he does so in open court: the term is opposed to deposition. It is sometimes opposed to ballot: as, the people vote by ballot, but their representatives in the legislature vote viva voce.

VIVARY. A place where living things are kept: as, a park on land; or, in the water, as a pond.

VIVISECTION. It is permitted in England only upon license from the Home Office, and in some cases the place must be registered. The experiments must be performed with the object of advancing knowledge, which will be useful for saving or prolonging life, or for alleviating suffering, and not for the purpose of attaining manual skill, nor as illustrations to accompany lectures, unless it is certified that the illustrations are absolutely necessary for due instruction. The animal must, during the whole of the experiment, be under the influence of some anæsthetic, sufficiently strong to prevent it from feeling pain. In some cases the animal must be killed before recovering consciousness.

In Massachusetts, by the act of March 22, 1894, vivisection in the public schools is prohibited, and dissection is confined to certain classes, under penalty of a fine.

In a case against a physician for violating the act against cruelty to animals in vivisection dogs by way of experimental research, the trial judge charged that the law of Pennsylvania does not allow any one to inflict suffering on a dog for the purpose of obtaining scientific information; see 71 Leg. Int. Phila. 508.

VIVUM VADIUM. See VADIUM VIVUM.

VOCATIO IN JUS (Lat.). In Roman Law. According to the practice in the legis actiones of the Roman law, a person having a demand against another verbally cited him to go with him to the prætor: in jus eamus; in jus te voco. This was denominated vocatio in jus. If a person thus summoned refused to go, he could be compelled by force to do so, unless he found a vindex,—that is, procurator, or a person to undertake his cause. When the parties appeared before the prætor, they went through the particular formalities required by the action applicable to the cause. If the cause was not ended the same day, the parties promised to appear again at another day, which was called vadi-monium.

VOCIFEROUS. In a statute forbidding the use of loud and vociferous language, making a loud outcry; clamorous; noisy. Webst.; Anderson v. State (Tex.) 20 S. W. 359.

VOID. That which has no force or effect. This word is often used as in effect meaning "voidable" only; Bennett v. Mattingly, 110 Ind. 202, 10 N. E. 299, 11 N. E. 792; and is seldom, unless in a very clear case, to be regarded as implying a complete nullity, but is to be taken in a legal sense, subject to a large qualification in view of all the circumstances calling for its application and the rights and interest to be affected in a given case; Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 552. See Kearney v. Vaughan, 50 Mo. 287.

The term "void" can only accurately be applied to those contracts that have no effect whatsoever and which are mere nullities, such as those which are against law, illegal, criminal, or in contravention of law and incapable of confirmation or ratification; hence a married woman's deed defectively acknowledged is not void; Downs v. Blount, 170 Fed. 15, 95 C. C. A. 289, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076. It is rarely that things are wholly void and without force and effect as to all persons and for all purposes, and incapable of being made otherwise. Things are voidable which are valid and effectual until they are avoided by some act, while things are often said to be void which are without validity until confirmed; Toy Toy v. Hopkins, 212 U. S. 542, 29 Sup. Ct. 416, 53 L. Ed. 644.

In formal instruments it has been held to mean voidable; 4 B. & Ald. 401; 4 Bing. N. C. 395; and in contracts of infants; 14 Ir. C. L. 61.

When a condition of forfeiture in a contract of sale of real estate, declaring it to be null and void in case of failure on the part of the vendee to perform, is plainly for the benefit of the vendor, void means voidable, with an election in the vendor to waive or to insist upon the condition; Stewart v. Griffith, 217 U. S. 323, 30 Sup. Ct. 528, 54 L. Ed. 782, 19 Ann. Cas. 639.

The distinction between void and voidable transactions is a fundamental one, though it is often obscured by carelessness of language. An act or agreement void from the beginning has no legal effect at all except so far as any party to it incurs penal consequences. A voidable act on the contrary takes its full and proper legal effect unless, and until it is disputed, and set aside by some tribunal entitled so to do; Pollock, Contr. 9. A voidable contract has been defined to be such an agreement as that one of the parties is entitled at his option to treat as never having been binding on him; id. 9. As applied to contracts, the distinction between the terms void and voidable is often one of great practical importance, and wherever technical accuracy is required, the term void can only be properly applied to such contracts as are a mere nullity and incapable of ratification or confirmation; Allis v. Billings, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 417, 39 Am. Dec. 744. Agreements to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors are not void but merely voidable against the creditors, while valid between the parties; Pom. Contr. § 282.

The distinction between contracts which are illegal and those which are void has never been precisely worked out, but where a contract is merely void, its defect in this respect cannot affect collateral transactions otherwise in themselves valid, while an unlawful purpose taints collateral and innocent transactions; 7 L. Quart. Rev. 339. The general rule of law is that a contract made in violation of a statute is void; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 426, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 36 L. Ed. 759, and cases cited; Lingle v. Snyder, 160 Fed. 627, 87 C. C. A. 529. Contracts which are void at common law, because they are against public policy, like contracts prohibited by statute, are illegal as well as void; Harvey v. Merrill, 150 Mass. 1, 22 N. E. 49, 5 L. R. A. 200, 15 Am. St. Rep. 159. See ULTRA VIRES.

Among the contracts made illegal by statute are: those relating to usury; Fanning v. Dunham, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 122, 9 Am. Dec. 283; gaming contracts (see GAMING); wager contracts (see WAGER); those which tend to promote champerty and maintenance (q. v.), or those compounding felonies or suppressing public prosecution of criminals; 3 P. Wms. 276; those in restraint of trade (q. v.); Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Cable Co., 76 Miss. 731, 26 South. 370, 45 L. R. A. 223.

A contract binding the maker to do something opposed to the public policy of the state or nation, or which conflicts with the wants, interest, or prevailing sentiment of the people, or our obligations to the world, or is repugnant to the morals of the times, is void, however solemnly the same may be made; Greenh. Pub. Pol. Rule II., citing Jones v. Knowles, 30 Me. 402; and see Standard Lumber Co. v. Ice Co., 146 Fed. 359, 76 C. C. A. 639, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 467; and though made in another country where its validity is undoubted; L. R. 14 Ch. D. 351; Logan & Bryan v. Cable Co., 157 Fed. 570 (see LEX LOCI). The assignor of a contract has no better rights therein than the party to it, even if he had no notice of its illegality; Stevens v. Wood, 127 Mass. 123.

Among those contrary to public policy and illegal at common law are contracts in restraint of marriage or of trade, or of bidding at public auctions, or relating to marriage brokerage, to hinder legislation, whether public or private (see LOBBYING), or to promote the appointment of a party to an office, to influence public elections to office, or to remunerate officers in addition to their lawful fees for acts which they are bound to do by virtue of their office or to assign fees and profits of official positions requiring personal supervision (see OFFICER); or any contract involving the sale of personal influence; Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 276, 26 L. Ed. 539; Findlay v. Pertz, 66 Fed. 427, 13 C. C. A. 559, 29 L. R. A. 188; or to defraud the government; Fisher Electric Co. v. Iron Works, 116 Mich. 293, 74 N. W. 493; a contract between two contractors submitting separate bids for municipal work by which they agree to share the profits therefrom, should either of their bids be accepted; McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U. S. 639, 19 Sup. Ct. 839, 43 L. Ed. 1117 (the parties were held to have committed a fraud in combining their interests and concealing the fact); a contract by which one public officer contracts to perform the duties of another; Moore v. Cassily, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 708; a contract for services in securing contracts by favoritism from state officers by reason of social and political relations with such officers; Drake v. Lauer, 182 N. Y. 533, 75 N. E. 1129; a contract by a mother surrendering her child to a charitable institution; In re Sleep, 6 Pa. Dist. Rep. 256; contracts where the consideration is the commission of some crime or some flagrantly immoral act (see CONSIDERATION); Pom. Contr. § 282. So of a promise to marry after the death of a wife, the plaintiff knowing at the time that defendant had a wife; [1908] 1 K. B. 729; Paddock v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 99, 14 Am. Rep. 112; Noice v. Brown, 38 N. J. L. 228, 20 Am. Rep. 388; but not so of a promise to marry on the death of a divorced wife; Brown v. Odill, 104 Tenn. 250, 56 S. W. 840, 52 L. R. A. 660, 78 Am. St. Rep. 914. A promise of marriage in consideration of illicit sexual intercourse is void; Edmonds v. Hughes, 115 Ky. 561, 74 S. W. 283.

Contracts to locate and maintain railroad stations at specified points, or not to maintain them at other points, are void; Beasley v. R. Co., 115 Fed. 952, 53 C. C. A. 434; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. State, 31 Fla. 509, 13 South. 103, 20 L. R. A. 419, 34 Am. St. Rep. 30; Holladay v. Patterson, 5 Or. 177; Currie v. R. Co., 61 Miss. 725; and to maintain forever a terminus, shops and offices at a particular place; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393, 10 Sup. Ct. 846, 34 L. Ed. 385. A contract by which a stockholder is to receive the par value of his stock before the corporate debts are paid is void; Guaranty Trust Co. v. R. Co., 107 Fed. 311, 46 C. C. A. 305. So is a contract between a county and a bidder for an issue of its bonds, by which the latter agrees to prosecute a feigned suit to test their validity, the county to pay the expenses of the suit; Van Horn v. Kittitas County, 112 Fed. 1. A contract to furnish evidence to establish that a certain person was heir of a mining property, to sue, if necessary, and in such event to control the suit and pay the expenses, receiving two-thirds of the value recovered, is voidable and will not be specifically enforced; Casserleigh v. Wood, 119 Fed. 308, 56 C. C. A. 212.

Where an invalid contract has been performed, its invalidity is not important; St. Louis H. & G. Co. v. U. S., 191 U. S. 163, 24 Sup. Ct. 47, 48 L. Ed. 130.

Property delivered under an executed illegal sale cannot be recovered back by any party in pari delicto; Harriman v. Securities Co., 197 U. S. 244, 25 Sup. Ct. 493, 49 L. Ed. 739. But where a great swindle had been perpetrated, it was held that a victim might sue for his money, though he was in pari delicto; Falkenberg v. Allen, 18 Okl. 210, 90 Pac. 415, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494.

As to the effect of war upon contracts, see WAR. As to particular cases, see the several titles upon the subjects involved.

VOIDABLE. See VOID.

VOIR DIRE. A preliminary examination of a witness to ascertain whether he is competent.

When a witness was supposed to have an interest in the cause, and was thereby excluded from testifying, the party against whom he was called had the choice to prove such interest by calling another witness to that fact, or he might require the witness produced to be sworn on his voir dire as to whether he had an interest in the cause or not; but the party against whom he was called was not allowed to have recourse to both methods to prove the witness's interest. If the witness answered that he had no interest, he was competent, his oath being conclusive; if he swore he had an interest, he was rejected.

The witness was sworn on his voir dire to ascertain whether he had an interest which would disqualify him, because he would be tempted to perjure himself if he testified when interested. But when he was asked whether he had such an interest, if he was dishonest and anxious to be sworn in the case, he would swear falsely he had none, and his answer being conclusive, he was admitted as competent; if, on the contrary, he swore truly he had an interest, when he knew that would exclude him, he was told that for being thus honest he must be rejected.

A suitable inquiry is permissible in order to ascertain whether a juror has any bias, and this must be conducted under the supervision of the court and be largely left to its sound discretion. There is no objection in not allowing a juror to be asked as to his political affiliations and whether they would bias his judgment, in the absence of any statement tending to show a special reason for asking; Connors v. U. S., 158 U. S. 408, 15 Sup. Ct. 951, 39 L. Ed. 1033; a juror may be asked whether he is a member of certain secret societies; Burgess v. Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 1110; or has ever belonged to "the committee of 100"; Connors v. U. S., 158 U. S. 408, 15 Sup. Ct. 951, 39 L. Ed. 1033. The court may assume an exclusive examination of jurors, though it is the better practice to allow counsel to examine; Jones v. State, 35 Fla. 289, 17 South. 284.

See INTEREST; JURY.

VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA. A maxim meaning literally: No one can enforce a right arising out of a transaction which he has voluntarily assented to. It applies to intentional acts which would otherwise be tortious; consent, for example, to an entry on land which would otherwise be a trespass, or consent to a physical harm which would otherwise be an assault, as in the case of a boxing match or a surgical operation. However, such consent does not exclude criminal liability. No person can lawfully consent to his own death, so that killing a man in a duel is murder. Nor can one lawfully consent to grievous bodily harm, save for some reasonable purpose; for example, a proper surgical operation; 8 Q. B. D. 534.

A master is under a legal duty to his servant to take care that the premises, plant, and machinery are reasonably safe; but where the servant expressly or impliedly agrees to exempt his master from this obligation, in whole or in part and to take the risk upon himself, the maxim applies; [1891] A. C. 325.

Mere knowledge of an impending wrongful act or of the existence of a wrongfully caused danger does not of itself amount to consent, even though no attempt is made by the plaintiff to prevent or avoid the act or danger. Knowledge may, however, be evidence of consent; [1891] A. C. 325; and even if it does not prove an agreement to take the risk, it may nevertheless be a bar to the plaintiff's action, in that it may negative the existence of any negligence on the part of the defendant in causing the danger, or it may establish the existence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

See CONSENT; CRIME; ASSAULT; MASTER AND SERVANT.

VOLUNTARY. Willingly; done with one's consent; negligently. Wolff § 5.

To render an act criminal or tortious, it must be voluntary. If a man, therefore, kill another without a will on his part while engaged in the performance of a lawful act, and having taken proper care to prevent it, he is not guilty of any crime. And if he commit an injury to the person or property of another, he is not liable for damages, unless the act has been voluntary or through negligence; as, when a collision takes place between two ships without any fault in either. 2 Dods. Adm. 83; 3 Hagg. Adm. 320, 414.

When the crime or injury happens in the performance of an unlawful act, the party will be considered as having acted voluntarily.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT. See VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE; Bonns v. Carter, 22 Neb. 514, 35 N. W. 394.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE. A conveyance without any valuable consideration.

Voluntary conveyances are discussed most frequently with reference to the statutes 13 Eliz. c. 5 (for the protection of creditors) and 27 Eliz. c. 4 (for the protection of subsequent purchasers). A voluntary conveyance, however, is not within these statutes unless it is fraudulent; Cowp. 434. And, as between the parties, a voluntary conveyance is generally good.

In determining whether a voluntary conveyance is fraudulent and within the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, a distinction is made between existing (or previous) and subsequent creditors. An existing creditor, so called, is one who is a creditor at the time of the conveyance; and it was at one time held that, as against him, every voluntary conveyance by the debtor is fraudulent; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 229, 5 L. Ed. 603; without regard to the amount of the debts, the extent of the property in settlement, or the circumstances of the debtor; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 500, 8 Am. Dec. 520; but this rule is now subject to great modifications both in England and in the United States; see 1 Am. L. Cas. 37-40; and the conclusion to be drawn from the more recent cases is that the whole question depends in great measure on the ratio of the debts, not so much to the property the debtor parts with, as to that which he retains; Breil's Appeal, 24 Pa. 511; 2 Beav. 344; 4 Drew. 632. A subsequent creditor is one who becomes a creditor after the conveyance, and, as against him, a voluntary conveyance is not void unless actually fraudulent; 1 Am. L. Cas. 40; but there is great diversity in the definition of the fraud of which he may avail himself; see 3 De G. J. & S. 293; L. R. 5 Ch. Ap. 518; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 501, 8 Am. Dec. 520; Snyder v. Christ, 39 Pa. 499.

Whenever a voluntary conveyance is made, a presumption of fraud properly arises upon the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 4, which presumption may be repelled by showing that the transaction on which the conveyance was founded virtually contained some conventional stipulations, some compromise of interests, or reciprocity of benefits, that point out an object and motive beyond the indulgence of affection or claims of kindred, and not reconcilable with the supposition of intent to deceive a purchaser. But, unless so repelled, such a conveyance, coupled with a subsequent negotiation for sale, is conclusive evidence of statutory fraud.

The principles of these statutes, though they may not have been substantially reenacted, prevail throughout the United States.

See May, Stats. of Eliz.; Bump, Fraud. Conv.; Note to Twyne's Case, 1 Sm. L. Cas. (cases to 1879 discussed in 18 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 137); Note to Sexton v. Wheaton, 1 Am. L. Cas.; Story, Eq. Jurisp. §§ 350-436; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

VOLUNTARY ESCAPE. See ESCAPE.

VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE TO UNNECESSARY DANGER. Where the insured was shot when unarmed, in the course of an altercation, it was held that there could be a recovery, though the insured may have been the aggressor, if he had no reason to believe that his opponent was armed. The court held that the test was whether the assured "had voluntarily or intentionally done some act which reasonable prudence would have pronounced dangerous and in which death had followed as a consequence;" Union C. & S. Co. v. Harroll, 98 Tenn. 591, 40 S. W. 1080, 60 Am. St. Rep. 873. Where a party going home at night voluntarily left other and safe paths of travel and used a dangerous railway trestle; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. 541, 7 S. E. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 270; and where the assured sat down on a railway track when an engine moving toward him was only 25 feet away; or crossed dangerous railroad tracks merely to save time; Glass v. Accident Ass'n, 112 Fed. 495; Williams v. Acc. Ass'n, 133 N. Y. 366, 31 N. E. 222; and where the assured jumped in the dark from a freight train in rapid motion; Shevlin v. Acc. Ass'n, 94 Wis. 180; the exception in the policy was held to apply. But it must be shown that there is on the part of the insured some degree of consciousness of the danger which results in the accidental death of the insured; Miller v. Ins. Co., 92 Tenn. 167, 21 S. W. 39, 20 L. R. A. 765; Lovelace v. Protective Ass'n, 126 Mo. 104, 28 S. W. 877, 30 L. R. A. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 638.

A voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger implies a conscious, intentional exposure, something of which one is conscious but willing to take the risk. By taking a policy against accident one naturally understands that he is to be protected against accident resulting in whole or in part from his own in-advertence. The phrase means something more than contributory negligence or want of ordinary care on the part of the assured; Folis v. Acc. Ass'n, 94 Ia. 435, 62 N. W. 807, 28 L. R. A. 78, 58 Am. St. Rep. 408. The phrase is not the entire equivalent of ordinary negligence; a degree of consciousness of danger is necessary; Miller v. Ins. Co., 92 Tenn. 167, 21 S. W. 39, 20 L. R. A. 765. See INSURANCE.

VOLUNTARY JURISDICTION. In Ecclesiastical Law. That kind of jurisdiction which requires no judicial proceedings: as, the granting letters of administration and receiving the probate of wills.

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. See MURDER; MANSLAUGHTER; HOMICIDE.

VOLUNTARY NONSUIT. In Practice. The abandonment of his cause by a plaintiff, and an agreement that a judgment for costs be entered against him. See NONSUIT.

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT. One which implies that he who makes it intends to waive any right which he may have to resist it. Rumford Chemical Works v. Ray, 19 R. I. 456, 34 Atl. 814.

VOLUNTARY WASTE. See WASTE.

VOLUNTEER. One who receives a voluntary conveyance.

It is a general rule of equity that they will not assist a mere volunteer who has a defective conveyance. Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 5, s. 2; and see the note there for some exceptions to this rule. See, generally, 1 Madd. 271; 1 Supp. to Ves. Ch. 320; 2 id. 321; Powell, Mortg.

One who takes from a trustee by voluntary conveyance, though without notice, will not be protected; 2 P. Wms. 678. So of a voluntary conveyance by a lunatic, even in the absence of notice; 7 De G., M. & G. 475.

In Military Law. Persons who, in time of war, offer their services to their country and march in its defence.

One who freely enlists in the place of another, and becomes his substitute of his own free will and accord, is a volunteer within the spirit and intent of the statutes. Magee v. Cutler, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 239. See MILITIA.

VOTE. Suffrage; the voice of an individual in making a choice by many. The total number of voices given at an election; as, the presidential vote.

In a viva voce election for a public officer, a voter cannot change his vote, once made, after subsequent votes have been made and recorded; Hopkins v. Swift, 100 Ky. 14, 37 S. W. 155.

In cumulative voting the voter must put opposite the name of the candidate on whom he intends to cumulate something to indicate the number of votes he intends to cast for him, in default of which he will be taken to have cast but a single vote for the candidate against whom he has made a mark, although he has marked but a few names or only one; [1897] 1 Q. B. 449.

See ELECTION; BALLOT; SUFFRAGE; VOTER; WOMAN; VOTING MACHINE.

VOTER. One entitled to a vote; an elector. The right to fix the qualifications of voters is in the states, except so far as it is limited by the 15th amendment to the constitution of the United States, which provides that the right of the citizens to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The qualifications of voters are similar in all the states, but not uniform. They have been summarized as follows: 1. Citizenship, either by birth or naturalization; 2. Residence for a given period of time in the state, county, and voting precinct; 3. Age, the limit is twenty-one years in all the states; 4. The payment of taxes, in some states, and in many states, registration; 5. Freedom from having committed an infamous crime; 6. Freedom from idiocy or lunacy; McCrary, Elect. § 4. Residence means actual settlement within the state; Sharp v. McIntire, 23 Colo. 99, 46 Pac. 115. The legislature cannot require a longer residence for voters at primary elections than the constitution prescribes for voters at elections "authorized by law," which term includes primary elections; Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 52 Pac. 659, 41 L. R. A. 196. A person who is capable of transacting the ordinary business of life, even though laboring under some hallucination or delusion, unless it be shown to extend to political matters, cannot be denied the privilege of voting on the ground of want of mental capacity; Clark v. Robinson, 88 Ill. 499.

VOTING MACHINE. In Rhode Island, upon the application of the governor, the justices gave an opinion that a statute authorizing the use of a voting machine would be constitutional. In re Voting Machine, 19 R. I. 729, 36 Atl. 716, 36 L. R. A. 547. Existing legislation authorizing the use of voting machines does not contravene the constitution. Such acts are constitutional; People v. Taylor, 257 Ill. 192, 100 N. E. 534; Elwell v. Comstock, 99 Minn. 261, 109 N. W. 113, 698, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 9 Ann. Cas. 270; State v. Carroll (Wash.) 138 Pac. 306 (if secrecy is secured); they do not contravene a state constitution which requires that all elections shall be by ballot; Lynch v. Malley, 215 Ill. 574, 74 N. E. 723, 2 Ann. Cas. 837 (contra, State v. Board of Elections, 80 Ohio St. 471, 89 N. E. 33, 24 L. R. A. [N. S.] 188); even if the voter cannot see that his vote is correctly recorded and counted; Henderson v. Board of Election, 160 Mich. 36, 124 N. W. 1105; voting by an efficient and secret machine is voting by ballot within a state constitution; Elwell v. Comstock, 99 Minn. 261, 109 N. W.

VOTING TRUST. A term applied to the accumulation in a single hand or in a few hands of shares of corporate stock, belonging to several or many owners, in order, thereby, to control the business of the company. In some instances the certificates are placed in the hands of a single holder or of a committee, accompanied by irrevocable proxies to vote on them. In other instances the stock is placed in the name of such committee. Certificates are usually issued to the beneficial owners of the stock, and these certificates are bought and sold in the market. It has been held that all agreements to tie up stocks by irrevocable proxies or by placing them in the hands of trustees are illegal, and any beneficial owner may withdraw his stock from them at pleasure; Fisher v. Bush, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 641; Havemeyer v. Havemeyer, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 506; Moses v. Scott, 84 Ala. 608, 4 South. 742; whether he be a party to the agreement or an assignee of the stock of such party; Shepaug Voting Trust Cases, 60 Conn. 553, 24 Atl. 32; In re Germicide Co., 65 Hun 606, 20 N. Y. Supp. 495; White v. Tire Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 178, 28 Atl. 75.

An agreement not to sell stock except by consent of all parties to the agreement is held to be in restraint of trade and void; Fisher v. Bush, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 641. It has, however, been held that an agreement among the stockholders to hold the stock together and to sell it together is valid; Havemeyer v. Havemeyer, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 507.

Where stock is transferred to a trustee under a contract by which he agrees to hold and vote it for the benefit of two other persons and himself jointly, to dispose of it when and as agreed upon by himself and one of the other parties, the other parties have no such title or right of possession thereof as would give either of them a right of action against the trustee for conversion upon his refusal to transfer to such party one-third of the stock; Louisville T. Co. v. Stockton, 75 Fed. 62, 21 C. C. A. 225.

Where a statute forbade a consolidation of competing lines, the purchase by a railroad company of the stock of a competing line which was then vested in a third party as trustee, was held void and the trustee was enjoined from voting thereon; Clarke v. Banking Co., 50 Fed. 338, 15 L. R. A. 683.

See RESTRAINT OF TRADE, for other cases; see also TRUST, for the use of voting trusts in combinations of capital known as trusts.

Where stock was vested in a trustee under an agreement that it was to remain with such trustee for four years, certain stockholders agreeing not to sell their holdings without first offering them to the remaining parties to the agreement, and the trustee holding an irrevocable power of attorney to vote the stock, it was held that the trust agreement was not void per se, and that as long as the beneficial owners did not make any effort to withdraw from the trust there was no reason why the trustee should not vote upon it; Brown v. S. S. Co., 5 Blatch. 525, Fed. Cas. No. 2,025.

The holders of a majority of the stock of a railroad company agreed that it should be vested in the name of the president of another railroad company, who should deliver to an appointee of the directors of the company in question an irrevocable proxy to vote upon such stock; certificates were issued to the stockholders who were parties to the agreement. Certain parties purchased a minority of the trust certificates and requested the return of the stock, which was refused. The court enjoined the trustee from voting on the stock and compelled a transfer to the beneficial owners thereof, holding that the right was vested in the latter and the trustee could not lawfully refuse it to them; 14 Wkly. L. Bull. (Ohio) 68. See 15 id. 419, 423. See also Woodruff v. R. Co., 30 Fed. 91, substantially to the same effect.

In the Reading railroad trust (Shelmerdine v. Welsh, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 330), on the reorganization of the company, certain securities and stock were vested in a reconstruction board under a voting trust, by which certificates of beneficial interest were issued. On a bill by a stockholder to restrain the trustees from voting upon the stock held by them at an election soon to occur, a preliminary injunction was refused because the interests were too complicated to permit of interference upon such short notice. The court (Hare, P. J.) was of opinion that the voting trust was necessary to sustain and carry out the provisions of the reorganization and that the voting trustees represented not only the stock but the other securities and liens on the property, under the reorganization.

It seems to be settled that if an agreement be made between creditors of a corporation and the stockholders, whereby the creditors forbear to proceed against the corporation, or for the purposes of obtaining further credit that stock be placed in the hands of trustees for the purposes of voting, such a voting trust is good. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 92, 12 South. 723; Greene v. Nash, 85 Me. 148, 26 Atl. 1114.

In Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 92, 12 South. 723, the court was of opinion that the cases in which voting trusts were considered illegal were based rather upon the ground of the unlawful purpose for which they were created than upon their intrinsic illegality, and it reached substantially the same result as the Reading railroad case cited above.

A contract to place the stock in the hands of one of the parties, to be voted as a unit, is not void, where the purpose was to vest the control for a fixed period in the persons who originally promoted the company; Gray v. Ry., 120 Ill. App. 159; so of a voting trust vested in the directors for five years, in order to continue the policy of the company; Boyer v. Nesbitt, 227 Pa. 398, 76 Atl. 103, 136 Am. St. Rep. 890; and of a voting trust for twenty-five years, the trustees to vote as a majority should direct; Carnegie Trust Co. v. Ins. Co., 111 Va. 1, 68 S. E. 412, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 21 Ann. Cas. 1287; and an agreement among stockholders that their stock shall be voted in a block, the vote to be determined by ballot among them; Smith v. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 584, 47 Pac. 582, 35 L. R. A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119; and an agreement to pool stock for three years, to be voted by a committee of five; Brightman v. Bates, 175 Mass. 105, 55 N. E. 809; and a mere voting trust in which the stockholders holding participating shares chose a managing committee with power to direct the trustees in the voting of the stock and management of the company, its object being the benefit of all the stockholders equally and not tending to eliminate competition; Venner v. Ry. Co., 258 Ill. 523, 101 N. E. 949. Contra, an agreement to take from the stockholders the right to vote for three years; Sheppard v. Power Co., 150 N. C. 776, 64 S. E. 894; and any agreement to separate the beneficial and legal title to stock; id.; and an agreement between a majority of the stockholders of a national bank which gave to voting trustees uncontrolled power to manage the bank for fifteen years; Bridgers v. Bank, 152 N. C. 293, 67 S. E. 770, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1199; is void.

There must be some further consideration than the mutual concurrent acts of the stockholders in depositing their stock; 2 Railw. & Corp. L. J. 409 (Vanderbilt v. Bennett); if there be none, then the right to vote will be revocable; Harvey v. Imp. Co., 118 N. C. 693, 24 S. E. 489, 32 L. R. A. 265, 54 Am. St. Rep. 749; Smith v. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 584, 47 Pac. 582, 35 L. R. A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119.

There has been a distinction drawn between combinations to control the voting power permanently and those to control it for a fixed, definite and reasonable period; Hey v. Dolphin, 92 Hun 230, 36 N. Y. Supp. 627; Brown v. Britton, 41 App. Div. 57, 58 N. Y. Supp. 353; and between a voting trust formed for the carrying out of a certain policy and one where the management is left to the trustee; Kreissl v. Distilling Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 5, 47 Atl. 471; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. State, 49 Ohio St. 668, 32 N. E. 933; and between an agreement by which several agree that stock shall be voted as one may direct, and an agreement that it shall be voted as a stranger may direct; Clowes v. Miller, 60 N. J. Eq. 179, 47 Atl. 345.

An agreement between stockholders that they will, for five years, vote their aggregate shares as one body, to be determined by ballot between them, is a proxy to vote as a majority directs; Smith v. R. Co., 115 Cal. 584, 47 Pac. 582, 35 L. R. A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119.

It has been assumed that a voting trust is in the nature of a proxy, and as such revocable; Vanderbilt v. Bennett, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 193; Shepaug Voting Trust Cases, 60 Conn. 553, 24 Atl. 32. And statutes limiting the creation of proxies have been construed as applying to the creation of trusts; Shepaug Voting Trust Cases, 60 Conn. 553, 24 Atl. 32.

It has been held that the power to vote is inseparable from the ownership of each share; Harvey v. Improvement Co., 118 N. C. 699, 24 S. E. 489, 32 L. R. A. 265, 54 Am. St. Rep. 749; Shepaug Voting Trust Cases, 60 Conn. 553, 24 Atl. 32; Griffith v. Jewett, 15 Wkly. L. Bull. (Ohio) 419; but in Boyer v. Nesbitt, 227 Pa. 398, 76 Atl. 103, 136 Am. St. Rep. 890, it was held that this might be justified where there was some proper interest to conserve.

The Pennsylvania act of May 26, 1893, disqualifies the holder of the bare legal title to stock from voting thereon, if challenged, and enables the beneficial owner, upon proper proof at the meeting, to vote his stock. A holder's right to vote such stock is revocable by the real owner; Com. v. Roydhouse, 233 Pa. 234, 82 Atl. 74; but a voting trust has been upheld in Pennsylvania; see cases cited herein.

It has been held that an attempt to dissolve a voting trust by one whose shares are not in the trust cannot be successful; Zimmermann v. Jewett, 19 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 459.

One holding a voting trust certificate in a corporation is a proper person to apply for a receiver, the statute authorizing "any creditor or shareholder" to bring a bill; U. P. Independent Tel. Co. v. O'Grady, 75 N. J. Eq. 301, 71 Atl. 1040.

See 44 Am. L. Reg. & Rev. 413, where a form of certificate is given and the cases are collected by Charles H. Burr, Jr., who finds a definite formulation of conclusions to be impossible. See Smith v. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 584, 47 Pac. 582, 35 L. R. A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119; Morel v. Hoge, 130 Ga. 625, 61 S. E. 487, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, 14 Ann. Cas. 935; 42 Am. L. Rev. 133; STOCKHOLDER; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

VOUCHEE. In common recoveries, the person who is called to warrant or defend the title is called the vouchee. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2093.

VOUCHER. In Accounts. An account-book in which are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Any acquittance or receipt which is evidence of payment or of the debtor's being discharged. See State v. Hickman, 8 N. J. L. 299; Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 218.

A merchant's books are the vouchers of the correctness of his accounts and a receipt is voucher of payment, but neither is conclusive. People v. Haws, 12 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 202.

When used in connection with the disbursement of money, voucher means a written or printed instrument in the nature of a bill of particulars, account, etc., which shows on what account and by what authority a particular payment has been made. State v. Moore, 36 Neb. 579, 54 N. W. 866; People v. Swigert, 107 Ill. 495.

Vouching a claim merely means that it has been investigated and approved; First T. & S. Bank v. Ry. Co., 195 Fed. 330.

In Old Conveyancing. The person on whom the tenant to the præcipe calls to defend the title to the land, because he is supposed to have warranted the title to him at the time of the original purchase.

The person usually employed for this purpose is the crier of the court, who is therefore called the common voucher. See Cruise, Dig. tit. 36, c. 3, s. 1; 22 Viner, Abr. 26; RECOVERY.

VOUCHING TO WARRANTY. The calling of one who has warranted lands, by the party warranted, to come and defend the suit for him. Co. Litt. 101 b; 3 Bla. Com. 300. But see 19 L. Q. R. 349. See WARRANTY, VOUCHING TO.

VOYAGE. In Maritime Law. The passage of a ship upon the seas from one port to another, or to several ports. The term includes the enterprise entered upon and not merely the route. Friend v. Ins. Co., 113 Mass. 326. The actual transit of a vessel from port to port. The Mary Adelaide Randall, 93 Fed. 222. Each trip constitutes a voyage; The Rose Culkin, 52 Fed. 332.

Where a steamship is engaged in making regular trips from Havre to New York and return, each trip in one direction constitutes a voyage within the meaning of the statute providing for limitation of liability of owners to their interest in the vessel and "her freight for the voyage"; In re La Bourgogne, 117 Fed. 261.

Where a loss was occasioned whilst loading the cargo, it was held to be during the voyage; L. R. 15 P. D. 203.

Every voyage must have a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem. When the insurance is for a limited time, the two extremes of that time are the termini of the voyage insured. When a ship is insured both outward and homeward, for one entire premium, this, with reference to the insurance, is considered but one voyage, and the terminus a quo is also the terminus ad quem; Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 7, s. 1-5.

As to the commencement and ending of the voyage, see RISK.

The voyage, with reference to the legality of it, is sometimes confounded with the traffic in which the ship is engaged, and is frequently said to be illegal only because the trade is so; but a voyage may be lawful, and yet the transport of certain goods on board the ship may be prohibited; or the voyage may be illegal, though the transport of the goods be lawful; Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 6, s. 1. See DEVIATION; SAILING.

Justice Miller, in Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 30 L. Ed. 244, used the word in relation to the transportation of goods by railroad through more than one state.

In the French Law, the voyage de conserve is the name given to designate an agreement made between two or more sea-captains that they will not separate in their voyage, will lend aid to each other, and will defend themselves against a common enemy or the enemy of one of them in case of attack. This agreement is said to be a partnership. 3 Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 656; 4 id. 984; 20 Toullier, n. 17.

VOYAGE CHARTER. One in which there is an agreement for a defined voyage.

VULGO CONCEPTI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Bastards whose father was unknown. Leg. 53, ff. de statu hominum. Those, also, whose fathers, though known, could not lawfully be recognized as such: viz., the offspring of incest and adultery. Code Civ. 3. 7. 1.

W

WADIA. A pledge. See VADIUM; FIDES FACTA.

WADSET. In Scotch Law. The old term for a mortgage. A right by which lands or other heritable subjects are impignorated by the proprietor to his creditor in security of his debt. Like other heritable rights, it is protected by seisin.

WAGE. To give a pledge or security for the performance of anything: as, to wage or gage deliverance, to wage law, etc. Co. Litt. 294. This word is but little used.

WAGE-EARNER. In the bankrupt act, an individual working for wages at a rate not exceeding $1,500 per year. In re Wakefield, 182 Fed. 247.

The act does not fix the time when the status of the individual as a wage-earner is to be determined. In many of the cases it has been determined by the vocation of the individual when the act of bankruptcy was committed; In re Crenshaw, 156 Fed. 638; Flickinger v. Bank, 145 Fed. 162, 76 C. C. A. 132. It has been held that the status of the alleged bankrupt is to be determined as of the period when he contracted the debt to be proved, and acquired the property to be administered; and if he was at that time engaged in mercantile pursuits, he cannot defeat the operation of the law by thereafter engaging in an exempt occupation; In re Burgin, 173 Fed. 726; Tiffany v. Milk Co., 141 Fed. 444; Bollinger v. Bank, 177 Fed. 609, 101 C. C. A. 235.

One engaged in manufacturing and trading does not become a wage-earner and exempt from adjudication as a bankrupt because, while working as a manufacturer and trader, he also earns wages by working for another in a different occupation; and if debts are contracted while he is engaged as a manufacturer and trader, he is not exempt from involuntary bankruptcy because he subsequently becomes a wage-earner; In re Naroma Chocolate Co., 178 Fed. 383.

WAGER. A bet; a contract by which two parties or more agree that a certain sum of money, or other thing, shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. See Merchants' S., L. & T. Co. v. Goodrich, 75 Ill. 560.

A contract upon a contingency by which one may lose but cannot gain, or the other can gain but cannot lose, is a wager; Shumate v. Com., 15 Gratt. (Va.) 653; but there must be a risk by both parties; Quarles v. State, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 561. In Cassard v. Hinman, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 207, it was said: "A wager is something hazarded on the issue of some uncertain event; a bet is a wager, though a wager is not necessarily a bet."

At common law, wagers were not, per se, void; Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670; Monroe v. Smelley, 25 Tex. 586, 78 Am. Dec. 541; but if they were foolish, or tended to annoy others or outrage decency, they were discountenanced; Odger, C. L. 727. See [1907] 1 K. B. 758, for the history of the law of gaming contracts, in the judgment of Fletcher Moulton, L. J.

By an English statute passed in 1845, wagers were prohibited, and similar statutes have been passed in many of the states. See Dos Passos, St. Br. 409; Margins.

Where a contract is a mere device to avoid the statute, it is illegal, but the burden of proving its illegality is upon the defendant; Bigelow v. Benedict, 70 N. Y. 202, 28 Am. Rep. 573; and the intention of the parties is for the jury; 20 E. L. & E. 290; Kirkpatrick v. Bonsall, 72 Pa. 155.

Where both parties to contracts for the sale and purchase of stocks intend that no stocks shall be delivered and that "differences" only shall be accounted for, the mere fact that the contracts provide that either party may require completion of the purchase and delivery or receipt (as the case may be) of stocks, does not prevent them from being contracts by way of gaming and wagering within Gaming Act 1845, and therefore void; [1896] A. C. 166; [1905] 1 Ch. 307; [1911] 1 K. B. 70. The true test of the validity of a contract for future delivery is whether it could be settled in money or whether the party selling could tender and compel acceptance of the particular commodity; Sampson v. Cotton Mills, 82 Fed. 833; and a contract for the sale of a commodity for future delivery is valid if the parties intend a future delivery, but invalid if none is contemplated, but only a payment of the difference between the contract and the market price; Board of Trade v. Stock Co., 198 U. S. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031; Edgerton & Son v. J. T. Edgerton & Bro., 153 N. C. 167, 69 S. E. 53; Raymond v. Parker, 84 Conn. 694, 81 Atl. 1030. Where the parties contemplate an actual delivery of the commodity, the contract is not a gambling contract, though it provides it may be settled by a money payment upon failure to deliver actual cotton; Daniel v. Reeves, 139 Ga. 646, 77 S. E. 1067; even where the principals may not be able to enforce the contract and the broker through whom the transaction is made is ignorant of their intention, he cannot recover for money paid out in commissions; Ware v. Pearsons, 173 Fed. 878, 98 C. C. A. 364; Connor v. Black, 119 Mo. 126, 24 S. W. 184; contra, 29 T. L. R. 479; the same principle applies to contracts for the sale and delivery of grain; Barnard v. Backhaus, 52 Wis. 593, 6 N. W. 252, 9 N. W. 595; and indeed to any contract for the sale or purchase of any personal property to be delivered at a future date, which is intended by both parties as a wager on the rise and fall of prices and to be settled by payment of differences; Beadles v. McElrath, 85 Ky. 230, 3 S. W. 152; Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 336, 9 Sup. Ct. 776, 33 L. Ed. 172; but an agreement to sell grain for future delivery is not necessarily a gambling transaction; Morrissey v. Broomal, 37 Neb. 766, 56 N. W. 383. The legality of purchases and sales of grain on exchanges is governed by the law of the state where the exchange is located; Wilhite v. Houston, 200 Fed. 390, 118 C. C. A. 542.

A purchase, with an option to the seller to deliver on a certain day, is not a wager; Pixley v. Boynton, 79 Ill. 351; Mohr v. Miesen, 47 Minn. 228, 49 N. W. 862; and the usage allowing merchants to settle such contracts by "differences" does not necessarily render such contracts void; Boyd v. Hanson, 41 Fed. 174. Margins advanced to brokers on contracts made to be settled on differences may be recovered; Elder v. Talcott, 43 Ill. App. 439; Weld v. Cable Co., 199 N. Y. 88, 92 N. E. 415. Where purchases and sales are actually completed by delivery to the holder, who obtained the money to pay advances by hypothecating the stock, the transactions are valid; [1895] A. C. 318. See a note in 33 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 436. A case varying from the general rule that where accounts are to be settled by differences, the transaction is a gambling one, confines it to cases where neither party expects any delivery at any time and holds the transaction valid if the final balance is to be by delivery, though intermediate balances were otherwise settled; Dillaway v. Alden, 88 Me. 230, 33 Atl. 981. The law looks at the intention of the parties, which is a fact for the jury, and oral evidence may be given of the circumstances, without respect to the form of the transaction; Younkin v. Collier, 47 Fed. 574; but a transaction which on its face is legitimate cannot be held void as a wagering contract by showing that one party only so understood and meant it to be. The proof must go further and show that this understanding was mutual; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 13 Sup. Ct. 950, 37 L. Ed. 819. See Dos Passos, St. Br. 47. See also OPTION; FUTURES; MARGIN.

It has been held that contracts between the purchaser of futures and a broker, made without the state, though valid where made, could not be enforced in the state where it was invalid by statute; Lemonius v. Mayer, 71 Miss. 514, 14 South. 33; the same principle applies to notes given in settlement of gambling transactions; Pope v. Hanke, 155 Ill. 617, 40 N. E. 839, 28 L. R. A. 568. Where a note which was delivered to a broker to secure him against loss in stock transactions was transferred to an innocent purchaser without notice, equity would not compel its return, because given for a gambling debt; Albertson v. Laughlin, 173 Pa. 525, 34 Atl. 216, 51 Am. St. Rep. 777; and a mortgage securing advances for margins on a contract for future delivery was held valid where the advances were made in good faith to save loss; Sampson v. Cotton Mills, 82 Fed. 833; but the original payee cannot recover on a note, for money advanced upon or in execution of a contract of wager, to which he is a party or direct participant in the name of or on behalf of the parties; Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 336, 9 Sup. Ct. 776, 33 L. Ed. 172. See Zeltner v. Irwin, 25 App. Div. 223, 49 N. Y. Supp. 337.

The English statute prohibiting the recovery of money, etc., deposited to abide the event of a wager, applies only to a deposit as the stake to abide the event of a wager and not to deposits as security for the observance by the loser, of the terms of the wagering contract, and the authority to return the latter may be revoked and the securities recovered at any time before their appropriation; [1891] 2 Q. B. 329.

If all options were prohibited, all conditional contracts would have to be prohibited. See Dr. Wharton's note to Melchert v. Tel. Co., 11 Fed. 193; also Bigelow v. Benedict, 70 N. Y. 202, 26 Am. Rep. 573.

When one loses a wager and gets another to pay the money for him, an action lies for the recovery of the money; 15 C. B. N. S. 316; but see Dickson's Ex'r v. Thomas, 97 Pa. 278. So it is said that where an agent advances money to his principal to pay losses incurred in an illegal transaction, the contract between them, made after the illegal contract is closed, is binding; Lehman v. Strassberger, 2 Woods, 554, Fed. Cas. No. 8,216. See Durant v. Burt, 98 Mass. 161. Where a broker sued his principal for advances and commissions on the purchase of property, it was held that the fact that persons from whom the broker bought the property for his principal had not the goods on hand when the contract was made, and that they had no reasonable expectation of acquiring them except by purchase, did not defeat the broker's right to recover; Sawyer v. Taggart, 14 Bush (Ky.) 727. See, also, 5 M. & W. 462.

See Biddle, Stock Brokers; Lewis, Stocks; article by Dr. Wharton in 3 Cr. L. Mag. 1, on Political Economy and Criminal Law.

Wagers on the event of an election laid before the poll is open; 1 Term 56; Bunn v. Riker, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 426, 4 Am. Dec. 292; Wroth v. Johnson, 4 H. & McH. (Md.) 284; or after it is closed; McCullum v. Gourlay, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 147; Lansing v. Lansing, id. 454; are unlawful. See McCrory, Elect. § 149. And wagers are against public policy if they are in restraint of marriage;

10 East 22; if made as to the mode of playing an illegal game; 2 H. Bla. 43; Wootan v. Hasket, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 180; or on an abstract speculative question of law or judicial practice, not arising out of circumstances in which the parties have a real interest; 12 East 247. But see 1 Cowp. 37.

Wagers, though on indifferent subjects, are inconsistent with good morals, and as such, are void, as against public policy; Bernard v. Taylor, 23 Or. 419, 31 Pac. 968, 18 L. R. A. 859, 37 Am. St. Rep. 693.

Wagers as to the sex of an individual; Cowp. 729; or whether an unmarried woman had borne or would have a child; 4 Camp. 152; are illegal, as necessarily leading to painful and indecent considerations. Every bet about the age, or height, or weight, or wealth, or circumstances, or situation of any person, is illegal; and this, whether the subject of the bet be man, woman, or child, married or single, native or foreigner, in this country or abroad; Phillips v. Ives, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 42. And it seems that a wager between two coach-proprietors, whether or not a particular person would go by one of their coaches, is illegal, as exposing that person to inconvenience; 1 B. & Ald. 683.

In the case even of a legal wager, the authority of a stakeholder, like that of an arbitrator, may be rescinded by either party before the event happens. And if after his authority has been countermanded and the stake has been demanded, he refuse to deliver it, trover or assumpsit for money had and received is maintainable; 1 B. & Ald. 683. And where the wager is in its nature illegal, the stake may be recovered, even after the event, on demand made before it has been paid over; 4 Taunt. 474. But see Yates v. Foot, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; Deaver v. Bennett, 29 Neb. 812, 46 N. W. 161, 26 Am. St. Rep. 415; Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Colo. 212, 11 Pac. 82. Where the stakeholder of a wager void as between the parties is notified by one of them not to pay over the money to his adversary, even after the result of the event has become known, but before payment has been made, he cannot defeat an action by such party for its recovery; Lewy v. Crawford, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 23 S. W. 1041; Weaver v. Harlan, 48 Mo. App. 319. See STAKEHOLDER; MARGIN; HORSE RACE; INSURABLE INTEREST.

WAGER OF BATTLE. A mode of trial which existed among almost all the German people and was introduced into England by William the Conqueror.

It was resorted to in three cases only: in the court martial or court of chivalry; in appeals of felony and upon approvements; and upon issue joined in a writ of right. Co. Litt. § 294. On appeals parties fought in their own proper persons, on a writ of right by their champions. But if the appellant or approval were a woman, a priest, an infant, or of the age of sixty, or lame or blind, or a peer of the realm, or a citizen of London; or if the crime were notorious; in such cases wager of battle might be declined by the appellant or approver. But where the wager of battle was allowed, the appellee pleaded not guilty, and threw down his glove, declaring he would defend the same with his body. The appellant took up the glove, replying that he was ready to make good his appeal, body for body. Thereupon the appellee, taking the Bible in his right hand, and in his left the right hand of his antagonist, swore to this effect: "Hear this, O man, whom I hold by the hand, who callest thyself John by the name of baptism, that I, who call myself Thomas by the name of baptism, did not feloniously murder thy father, William by name, nor am anywise guilty of the said felony; so help me God and the saints; and this I will defend against thee by my body, as this court shall award." The appellant replied with a like oath, declaring also that the appellee had perjured himself. Then followed oaths by both parties against amulets and sorcery as follows: "Hear this, ye justices, that I have this day neither eat, drank, nor have upon me neither bones, stones, nor grass, nor any enchantment, sorcery, or witchcraft, whereby the law of God may be abased, or the law of the devil exalted; so help me God and his saints." The battle was then begun; and if the appellee were so far vanquished as not to be able or willing to fight any longer he was adjudged to be hanged immediately; but if he killed the appellant, or could maintain the fight from sunrise till the stars appeared in the evening, he was acquitted. Also if the appellant became recreant, and pronounced the word craven, he lost his liberam legem, and became infamous (see CRAVEN), and the appellee recovered his damages, and was forever quit of any further proceedings for the same offence. The proceedings in wager of battle in a writ of right were similar to the above except that the battle was by champions. It was the only mode of determining a writ of right until Henry II. introduced the grand assize, q. v. The prevalence of judicial combats in the Middle Ages is attributed by Mr. Hallam to systematic perjury in witnesses, and want of legal discrimination on the parts of judges. Moz. & W. It was not abolished in England till the enactment of stat. 59 Geo. III. c. 46. See 1 B. & Ald. 405; 3 Bla. Com. 339; 4 id. 347; APPEAL. This mode of trial was not peculiar in England. The emperor Otho, 983, held a diet at Verona, at which several sovereigns and great lords of Italy, Germany, and France were present. In order to put a stop to the frequent perjuries in judicial trials, this diet substituted in all cases, even in those which followed the course of the Roman law, proof by combat for proof by oath. Henrion de Pansey, Auth. Judic. Introd. c. 3. And for a detailed account of this mode of trial see Herbert, Inns of Court, 119. The last case in which the right was asserted was Ashton vs. Thornton, 1 B. & Ald. 405, where Lord Ellenborough declared that it was part of the general law of the realm and must be enforced, no matter how much disapproved. See Wills, Circ. Ev. 290, for a detailed statement of the facts. At the next session of the British parliament an act was passed to abolish appeals of murder, treason, felony, or other offences, and wager of battle, or joining issue or trial by battle, in writs of right. 59 Geo. III. c. 46. In the Statutes of South Carolina, Edition of 1857, it is said to be in existence in that state. For the history of this species of trial, see 3 Bla. Com. 337; 4 id. 347; Encyclopedie, Gage de Bataille; Steph. Pl. 122, and App. note 35. The Laws Lumber Room, by Francis Watt; Taswell-Langmead, Engl. Constit. Hist.

WAGER OF LAW. In Old Practice. An oath taken by a defendant in an action of debt that he does not owe the claim, supported by the oaths of eleven neighbors.

When an action of debt is brought against a man upon a simple contract, and the defendant pleads nil debet, and concludes his plea with this formula, "And this he is ready to defend against him the said A B and his suit, as the court of our lord the king here shall consider," etc., he is then put in sureties (vadios) to wage his law on a day appointed by the judge. The wager of law consists in an oath taken by the defendant on the appointed day, and confirmed by the oaths of compurgators (which see). This oath had the effect of a verdict in favor of the defendant, and was only allowed in the actions of debt on simple contract, detinue and account; nor was it allowed to any one not of good character, nor in criminal cases or cases in the Exchequer, nor when trespass, deceit or any forcible injury was alleged. In consequence of this privilege of the defendant, assumpsit displaces debt as a form of action on simple contracts, and instead of detinue, trover was used. But in England wager of law was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 13. And even before its abolition it had fallen into disuse. It was last used as a method of defence in 2 B. & C. 538, where the defendant offered to wage his law, but the plaintiff abandoned the case. This was in 1821. If it ever had any existence in the United States, it is now completely abolished; Childress v. Emory, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 642, 5 L. Ed. 705.

The name (in law Latin, vadiatio legis) comes from the defendant's being put in pledges (vadia) to appear on a given day with his "oath-helpers." Jenks, Hist. E. L. 46; to make his oath on the appointed day. It was very early in use in England, as Glanville distinctly describes it. Glanville, lib. 1, c. 9, 12. See Steph. Pl. 124, 250; Co. 2d Inst. 119; 3 Chitty, Pl. 497; 13 Viner, Abr. 58; Bac. Abr. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 138; Thayer, Evid. 26; Pike, Y. B. 16 Edw. III (II) (R. S.) XVIII. For the origin of this form of trial, see Steph. Plead. notes xxxix; Co. Litt. 394, 395; 3 Bla. Com. 341.

See OATH DECISORY; COMPURGATOR; GOD AND MY COUNTRY.

WAGER POLICY. One made when the insured has no insurable interest. See INSURABLE INTEREST; POLICY.

WAGES. A compensation given to a hired person for his or her services.

Agreed compensation for services by workmen, clerks or servants—those who have served an employer in a subordinate or menial capacity and who are supposed to be dependent upon their earnings to pay for their present support, whether they are to be paid by the hour, the day, the week, the month, the job, or the piece. In re Gurewitz, 121 Fed. 982, 58 C. C. A. 320.

Commissions paid to a travelling salesman for his services are wages within the meaning of the bankruptcy act; In re Dexter, 138 Fed. 788, 89 C. C. A. 285.

See MASTER AND SERVANT; SEAMEN; STORE ORDERS; WAGE-EARNER; ASSIGNMENT.

WAGON. A common vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise of all descriptions. The term does not include a hackney coach; Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418, 63 Am. Dec. 139; but a "buggy" is a wagon; Gordon v. Shields, 7 Kan. 325; contra, Dingman v. Raymond, 27 Minn. 507, 8 N. W. 597; as is a hearse, within the meaning of an exemption law; Spikes v. Burgess, 65 Wis. 431, 27 N. W. 184.

WAIFS. Stolen goods waived or scattered by a thief in his flight in order to effect his escape. Jacob.

Such goods, by the English common law, belong to the king; 1 Bla. Com. 296; 5 Co. 109; Cro. Eliz. 694. It did not apply to the goods of foreign merchants, as they are ignorant of the usages and laws of England.

Jacob. This prerogative has never been adopted here against the true owner, and never put in practice against the finder, though against him there would be better reason for adopting it; 2 Kent 292.

WAINAGIUM (Sax. wæg, Lat. vagina). That which is necessary to the farmer for the cultivation of his land. Barrington, Stat. 12; Magna Carta, c. 14. Instruments of husbandry. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 399. According to Selden and Lord Bacon, it is not the same as contenementum, used in the same chapter of Magna Carta, meaning the power of entertaining guests or, countenance, as common people say.

WAITING CLERKS IN CHANCERY. It was the duty of these officers to wait in attendance on the court of chancery. The office was abolished in 1842.

WAIVE. A term applied to a woman as outlaw is applied to a man. A man is an outlaw; a woman is a waive. Crabb, Tech. Dict.

To abandon or forsake a right.

To abandon without right: as, "if the felon waives, that is, leaves any goods in his flight from those who either pursue him, or are apprehended by him so to do,—he forfeits them, whether they be his own goods, or goods stolen by him." Bac. Abr. Forfeiture (B).

WAIVER. The relinquishment or refusal to accept of a right. Cited Hecht v. Brandus, 4 Misc. 58, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1004.

The intentional relinquishment of a known right. Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. Ins. Co., 172 Fed. 364, 97 C. C. A. 62.

The intentional relinquishment of a known right with both knowledge of its existence and an intention to relinquish it. Portland & F. R. Co. v. Spillman, 23 Or. 587, 32 Pac. 689. See Holdsworth v. Tucker, 143 Mass. 374, 9 N. E. 764; Montague's Adm'r v. Massey, 76 Va. 314; Bennecke v. Ins. Co., 105 U. S. 359, 26 L. Ed. 990.

In practice, it is required of every one to take advantage of his rights at a proper time; and neglecting to do so will be considered as a waiver. If, for example, a defendant who has been misnamed in the writ and declaration pleads over, he cannot afterwards take advantage of the error by pleading in abatement; for his plea amounts to a waiver. Failure of counsel, either in brief or oral argument, to allude to an assignment of error, is a waiver thereof; American Fibre-Chamols Co. v. Fibre Co., 72 Fed. 508, 18 C. C. A. 662.

In seeking for a remedy, the party injured may, in some instances, waive a part of his right and sue for another: for example, when the defendant has committed a trespass on the property of the plaintiff by taking it away, and afterwards he sells it, the injured party may waive the trespass and bring an action of assumpsit for the recovery of the money thus received by the defendant; 1 Chitty, Pl. 90. A delay of two years in bringing an action in rem on a maritime lien, the vessel meantime having passed into other hands, is a waiver of the lien; The Asher W. Parker, 84 Fed. 832, 28 C. C. A. 224; but when objections are seasonably and appropriately made there can be no waiver; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 116 Ind. 578, 19 N. E. 440; and mere indulgence or silent acquiescence in the failure to perform is never construed into a waiver, unless some element of estoppel can be invoked; id.

In contracts, if, after knowledge of a supposed fraud, surprise, or mistake, a party performs the agreement in part, he will be considered as having waived the objection; 1 Bro. P. C. 289.

When a constitutional provision is designed for the protection solely of the property rights of the citizen, it is competent for him to waive the protection, and to consent to such action as would be invalid if taken against his will; Cooley, Const. Lim. 219. In criminal cases this doctrine can be true only to a very limited extent; Cooley, Const. Lim. 220. See JURY.

The right of a waiver, while extending to almost all descriptions of contractual, statutory, and constitutional privileges, is nevertheless subject to the control of public policy, which cannot be contravened by any conduct or agreement of the parties. Accordingly, all agreements will be held void which seek to waive objections to acts or defenses illegal at law; Boutelle v. Melendy, 19 N. H. 196, 49 Am. Dec. 152; Bosler v. Rheem, 72 Pa. 54; or which are forbidden on the ground of public policy or morality; Green v. Watson, 75 Ga. 471, 473, 45 Am. Rep. 479; Moxley v. Ragan, 10 Bush 156, 159, 19 Am. Rep. 61; Crump v. Com., 75 Va. 922, 924.

Waiver is distinguishable from ratification. Ratification is an adoption of a contract made on one's behalf by some one whom we did not authorize, which relates back to the execution of the contract and renders it obligatory from the outset. Waiver is the renunciation of some rule which invalidates the contract, but which, having been introduced for the benefit of the contracting party, may be dispensed with at his pleasure; Reid v. Field, 83 Va. 26, 29, 1 S. E. 395.

While the term "acquiescence" is sometimes used in the opinions to denote that species of waiver which arises by tacit consent or by failure of a person for an unreasonable length of time to act upon rights of which he has full knowledge, nevertheless it is a species of waiver and differs in meaning only in that the term is limited in its application to one manner of waiver; Alabama C. Co. v. Equipment Co., 131 Ga. 365, 371, 62 S. E. 160. Waiver is distinguished however from election; id.; modification;

Clark v. West, 125 App. Div. 654, 110 N. Y. Supp. 110; release; id.; and estoppel; Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 395, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115.

In the absence of conduct creating an estoppel, a waiver should be supported by an agreement founded upon a valuable consideration; United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 82 Fed. 406, 409, 27 C. C. A. 42, 47 L. R. A. 450; although a consideration, such as is necessary to support a contract, is not always essential; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Milwaukee, 126 Wis. 110, 105 N. W. 563.

Waiver is a mixed question of law and fact. It is the duty of the court to define the law applicable to waiver, but it is the province of the jury to say whether the facts of the particular case constitute waiver as defined by the court; Nickerson v. Nickerson, 80 Me. 100, 105, 12 Atl. 880. X

WANTON AND FURIOUS DRIVING. An offence against public health, which under the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 56, is punishable as a misdemeanor by fine or imprisonment. In this country the offence is usually provided for by state, county, or municipal legislation.

WANTON NEGLIGENCE. A heedless and reckless disregard for another's rights, with the consciousness that the act or omission to act may result in injury to another. Hazle v. R. Co., 173 Fed. 431.

WANTONLY. Done in a licentious spirit, perversely, recklessly, without regard to propriety or the rights of others; careless of consequences, and yet without settled malice. State v. Morgan, 98 N. C. 641, 3 S. E. 927; North Carolina v. Vanderford, 35 Fed. 282.

WANTONNESS. A licentious act by one man towards the person of another, without regard to his rights; as, for example, if a man should attempt to pull off another's hat against his will, in order to expose him to ridicule, the offence would be an assault, and if he touched him it would amount to a battery. See State v. Brigman, 94 N. C. 888.

WAPENTAKE. In Saxon Law. A subdivision of a country, used in Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 543.

It was called a wapentake from wapon, arms, and tae, to touch; because when the chief of the hundred entered upon his office he appeared in the field on a certain day, on horseback, with a pike in his hand, and all the principal men met him with lances. Upon this he alighted, and they all touched his pike with their lances, in token of their submission to his authority. In this court causes of great moment were heard and determined, as Mr. Dugdale has shown from several records. Besides which it took cognizance of theft, trials by ordeal, view of frankpledge, and the like; whence after the conquest it was called the sheriff's tourn, and as regarded the examination of the pledges, the court of the view of frankpledge. These pledges were no other than the freemen within the liberty, who, according to an institution of King Alfred, were mutually pledged for the good behavior of each other. Fortescue, de Laud. c. 24; Dugdale, Orig. Jur.

27; 4 Bla. Com. 273. Sir Thomas Smith derives it from the custom of taking away the arms at the muster of each hundred, from those who could not find sureties for good behavior. Rep. Angl. lib. 2, c. 16.

WAR. An armed contest between nations. Grotius, de Jur. Bell. l. 1, c. 1. The state of nations among whom there is an interruption of all pacific relations, and a general contention by force, authorized by the sovereign. 1 Kent *61.

An armed contest to maintain the rights of a nation or to bring about a settlement of its disputes with other nations. It is also defined as a hostile contest with armies between two or more states claiming sufficient rights. Snow, Lect. Int. L. 82.

A civil war is one confined to a single nation. It is public on the part of the established government, and private on the part of the people resisting its authority, but both the parties are entitled to all the rights of war as against each other, and even as respects neutral nations; Wheat. Int. L. § 296.

The right of making war belongs in every civilized nation to the supreme power of the state. The exercise of this right is regulated by the fundamental laws in each country, and may be delegated to its inferior authorities in remote possessions, or even to a commercial corporation. A contest by force between independent sovereign states is called a public war. If it is declared in form, or duly commenced, it entitles both the belligerent parties to all the rights of war against each other. A formal declaration of war to the enemy was once considered necessary to legalize hostilities between nations. The Romans declared war with religious ceremony; and an invasion without a declaration was unlawful; 1 Kent *53. The present usage is to publish a manifesto within the territory of the state declaring war, announcing the existence of hostilities and the motives for commencing them, usually to warn neutral states; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 82. A civil war is never declared; Boyd's Wheat. Int. L. § 294. It dates from the time the insurgents are declared belligerents; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 82. Even where there is a formal declaration of war, there is said to be strong tendency to date the war from the first act of hostility; id. That the recent tendency is to consider a declaration of war desirable and necessary, see 28 Am. L. Rev. 754. Since the time of Bynkershoek it has been the settled practice in Europe that war may lawfully exist by a declaration which is unilateral, or without a declaration on either side; it may begin by mutual hostilities; 1 Kent 54; at least as to subjects of a belligerent state; L. R. 3 Adm. & Ecc. 390; but some public act should be done to announce to the people a state of war, and to apprise neutrals of its existence; 1 Halleck, Int. Law, Baker's ed. 542. A state of war may exist without any formal declaration of it by either party, and this is true of both civil and foreign war; Prize Cases, 2 Black (U. S.) 635, 17 L. Ed. 459. A state of civil war exists whenever the regular course of justice is interrupted by insurrection; id.

The war between Great Britain and the United States was a civil war until the declaration of independence, when it became a public war between independent governments; Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 199, 224, 1 L. Ed. 568. So the war of secession in this country was a civil war after the president's proclamation of August 16, 1861. See Mayer v. Reed, 37 Ga. 482; 23 Am. L. Reg. 129; SECESSION. The general doctrines applicable to the subjects of belligerent nations have been held to be applicable to the hostile parties in that war; Prize Cases, 2 Black (U. S.) 635, 17 L. Ed. 459. In a civil war the sovereign has belligerent as well as sovereign rights against his rebel subjects, and may exercise either at his discretion; Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 419, 17 L. Ed. 915; Kershaw v. Kelsey, 100 Mass. 576, 97 Am. Dec. 124, 1 Am. Rep. 142.

The constitution of the United States (art. 1, sec. 8) provides that congress shall have power to declare war. See Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 404, 17 L. Ed. 915; Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 268, 20 L. Ed. 135; Tyler v. Defrees, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 331, 20 L. Ed. 161. An act of congress is necessary to the commencement of a foreign war and is in itself a declaration; 1 Kent 55. It fixes the date of the war; Thayer, Const. Cas. 2352. After congress has acted, it is not necessary to communicate the action to the enemy; 1 Kent 55; but an Indian war may exist without act of congress; Marks v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 147. Actual hostilities may determine the date of the commencement of a war; a formal proclamation is unnecessary; The Buena Ventura, 87 Fed. 927.

Belligerent states not infrequently adopt the rule of reciprocity in the conduct of war, but this usage has not yet assumed the character of a positive law. Frequently an opposing belligerent applies the rule of reciprocity and metes out to his adversary the same measure of justice that he receives from him. But it is said that where one belligerent exceeds his extreme rights and becomes barbarous and cruel in his conduct, the other should not, as a general thing, follow and retort upon its subjects by treating them in like manner; 2 Halleck, Int. Law 35.

Under the regulations of the United States, the army is not allowed to use the enemy's flag or uniform for purposes of deceit, but the navy may use a foreign flag to deceive the enemy if it is hauled down before a gun is fired; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 82. See WEAPONS; FLAG.

When war exists between two nations, every individual of the one is theoretically at war with every individual of the other; though modern international law has attempted, with some success, to confine the contest to the armies of the contesting powers and relieve non-combatants from loss and suffering as much as possible; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 82.

War gives this government full right to take the persons and confiscate the property of the enemy wherever found in the United States, and while the humane policy of modern times may have mitigated this rigid rule, it cannot impair the right itself; Brown v. U. S., 8 Cra. (U. S.) 110, 3 L. Ed. 504. The right to take enemy's property found in the United States requires an act of congress; id., Story, J., diss. This rule applies to the property of a neutral within the enemy's lines; Young v. U. S., 97 U. S. 60, 24 L. Ed. 992; but it was held in Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, 2 Wall. 419, 17 L. Ed. 915, that the right to take the property of an enemy on land is substantially restricted "to special cases dictated by the necessary operations of the war;" "the seizure of private property of pacific persons for the sake of gain is excluded." See Briggs v. U. S., 143 U. S. 356, 12 Sup. Ct. 391, 36 L. Ed. 180.

A belligerent may, by express law or edict, confiscate the property or even the land of an alien enemy, within its territory or occupation; Union Ins. Co. v. U. S., 6 Wall. (U. S.) 759, 18 L. Ed. 879; Kershaw v. Kelsey, 100 Mass. 574, 97 Am. Dec. 124, 1 Am. Rep. 142.

The right of a belligerent to confiscate debts due by its subjects to enemy's subjects is usually recognized, but seldom exercised; 1 Kent *62; and this is more especially true in relation to the public debt of a belligerent state to an enemy's subject; 1 Halleck, Int. L. 535. The seizure by the United States of enemy's property on land cannot be authorized by the law of nations; it can be upheld only by an act of congress; U. S. v. Shares of Capital Stock, 5 Blatch. 231, Fed. Cas. No. 15,961. Vessels and cargo belonging to trading concerns in the enemy's country, or corporations organized under its laws, are subject to capture, regardless of the domicile of the partners or stockholders; The Buena Ventura, 87 Fed. 927.

A belligerent has a right to seize and retain as prisoners of war all subjects of an enemy state found within its territory; but this right has usually been modified by treaty, usage, or municipal regulations, and is seldom enforced; 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 530.

Territory conquered during a war is part of the domain of the conqueror for all commercial and belligerent purposes, so long as he continues in possession; Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar v. Boyle, 9 Cra. 191, 3 L. Ed. 701; but it is not incorporated into the domain of the conqueror except by a treaty of peace under which the former owner renounces it, or by long possession; U. S. v. Hayward, 2 Gall. 485, Fed. Cas. No. 15,336.

It is a general practice to permit alien residents to remain in the country during a war and to protect their property from seizure, or, if they return to their own state, to allow them to take it with them. Even property of the enemy found afloat in ports at the breaking out of the war is usually allowed safe conduct to a home port with time to finish loading cargo. The president's proclamation of April 26, 1898, fixed April 21 as the beginning of the Spanish war, and gave Spanish merchant vessels found in United States ports till May 21, inclusive, to load and depart with safe conduct to their destination, except vessels carrying military or naval officers, or coal in excess of their own needs, or contraband, or despatches; and permitted any such vessels which, prior to April 21, had sailed from any foreign port to any United States port, to reach their destination, unload, and return to any port not blockaded.

Congress, in a resolution approved by the President on April 20, 1898, declared that the people of Cuba are, and of right, ought to be, free and independent. Diplomatic relations were terminated on the same day. On April 22, a blockade of a part of the Cuban coast was instituted. On April 23, the queen of Spain, and on the 26th, the president, declared war. See The Pedro, 175 U. S. 354, 20 Sup. Ct. 138, 44 L. Ed. 195. Congress declared on April 25 that a state of war had existed from and after April 21. Id. See, also, The Rita, 87 Fed. 925.

The Boxer uprising in China in June, 1900, constituted a state of war within the 58th Article of War; Hamilton v. McClaughry, 136 Fed. 445.

War suspends all commercial intercourse between the citizens of belligerent states, except so far as may be allowed by the sovereign authority. The only exceptions are contracts for ransom and other matters of absolute necessity and the payment of debts to an agent of an alien enemy where such agent resides in the same state with the debtor; but even such payments to an agent of an alien enemy must not be done with a view of transmitting the funds to the principal during the continuance of war; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 429, 24 L. Ed. 453.

The doctrine of the renewal of contracts suspended by a war is based on considerations of equity and justice and cannot be invoked to revive a contract which it would be inequitable to revive, as where time is of the essence of the contract or the parties cannot be made equal; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. Ed. 789. In a learned opinion by Gray, J., in Kershaw v. Kelsey, 100 Mass. 572, 97 Am. Dec. 124, 1 Am. Rep. 142 (quoted with approval in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 429, 24 L. Ed. 453, and Williams v. Paine, 169 U.

S. 72, 18 Sup. Ct. 279, 42 L. Ed. 658), it was said:

"The result is, that the law of nations, as judicially declared, prohibits all intercourse between citizens of the two belligerents which is inconsistent with the state of war between their countries, and that this includes any act of voluntary submission to the enemy, or receiving his protection; as well as any act or contract which tends to increase his resources; and every kind of trading or commercial dealing or intercourse, whether by transmission of money or goods, or orders for the delivery of either, between the two countries, directly or indirectly, or through the intervention of third persons or partnerships, or by contracts in any form looking to or involving such transmission, or by insurances upon trade with or by the enemy. Beyond the principle of these cases the prohibition has not been carried by judicial decision. The more sweeping statements in the text-books are taken from the dicta which we have already examined, and in none of them is any other example given than those just mentioned. At this age of the world, when all the tendencies of the law of nations are to exempt individuals and private contracts from injury or restraint in consequence of war between their governments, we are not disposed to declare such contracts unlawful as have not been heretofore adjudged to be inconsistent with a state of war."

The trading or transmission of property or money which is prohibited by international law during war, is from or to one of the countries at war. An alien enemy residing in this country may contract and sue as a citizen can; Kershaw v. Kelsey, 100 Mass. 573, 97 Am. Dec. 124, 1 Am. Rep. 142. Where a creditor, though the subject of the enemy, remains in the country of the debtor, or has an agent there, payment to the creditor or his agent is not a violation of the duties imposed by a state of war upon the debtor; id.

The breaking out of a war does not necessarily and as a matter of law revoke every agency; it depends upon the circumstances and the nature of the agency; Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 73, 18 Sup. Ct. 279, 42 L. Ed. 658. A contract of agency of an insurance company is revoked; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425, 24 L. Ed. 453, citing New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. Ed. 789. In order to the subsistence of an agency during the war, it must have the assent of the parties; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 429, 24 L. Ed. 453.

War suspends the capacity of an alien enemy to sue in our courts; Fairfax v. Hunters, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 603, 3 L. Ed. 453; Johnson v. Thirteen Bales, 2 Paine 639, Fed. Cas. No. 7,415. But see 4 Am. L. T. 68. An assignee of an alien enemy cannot sustain a claim in a prize court; The Emulous, 1 Gall. 563, Fed. Cas. No. 4,479; but an alien enemy may come into admiralty and defend his property seized as prize on the high seas; U. S. v. Shares of Capital Stock, 5 Blatchf. 231, Fed. Cas. No. 15,961. The right to proceed in an action begun before the war is only suspended; Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Woolw. 102, Fed. Cas. No. 4,344. Neither interest nor the statute of limitations run during a war.

As to the effect of war on life insurance contracts, the authorities vary; that the failure to pay premiums avoids the policy, see New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. Ed. 789; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425, 24 L. Ed. 453; that the contract is not annulled by war, but only suspended, see New York L. Ins. Co. v. Clifton, 7 Bush (Ky.) 179, 3 Am. Rep. 290; Mutual B. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillyard, 37 N. J. L. 444, 18 Am. Rep. 741; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Warwick, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 614, 3 Am. Rep. 218; Hamilton v. Ins. Co., 9 Blatchf. 234, Fed. Cas. 5,986; Statham v. Ins. Co., 45 Miss. 581, 7 Am. Rep. 737. In most of the latter cases either the insured had made a tender of the premiums or the company's agent had removed during the war; 1 Biddle, Ins. § 489. There seems to be authority that a fire insurance policy is not annulled by war; see Mahler v. Ins. Co., 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 399; as to a marine policy, see Cohen v. Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 619, 10 Am. Rep. 522.

In time of war it is lawful to pull down or injure the property of a private person; salus populi suprema lex; 4 Term 796.

An American corporation doing business in Cuba was, during the war with Spain, an enemy of the United States with respect to its property found and then used in Cuba, and such property would be regarded as enemy's property, liable to be seized and confiscated by the United States in the progress of the war; Juragua I. Co. v. U. S., 212 U. S. 297, 29 Sup. Ct. 385, 53 L. Ed. 520. All persons residing in Cuba during the war, whether Spanish subjects or Americans, were to be deemed enemies of the United States; Herrera v. U. S., 222 U. S. 558, 32 Sup. Ct. 179, 56 L. Ed. 316.

No civil liability attached to officers or soldiers for an act done in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare, in the late rebellion under and by military authority of either party; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 9 Sup. Ct. 763, 33 L. Ed. 193. The legal condition of a Confederate soldier was that of a soldier serving against the United States under a hostile power. His legal condition subsequently to May, 1865, was that of a prisoner of war upon parole; Carter v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 326.

In cases arising out of the Spanish-American war, it is held that vessels of war have the right, in the absence of any declaration of exemption by the political power, to capture enemy's property wherever found afloat, and the burden is on the claimant to show that it comes within the exemption of any such proclamation. Cargo shipped from this country in an enemy's vessel to residents of a neutral country is presumably neutral cargo; but if so shipped to the enemy's country it is presumptively enemy's property, but the latter presumption may be overcome; The Buena Ventura, 87 Fed. 927.

At the Hague Peace Conference of 1899 two conventions were adopted relating to the rights and duties of belligerents in time of war; and at the Hague Peace Conference of 1907, the above conventions were revised and seven other conventions adopted regulating the law upon other questions of land and maritime warfare.

The Convention Relative to the Commencement of Hostilities (1907) provides that hostilities must not commence without a previous and unequivocal warning, which shall take the form either of a declaration of war, giving reasons, or of an ultimatum with a conditional declaration of war. Moreover, the state of war must be notified to neutral powers without delay.

The Conventions Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land (1899-1907) define the law upon the following subjects:

Qualifications of Belligerents. The laws, rights and duties of war apply not only to the army of a belligerent, but also to militia and corps of volunteers, provided certain conditions be fulfilled by the latter. Likewise the population of a territory who, without organization, rise up against an invader, have the rights of belligerents if they respect the laws and customs of war.

Prisoners of War (q. v.).

The Sick and Wounded. See Geneva Convention below.

Hostilities. Under this head restrictions are laid down as to the means which may be employed to injure the enemy, and the conditions are stated under which seizures and bombardments may be undertaken.

Spies. See SPY.

Flags of Truce (q. v.).

Capitulations. The obligation to observe them scrupulously is affirmed.

Armistices. See ARMISTICE; TRUCE.

Military Authority over the Territory of the Hostile State. See MILITARY OCCUPATION.

The Convention Relative to the Status of Enemy Merchant-Ships at the Outbreak of Hostilities (1907) provides that merchant-ships in the ports of a belligerent at the commencement of hostilities should be allowed to depart freely with a passport to their port of destination. Moreover, enemy merchant-ships, which have left their last port of departure in ignorance of the commencement of hostilities, cannot be confiscated. In both cases enemy cargo is given the same rights as enemy ships.

The Convention Relative to the Conversion of Merchant-Ships into Warships (1907) defines the conditions subject to which such conversion may take place in time of war. See PRIVATEER.

The Convention Relative to the Laying of Automatic Submarine Contact Mines (1907), while not forbidding their employment, restricts it by forbidding the laying of unanchored mines, and of anchored mines which do not become harmless as soon as they have broken loose from their moorings. Moreover, it is forbidden to lay automatic contact mines off the coasts of the enemy with the sole object of intercepting commercial navigation. Other rules are laid down to insure the safety of merchant-ships, for the destruction of which the mines are not intended.

The Convention Respecting Bombardment by Naval Forces in Time of War (1907) lays down rules safeguarding the rights of non-combatant inhabitants and public buildings not used in the defense of the city. It is forbidden to bombard undefended ports or towns unless the latter refuse to comply with requisitions for supplies for the immediate use of the naval forces, and then only after due notice has been given. But bombardment for non-payment of money contributions is forbidden. Buildings devoted to public worship, art, science, or charitable purposes, historic monuments, and hospitals must be spared as far as possible.

The Conventions for the Adaptation of the Principles of the Geneva Convention to Maritime War (1899 and 1907) lay down rules providing for the protection from hostilities of military hospital ships, together with their religious and medical staff, provided such ships are not used for military purposes and keep aloof from the combat.

The Convention Relative to Certain Restrictions on the Exercise of the Right of Capture in Maritime War (1907) provides that the postal correspondence of neutrals or belligerents found on board a neutral or enemy ship at sea is inviolable; an exception, however, is made in case of violation of blockade. Vessels employed in coast fisheries are exempt from capture provided they take no part in hostilities. See The Habana, 175 U. S. 677, 20 Sup. Ct. 290, 44 L. Ed. 320. The officers and crew of captured merchant-ships, if neutral citizens, are not to be made prisoners of war, and if enemy citizens, are to be released upon written promise not to engage in the operations of war.

The Convention Relative to the Establishment of an International Prize Court (1907). See PRIZE COURT.

The following declarations were also adopted:

Declaration Prohibiting the Discharge of Projectiles and Explosives from Balloons (1899 and 1907). The term of the declaration of 1907 expires at the close of the third Peace Conference.

The Declaration Ratifying the Declaration of St. Petersburg of 1868 (1899) is an agreement to abstain from the use of projectiles the sole object of which is the defusion of asphyxiating or deleterious gases.

The Declaration Prohibiting the Use of Bullets with a Hard Envelope (1899) is in accordance with the Declaration of St. Petersburg of 1868.

WAR CLAIMS. As to federal legislation on this subject, see U. S. v. R. Co., 163 U. S. 244, 16 Sup. Ct. 993, 41 L. Ed. 145. The act of 1875, Feb. 18, provided that the court of claims should have no jurisdiction over claims growing out of the destruction of property during the civil war; and the act of March 3, 1887, excludes such claims from the jurisdiction of the said court and of the district and circuit courts. Decisions under the act of 1864 will be found in U. S. v. R. Co., 163 U. S. 253, 16 Sup. Ct. 993, 41 L. Ed. 145, which holds that the court of claims has no jurisdiction over a claim for railroad iron appropriated by the army "while suppressing the rebellion." The United States is not responsible for the destruction of private property by their military operations during the civil war, committed by either army; nor, where they rebuild the property (a railroad bridge), can it recover from the owner for the cost; U. S. v. R. Co., 120 U. S. 227, 7 Sup. Ct. 490, 30 L. Ed. 634. See WAR.

Under the prohibitions of the Tucker act of congress, March 3, 1887, the court of claims has no jurisdiction of claims for seizures made in Santiago, Cuba, after its capitulation, in violation of the president's proclamation of July 13, 1898, or of the laws of war. Rights of Spanish subjects against the United States for illegal seizures, etc., were taken away by the treaty of peace; Herrera v. U. S., 222 U. S. 558, 32 Sup. Ct. 179, 56 L. Ed. 316.

WAR OFFICE. In England. A term applied to the Department of State for War.

WARD. An infant placed by authority of law under the care of a guardian.

See GUARDIAN.

A subdivision of a city to watch in the daytime, for the purpose of preventing violations of the law. It is the duty of all police officers and constables to keep ward in their respective districts. It now indicates a subdivision of a city.

WARD IN CHANCERY. An infant who is under the superintendence of the chancellor.

WARDEN. A guardian; a keeper. This is the name given to various officers; as, the warden of a prison, the port warden of the port of Philadelphia, church-wardens. As to the latter, see Baum, Church Law.

Officials over forests. They were the executive officers of the crown, to whom its writs were addressed, and were somewhat analogous the sheriff. Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 341. Abolished in 1817.

WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See CINQUE PORTS.

WARDMOTE (from ward, and Sax. mote, or gemote, a meeting). In English Law. A court held in every ward in London, with power to inquire into and present all defaults concerning the watch and police doing their duty, that engines, etc., are provided against fire, that persons selling ale and beer be honest and suffer no disorders, nor permit gaming, etc., that they sell in lawful measures, and searches are to be made for beggars, vagrants, and idle persons, etc., who shall be punished. Chart. Hen. II.; Cunningham; Wharton.

WARDS AND LIVERIES, COURT OF. A court established in England in the sixteenth century. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 59.

WARDSHIP AND MARRIAGE. In English Law. The right of the lord over the person and estate of the tenant when the latter was under a certain age.

Wardship was incident to a tenure by knight's service (see FEUDAL LAW), and to a tenure in socage; by the latter the nearest relation to whom the inheritance could not descend was entitled to the custody of the person and estate of the heir till he attained the age of fourteen years; at which period the wardship ceased, and the guardian was bound to account. Wardship in copyhold estates partook of that in chivalry and that in socage. Like the former, the lord was the guardian; like the latter, he was required to account. 2 Bla. Com. 67, 87, 97; Glanville, lib. 7, c. 9; Grand Cout. c. 33; Reg. Maj. c. 42.

In the feudal law, after the Conquest, the rights of wardship and marriage became definite rights of great pecuniary value both to the king and the mesne lords. The king arranged the marriage of a female heiress. Until majority he had the custody of the sons and heirs of his tenants who had died and of their estates, as also of the estates of his female wards. These were rights which could be bought and sold. Magna Carta recognized them and provided that the guardian must not waste his ward's lands nor compel a marriage to one of lower rank. If the ward married without a license, double the value of the marriage could be exacted and the land held till it was paid. Though the lord could not compel a marriage, he could, upon the ward's refusal, exact the value of the marriage. By the 16th century these rights were almost exclusively vested in the king.

They were confined to tenures by military service and grand serjeanty and did not (or did not ordinarily; Jenks, Mod. Land L. 18) extend to socage tenures. By Statute of Marlborough (1267), the heir, on reaching his majority, became entitled to an account, and the marriage of the heir could not be given or sold "but to the advantage of the fore-said heir"; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 55.

The infancy of an heir in socage ceased at 14 years; of an heir in chivalry, at 21. The guardian in socage was strictly accountable for the profits of the land; the guardian in chivalry might, subject to certain restrictions on waste, make his profit out of it. The guardianship in socage went to the next of kin who could not inherit; Jenks Mod. Land L. 18.

See RAVISHMENT OF WARD.

WAREHOUSE. A place adapted to the reception and storage of goods and merchandise. Owen v. Boyle, 22 Me. 47.

A radical change was made in the revenue laws of the United States by the establishment, under the act of congress of Aug. 6, 1846, of the warehousing system. This statute is commonly called the Warehousing Act. Its evident object is to facilitate and encourage commerce by exempting the importer from the payment of duties until he is ready to bring his goods into market; Tremlett v. Adams, 13 How. (U. S.) 295, 14 L. Ed. 152. Previous to the passage of that act, no goods chargeable with cash duties could be landed at the port of delivery until the duties were paid at the port of entry. The importer had no right to land them anywhere until they had been passed through the custom-house. Before that act, the only provisions existing in relation to the warehousing of goods were merely applicable to special cases, such as where the vessel in which the goods were imported was subject to quarantine regulations, or where the entry might have been incomplete, or the goods had received damage, or where a landing was compelled at a port other than the one to which the vessel was destined, on account of distress of weather or other necessity, or in case of the importation of wines, etc.

The warehousing system was extended by the establishment of private bonded warehouses. Act of March 28, 1854, R. S. §§ 2964, 2965.

Merchandise arriving at certain ports, destined for certain other ports, may be shipped to destination in bond without appraisement and liquidation of duties. See 2 Supp. R. S. 3, note.

Where warehouses are situated in a state, and their business carried on therein exclusively, a state statute prescribing regulations for their governance is not unconstitutional, it being a matter of purely domestic concern, and even where their business affects interstate as well as state commerce, such a statute can be enforced until congress acts in reference to their interstate relations; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77.

Goods stored in a United States bonded warehouse on which duties remain unpaid are in possession of the United States, and an order directing a warehouseman to deliver them to a vendee, even though accepted by the warehouseman, does not constitute a constructive or symbolical delivery, or a receipt or an acceptance of the goods sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds; In re Clifford, 2 Sawy. 428, Fed. Cas. No. 2,893.

Every distiller of spirits shall provide a warehouse on his distillery premises to be used only for storage of distilled spirits of his own manufacture under an internal revenue storekeeper and to be considered a bonded warehouse of the United States; R. S. § 3271 et seq.

The word "warehouse," when used alone, means a bonded warehouse; Constable v. S. S. Co., 154 U. S. 51, 87, 14 Sup. Ct. 1062, 38 L. Ed. 903.

See POLICE POWER; RATES; WAREHOUSE-MAN.

WAREHOUSEMAN. A person who receives goods and merchandise to be stored in his warehouse for hire. He is not a guarantor of the title of property placed in his custody, although his receipts therefor are by statute negotiable; Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. v. Kiger, 103 U. S. 352, 26 L. Ed. 433.

He is bound to use ordinary care in preserving such goods and merchandise, and his neglect to do so will render him liable to the owner; 1 Esp. 315; Story, Bailm. § 444; Backus v. Start, 13 Fed. 69; Nichols v. Smith, 115 Mass. 332; Buckingham v. Fisher, 70 Ill. 121; Reamer v. Davis, 85 Ind. 201. The warehouseman's liability commences as soon as the goods arrive and the crane of the warehouse is applied to raise them into the warehouse; 4 Esp. 262. See Farrell & Co. v. R. R. Co., 102 N. C. 390, 9 S. E. 302, 3 L. R. A. 647, 11 Am. St. Rep. 760; Titsworth v. Winnegar, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 148. He cannot have possession of another man's property, with its accompanying duties and responsibilities forced upon him against his will; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Transit Co., 45 N. J. Eq. 50, 17 Atl. 146, 6 L. R. A. 855.

Warehousemen have a lien on property left in their custody, for their hire, labor, and services; 1 Esp. 109; Steinman v. Wilkins, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 466, 42 Am. Dec. 254; Jones, Liens § 967; being due on all goods stored under a single contract; Devereux v. Fleming, 53 Fed. 401; though in some cases this lien has been looked upon only as specific, and not general; Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. 446. See Story, Bailm. 452; 3 Kent § 635. A warehouseman cannot recover storage for property stored for a certain time for a definite sum, where it is destroyed within the time, without his negligence; Archer v. McDonald, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 194; but under a custom to collect charges when the goods are ordered out, their accidentally burning will not release the owner from paying storage; Jones v. Chaffin, 102 Ala. 382, 15 South. 143. Grain delivered to a warehouseman upon the agreement that it may be mixed with other of like grade, and held for the owner is a bailment not a sale; Ardinger v. Wright, 38 Ill. App. 98.

A statute requiring warehousemen operating public elevators to insure grain at their own expense is valid; Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. 857, 38 L. Ed. 757. See WHARFINGER; RATES.

Warehouse Receipts. Receipts given by a warehouseman for chattels placed in his possession for storage purposes. Burton v. Curryea, 40 Ill. 320, 89 Am. Dec. 350. They are not in a technical sense negotiable instruments; 2 Ames, Bills & N. 782. It has been held, that, even where no statute has been enacted on this subject, inasmuch as these instruments have come to be considered the representatives of property, and an assignment is equivalent to the delivery of property, the warehouseman is estopped, as against an assignee for value without notice, to set up facts or agreements contradictory to their terms; Stewart v. Ins. Co., 9 Lea (Tenn.) 104.

Defendant is estopped from denying the validity of a warehouse receipt for grain fraudulently issued by its agent and transferred to the plaintiff for value without notice; Fletcher v. Elevator Co., 12 S. D. 643, 82 N. W. 184. Other cases holding the same view are Armour v. R. Co., 65 N. Y. 111, 22 Am. Rep. 603; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Bank, 10 Neb. 556, 7 N. W. 311, 35 Am. Rep. 488; contra, Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665; Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7, 26 L. Ed. 998; National Bank of Commerce v. R. Co., 44 Minn. 224, 46 N. W. 342, 560, 9 L. R. A. 263, 20 Am. St. Rep. 566.

The Warehouse Receipts Act has been enacted in California, Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, Alaska, District of Columbia and the Philippines.

A warehouse receipt must embody within its terms: (a) The location of the warehouse where the goods are stored; (b) the date of the issue of the receipt; (c) the consecutive number of the receipt; (d) a statement whether the goods received will be delivered to the bearer, to a specified person, or to a specified person or his order; (e) the rate of storage charges; (f) a description of the goods or of the packages containing them; (g) the signature of the warehouseman; (h) if the receipt is issued for goods of which the warehouseman is owner, either solely or jointly, or in common with others, the fact of such ownership; and (i) a statement of advances made and of liabilities incurred for which the warehouseman claims a lien. If the precise amount of such advances made or such liabilities incurred is, at the time of the issue of the receipt, unknown to the warehouseman or to his agent who issues it, a statement of the fact that advances have been made or liabilities incurred, and the purpose thereof, is sufficient. A warehouseman shall be liable for all damage caused by the omission from a receipt of any of the terms.

Receipts are negotiable or non-negotiable, the latter when it is stated that the goods received will be delivered to the depositor or any other specified person; and it shall have plainly placed on its face "non-negotiable" or "not negotiable." Such words, however, if placed on a negotiable receipt, shall be of no effect.

The warehouseman is obliged to deliver the goods upon a demand made by the holder of the receipt or by the depositor, if accompanied with (a) an offer to satisfy the warehouseman's lien, (b) to surrender the receipt properly indorsed, (c) and to give, when the goods are delivered, an acknowledgment that they have been delivered.

He may deliver the goods (a) to the person entitled to delivery by the terms of a non-negotiable receipt, (b) or to the holder of a negotiable receipt, if properly indorsed or if the goods are deliverable to bearer; but if the warehouseman had knowledge that delivery about to be made was to one not lawfully entitled to the possession of the goods, then he will be liable as for conversion if he so delivers them.

Negotiable receipts must be cancelled when the goods are delivered; when part only of the goods have been delivered, they must be cancelled (and a new receipt issued) or marked. The alteration of a receipt shall not excuse the warehouseman who issued it from any liability if such alteration was immaterial, authorized, or made without fraudulent intent, but he shall be liable according to the terms of the receipt as originally issued.

Where a negotiable receipt has been lost or destroyed, a court may order delivery of the goods upon satisfactory proof and the giving of a bond, but the delivery shall not relieve the warehouseman from liability to the holder of the receipt, for value and without notice of the delivery. A warehouseman cannot set up title in himself, and if more than one person claims title, he may require all known claimants to interplead. The warehouseman has reasonable time to determine the validity of claims.

He is liable for non-existence of goods, or misdescription, unless the goods are described in a receipt merely by a statement of marks or labels upon them, or upon packages containing them, and such statements are true.

As a rule, goods must be kept separate, but fungible goods may be commingled if the warehouseman is authorized by agreement or custom.

In case of negotiable receipts, the creditor's remedies are to reach the receipts.

The warehouseman has a lien for storage and preservation of the goods, for all lawful claims for money advanced, interest, insurance, transportation, labor, weighing, cooperation, and also all reasonable charges for notice and advertisements of sale, and for the sale of goods where default has been made in satisfying the warehouseman's lien. The lien may be lost by a surrender of the goods or by refusing to deliver when a proper tender has been made. In case of a negotiable receipt, it must state on its face charges for which lien is claimed. The goods need not be delivered until the lien is satisfied. The lien does not preclude the other remedies to which a warehouseman, as a creditor, is entitled. The lien may be satisfied, by giving notice with a brief description of the goods, with the demand and statement that unless claims be paid within a specified time the goods will be advertised for sale and sold by auction at a specified time and place. After a sale, the warehouseman shall not be liable for failure to deliver the goods.

Receipts may be negotiated the same as bills of lading.

See BILLS OF LADING; WARRANTY; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

This act substantially follows the common law (except perhaps in broadening negotiability) and its rules are largely in force in states which have not enacted it.

The issue of a receipt for goods not received; or containing false statements; or the issue of duplicate receipts not so marked; or the issue for warehouseman's goods of receipts which do not state that fact; or the delivery of the goods without surrender of the negotiable receipt; or the depositing of goods by one who has no title and taking a negotiable receipt which he negotiates; all of these acts are criminal offenses and punishable as such.

Under the Illinois constitution, which declares all elevators where grain is stored for a compensation to be "public warehouses," the owners of elevator companies were enjoined from mixing their own grain with other grain stored in their elevators; Hannah v. People, 198 Ill. 77, 64 N. E. 776.

See LIEN; BILL OF LADING; RATES; IM-

PAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS; SALES. The Uniform Act and the acts of all the states are set forth and the cases considered in Mohun, Warehousemen (2d ed. 1914).

WARRANT. A writ issued by a justice of the peace or other authorized officer, directed to a constable or other proper person, requiring him to arrest a person therein named, charged with committing some offence, and to bring him before that or some other justice of the peace.

Warrant and commission, outside of naval technicality, are synonymous words. There is no difference in force between a commission and a warrant as used in the navy, except that one recites that the appointment is made by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and the other does not. Both are signed by the president; Brown v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 543.

A bench-warrant is a process granted by a court, authorizing a proper officer to apprehend and bring before it some one charged with some contempt, crime, or misdemeanor. See BENCH-WARRANT.

A search-warrant is a process issued by a competent court or officer authorizing an officer therein named or described to examine a house or other place for the purpose of finding goods which it is alleged have been stolen. See SEARCH-WARRANT.

Under the English Extradition Act of 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, § 26, a warrant is defined as "any judicial document authorizing the arrest of a person accused or convicted of crime." 9 Q. B. D. 93.

A warrant should regularly bear the hand and seal of the justice, and be dated. It should contain a command to the officer to make a return thereof and of his doings thereon. But the want of such a command does not excuse him from the obligation of making a proper return; Tubbs v. Tukey, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 438, 50 Am. Dec. 744. And it is no ground for discharging a defendant that the warrant does not contain such a command; Com. v. Boon, 2 Gray (Mass.) 74. No warrant ought to be issued except upon the oath or affirmation of the witness charging the defendant with the offence; Conner v. Com., 3 Binn. (Pa.) 38. A warrant will not justify the arrest of one not named therein, by reason of the fact that the name used was supposed to be his; West v. Cabell, 153 U. S. 78, 14 Sup. Ct. 752, 38 L. Ed. 643. It is competent to show that the affidavit was not filed until after the arrest; Smith v. Clausmeier, 136 Ind. 105, 35 N. E. 904, 43 Am. St. Rep. 311. Under a statute authorizing a writ of habeas corpus to determine the identity of the person arrested, the inquiry may embrace the sufficiency of the papers; People v. Conlin, 15 Misc. 303, 36 N. Y. Supp. 888. In England a person riding a bicycle without a light at night cannot be arrested or even stopped to ascertain his name and address, without a warrant; [1897] 2 Q. B. 452.

The reprehensible practice of issuing blank warrants, which once prevailed in England, was never adopted here. 2 Russ. Cr. 512; 1d. Raym. 546; 1 H. Bla. 13. See SEARCHES AND SEIZURES; ARREST.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY. An instrument in writing, addressed to one or more attorneys therein named, authorizing them, generally, to appear in any court, or in some specified court, on behalf of the person giving it, and to confess judgment in favor of some particular person therein named, in an action of debt, and usually containing a stipulation not to bring any writ of error, or file a bill in equity, so as to delay him.

An instrument authorizing an attorney at law to appear in behalf of its maker, or confess judgment against him. Treat v. Tolman, 113 Fed. 892, 51 C. C. A. 522.

This general authority is usually qualified by reciting a bond which commonly accompanies it, together with the condition annexed to it, or by a written defeasance stating the terms upon which it was given and restraining the creditor from making immediate use of it. In form, it is, generally, by deed; but it seems it need not necessarily be so; 5 Taunt. 264. This instrument is given to the creditor as a security. Possessing it, he may sign judgment, without its being necessary to wait the termination of an action. See 14 East 576; 2 Term 100.

A warrant of attorney given to confess a judgment is not revocable, and notwithstanding a revocation, judgment may be entered upon it; 2 Ld. Raym. 766, 850. The death of the debtor is, however, generally speaking, a revocation; Co. Litt. 52 b. In Pennsylvania, judgment may be entered by the prothonotary on such a warrant without the intervention of an attorney; 4 Sm. L. 278; the instrument must show on its face the amount due, unless it can be rendered certain by mere calculation; Connay v. Halstead, 73 Pa. 354. The general power ceases with the entry of judgment; Jackson v. Bartlett, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 361; Hinkley v. Water Power Co., 9 Minn. 55 (Gil. 44); contra, Gray v. Wass, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 257; Flanders v. Sherman, 18 Wis. 575. The virtue of a warrant of attorney is spent by the entry of one judgment, and a second judgment entered on the same warrant is irregular; Martin v. Rex, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 296; Fairchild v. Camac, 3 Wash. C. C. 558, Fed. Cas. No. 4,610. The judgment is as much the act of the court as if it were pronounced on nil dicit or a cognovit, and has the conclusive effect of a judgment on a verdict; Safe-Deposit & T. Co. v. Wright, 105 Fed. 158, 44 C. C. A. 421; Appeal of Lennig, 93 Pa. 307.

A party to a suit may in certain cases require the attorney who appears for the opponent to file of record a warrant of attorney.

See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Under the Pennsylvania practice, a motion for a rule on the plaintiff's attorney to file his warrant of attorney must be made by the defendant before he pleads; Mercier v. Mercier, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 142, 1 L. Ed. 324; Campbell v. Galbreath, 5 Watts (Pa.) 423; see Doe v. Abbott, 152 Ala. 246, 44 South. 637, 126 Am. St. Rep. 30. If the plaintiff raises the question, the burden of proof is on him; Aaron v. U. S., 155 Fed. 836, 84 C. C. A. 67. The entry of appearance for defendant is proof of authority and no additional evidence has ever been required; Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 830, 831, 6 L. Ed. 204. The plaintiff cannot question the authority of the defendant's solicitor. The plaintiff has brought the defendant into court; 1 Exch. 16.

WARRANTEE. One to whom a warranty is made. Sheppard, Touchst. 181.

WARRANTIA CHARTÆ. An ancient and now obsolete writ which was issued when a man was enfeoffed of land with warranty and then he was sued or impleaded in assize or other action, in which he could not vouch or call to warranty.

It was brought by the feoffer pending the first suit against him, and had this valuable incident, that when the warrantor was vouched, and judgment passed against the tenant, the latter obtained judgment simultaneously against the warrantor, to recover other lands of equal value. Funk v. Voneida, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 115, 14 Am. Dec. 617. See Maitland in 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 577.

WARRANTOR. One who makes a warranty. Shepp. Touchst. 181.

In Anglo-Saxon times, a person who sold property—land or movables—was obliged to have a warrantor. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 72.

WARRANTY. In Insurance. A stipulation or agreement on the part of the insured party, in the nature of a condition.

An express warranty is a particular stipulation introduced into the written contract by the agreement of the parties.

An implied warranty is an agreement which necessarily results from the nature of the contract: as, that the ship shall be seaworthy when she sails on the voyage insured.

An express warranty usually appears in the form of a condition, expressed or directly implied in the phraseology of the policy, stipulating that certain facts are or shall be true, or certain acts are or shall be done by the assured, who by accepting the insurance ratifies the stipulation.

Where the stipulation relates wholly to the future, it is a promissory condition or warranty; 1 Phill. Ins. § 754.

An express warranty must be strictly complied with; and the assured is not permitted to allege, in excuse for non-compliance, that the risk was not thereby affected, since the parties have agreed that the stipulated fact or act shall be the basis of the contract; 1 Phill. Ins. § 755; unless compliance is rendered illegal by a subsequent statute; id. § 769. All reasonable doubts as to whether statements inserted in or referred to in an insurance policy are warranties or representations should be resolved in favor of the assured; Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 58 Ark. 528, 25 S. W. 835; Anders v. Knights of Honor, 51 N. J. L. 175, 17 Atl. 119. When the application is by the express terms of the policy made a part of the contract, a breach of any warranty in the application invalidates the entire contract; Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 114 Fed. 268, 52 C. C. A. 154; but where a provision merely says that all statements are warranted to be full, complete and true, they amount to representations; Reppond v. Ins. Co., 100 Tex. 519, 101 S. W. 786, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 15 Ann. Cas. 618.

A breach of warranty vitiates the insurance, though the insured made the warranty without knowledge of its falsity; Clemans v. Soc. of Good Fellows, 131 N. Y. 485, 30 N. E. 496, 16 L. R. A. 33; Holloway v. Ins. Co., 48 Mo. App. 1; 9 L. R. Q. B. 328. Breach of warranty in an insurance policy does not avoid the policy when the insured is an infant; O'Rourke v. Ins. Co., 23 R. I. 457, 50 Atl. 834, 57 L. R. A. 496, 91 Am. St. Rep. 643.

Questions of warranty in insurance have been much litigated:

In fire policies, with reference to assignments of the insured property, or the policy; Hooper v. Fire Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. 424; Birdsey v. Ins. Co., 26 Conn. 165; conformity to charter; Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Keyser, 32 N. H. 313, 64 Am. Dec. 375; condition of the premises, including construction, locality, and manner of using; Townsend v. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 168; Frisbie v. Ins. Co., 27 Pa. 325; Wilson v. Ins. Co., 4 R. I. 141; distance of other buildings; Hall v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 185; Davis v. Ins. Co., 81 Ia. 496, 46 N. W. 1073, 10 L. R. A. 359, 25 Am. St. Rep. 509; frauds; Grigsby v. Ins. Co., 40 Mo. App. 276; kind of risk; Burbank v. Ins. Co., 24 N. H. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 300; Frost's D. L. & W. Works v. Ins. Co., 37 Minn. 300, 34 N. W. 35, 5 Am. St. Rep. 846; smoking on premises; Hosford v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 399, 8 Sup. Ct. 1199, 32 L. Ed. 196; limiting right of action; Haskins v. Ins. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 432; Brown v. Ins. Co., 5 R. I. 394; notice and demand; First Baptist Church v. Ins. Co., 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 69; and proof of loss; Trask v. Ins. Co., 29 Pa. 198, 72 Am. Dec. 622; Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 18 Ill. 553; Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 5 South. 116, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51; Cleaver v. Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 414, 39 N. W. 571, 15 Am. St. Rep. 275; Sugg v. Ins. Co., 98 N. C. 143, 3 S. E. 732; payment of premium; Buckbee v. Trust Co., 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 541; title; Loehner v. Ins. Co., 17 Mo. 247; Howard F. Ins. Co. v. Bruner, 23 Pa. 50; Ames v. Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. 253; value; Lee v. Ins. Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 324; concealment of facts as to title; Dittenbaugh v. Ins. Co., 150 Pa. 270, 24 Atl. 745, 30 Am. St. Rep. 805.

In life policies, with reference to assignment; Mutual P. Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 269; representation, or other stipulations; Miles v. Ins. Co., 3 Gray (Mass.) 580; Boland v. Ben. Ass'n, 74 Hun, 385, 26 N. Y. Supp. 433; Brady v. Ins. Ass'n, 60 Fed. 727, 9 C. C. A. 252; McGurk v. Ins. Co., 56 Conn. 528, 16 Atl. 263, 1 L. R. A. 563; that the insured is alive and in sound health; Bernard v. Ins. Ass'n, 14 App. Div. 142, 43 N. Y. Supp. 527. Where an application for life insurance is to be treated as a warranty it is to that extent a part of the policy; Kelley v. Ins. Co., 75 Fed. 637. A warranty that the insured will not die by his own hand is valid; id.

In marine policies, with reference to assignments; Marigny v. Ins. Co., 13 La. Ann. 338, 71 Am. Dec. 511; contraband trade; Decrow v. Ins. Co., 43 Me. 460; other insurance; Buffalo S. E. Works v. Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. 401; seaworthiness; Garrigues v. Cox, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 592, 2 Am. Dec. 493; Brooks v. Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 259; 5 M. & W. 414; Roccus, n. 22; Dodge v. Ins. Co., 85 Me. 215, 27 Atl. 105; Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 8 Sup. Ct. 534, 31 L. Ed. 497; suspension of risk; Bowditch Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Winslow, 3 Gray (Mass.) 415; title; Bidwell v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 179.

Waiver of the right to insist upon the performance of a condition may occur under a policy of this description; as, of the condition relative to assignment; Hale v. Ins. Co., 32 N. H. 295, 64 Am. Dec. 370; or answers to questions; Liberty Hall Ass'n v. Ins. Co., 7 Gray (Mass.) 261; or distance of buildings; Nute v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray 175; going out of limits; Bevin v. Ins. Co., 23 Conn. 244; additional insurance; Home Ins. Co. v. Marple, 1 Ind. App. 411, 27 N. E. 633; limitation of action; Ames v. Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. 253; Everett v. Ins. Co., 142 Pa. 332, 21 Atl. 819, 24 Am. St. Rep. 499; offer of arbitration; Cobb v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 192; payment of premium or assessment; Bouton v. Ins. Co., 25 Conn. 542; proof of loss; Noonan v. Ins. Co., 21 Mo. 81; title; Trott v. Ins. Co., 83 Me. 362, 22 Atl. 245. An insurance company cannot set up a forfeiture for a condition broken, against one whom its conduct has induced to believe that such provision would not be insisted upon; Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Keach, 134 Ill. 583, 26 N. E. 106; so an insurer is estopped to set up a breach of a warranty written by its agent for an illiterate person; O'Brien v. Society, 117 N. Y. 310, 22 N. E. 954; or made by the error of the agent; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Warttemberg, 79 Fed. 245, 24 C. C. A. 547.

A clause in a policy of insurance against fire that nothing but a distinct specific agreement clearly expressed and indorsed on the policy shall operate as a waiver of any printed or written condition, warranty, or restriction thereon, is construed to refer to those conditions which enter into and form a part of the contract of insurance, and not to these stipulations which are to be performed after a loss has occurred, such as giving notice and furnishing preliminary proof of loss; May, Ins. § 505.

See DEVIATION; POLICY; REPRESENTATION; SEAWORTHINESS; INSURANCE; WAIVER.

In Sales of Personal Property. A warranty is an express or implied statement of something which a party undertakes shall be part of a contract, and, though part of the contract, collateral to the express object of it. Benj. Sales § 600.

An express warranty is one by which the warrantor covenants or undertakes to insure that the thing which is the subject of the contract is or is not as there mentioned: as, that a horse is sound; that he is not five years old.

To create an express warranty, the word "warrant" need not be used, nor are any particular words necessary; McLennan v. Ohmen, 75 Cal. 558, 17 Pac. 687.

The Uniform Sales Act defines express warranty as any affirmation of fact or any promise by the seller relating to the goods, if the natural tendency is to induce the buyer to purchase the goods. Affirmation of value or statements of opinion are not warranties.

An implied warranty is one which, not being expressly made, the law implies by the facts of the sale. Cro. Jac. 197.

In general, there is no implied warranty of the quality of the goods sold; 2 Kent 374; Co. Litt. 102 a; Defreeze v. Trumper, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 274, 3 Am. Dec. 329; Dean v. Mason, 4 Conn. 428, 10 Am. Dec. 162; Winsor v. Lombard, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 59; especially in cases of a specific chattel already existing which the buyer has inspected; 4 M. & W. 64; Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165.

By the Uniform Sales Act the implied warranties of quality are: 1. Where the buyer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, and it appears that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment (whether he be the grower or manufacturer or not), there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose. 2. Where the goods are bought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description (whether he be the grower or manufacturer or not), there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be of merchantable quality. 3. If the buyer has examined the goods, there is no implied warranty as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed. 4. In the case of a contract to sell or a sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name, there is no implied warranty as to its fitness for any particular purpose. 5. An implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose may be annexed by the usage of trade. 6. An express warranty or condition does not negative a warranty or condition implied under this act unless inconsistent therewith.

But where a chattel is to be made or supplied to the order of the purchaser, there is an implied warranty that it is fit for the purpose for which it is ordinarily used, or for which it has been specially made; Benj. Sales § 645; Gaylord Mfg. Co. v. Allen, 53 N. Y. 515; Omaha C. C. & L. Co. v. Fay, 37 Neb. 68, 55 N. W. 211; Morse v. Stock Yard Co., 21 Or. 289, 28 Pac. 2, 14 L. R. A. 157; Bagley v. Fire Extinguisher Co., 150 Fed. 284, 80 C. C. A. 172. Thus where a party conveyed a ship to another by deed, but at the time of the conveyance the ship was ashore in a wrecked and ruinous condition, it was held that there was an implied warranty that the article conveyed should be a ship, and not a mere "bundle of timber"; 3 M. & W. 390. Another exception is in the sale of goods by sample. There is a warranty that their quality is equal to the sample; Bradford v. Manly, 13 Mass. 139, 7 Am. Dec. 122; Borrekins v. Bevan, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 37, 23 Am. Dec. 85; Leonard v. Fowler, 44 N. Y. 289; Brigham v. Retelsdorf, 73 Ia. 712, 36 N. W. 715; but a sale of goods by sample only binds the vendor to supply goods equal to sample, and not goods fit for a particular purpose; Kauffman Milling Co. v. Stuckey, 37 S. C. 7, 16 S. E. 192.

By the Sales Act, in the case of a contract to sell or a sale by sample there is an implied warranty (a) that the bulk shall correspond with the sample in quality; (b) that the buyer shall have a reasonable opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample; (c) if the seller is a dealer in goods of that kind, that then the goods shall be free from any defect, rendering them unmerchantable, which would not be apparent on a reasonable examination of the sample.

An implied warranty may also result from the usage of a particular trade; 2 Disney 482; 4 Taunt. 847. In a sale by description of goods not inspected by the buyer, there is an implied warranty that the goods are salable or merchantable; Baker v. Henderson, 24 Wis. 509; McClung v. Kelley, 21 Ia. 508; Gaylord Mfg. Co. v. Allen, 53 N. Y. 518; but see Whitman v. Freese, 23 Me. 212; and an express warranty of quality excludes any implied warranty that the articles sold are merchantable or fit for their intended use; De Witt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 10 Sup. Ct. 536, 33 L. Ed. 896. It has been held that words of description constitute a warranty that the articles sold are of the quality and description so described; Hogins v. Plympton, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 99; Borrekins v. Bevan, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 23, 23 Am. Dec. 85; but the better opinion has been said to be that the words of description constitute not a warranty of the description, but a condition precedent to the seller's right of action, that the thing which he offers to deliver, or has delivered, should answer the description; Heath Dry Gas Co. v. Hurd, 193 N. Y. 255, 86 N. E. 18, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 160; 4 M. & W. 39.

By the Sales Act, in the case of a contract to sell or sale of goods by description, there is an implied warranty that the goods shall correspond with the description and if the contract or sale be by sample, as well as by description, it is not sufficient that the bulk of the goods corresponds with the sample if the goods do not also correspond with the description.

Where the buyer relies on the seller's skill and judgment to supply him an article, there is an implied warranty that the article will suit the desired purpose; 2 M. & G. 279; Benj. Sales § 661. Finally, it is said that there is always an implied warranty in sales of provisions for household use; Winsor v. Lombard, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 57; Hoover v. Peters, 18 Mich. 51; Divine v. McCormick, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 116. But see Benj. Sales § 670. It is generally implied that they are wholesome, if the seller was a dealer; and importance is also attached to the fact that the buyer was buying for immediate consumption; Wiedeman v. Keller, 171 Ill. 93, 49 N. E. 210; Farren & Co. v. Dameron & Bailey, 99 Md. 293, 58 Atl. 367, 105 Am. St. Rep. 297; Tomlinson v. Armour & Co., 74 N. J. L. 274, 65 Atl. 883; Warren v. Buck, 71 Vt. 44, 42 Atl. 979, 76 Am. St. Rep. 754. So far as reliance on the seller's skill and judgment is essential to establish a warranty of provisions, the mere fact of purchase from a dealer for immediate consumption seems to have been regarded generally as sufficient evidence, but in a few jurisdictions it is held that proof of such reliance is essential and is not to be presumed; 7 H. & N. 955; Farrell v. Market Co., 198 Mass. 271, 84 N. E. 481, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884, 126 Am. St. Rep. 436, 15 Ann. Cas. 1076. The implied warranty of quality which attaches to provisions sold for domestic use has no application to the sale of a cow to a butcher, even although the vendor knew that it was intended to be slaughtered and retailed as meat; Wart v. Hoose, 65 Misc. 462, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1107.

Where the seller manufactured the goods which he sold, a warranty that the goods are merchantable is implied unless the buyer had an opportunity to inspect the goods and this inspection would have disclosed the defect; [1905] 1 K. B. 608; Buick Motor Co.

v. Mfg. Co., 150 Mich. 118, 113 N. W. 591; Pease v. Sabin, 38 Vt. 432, 91 Am. Dec. 364; Hood v. Bloch, 29 W. Va. 244, 11 S. E. 910. If the seller holds himself out to the buyer as the manufacturer of the subject matter of the bargain, the case is governed by the principles applicable to sales by manufacturers; 2 M. & G. 279. Special circumstances may indicate in particular cases that the risk, either wholly or in part, is assumed by the buyer. When goods are sold at second hand even by a manufacturer, it cannot be supposed that a warranty is implied of the same sort that would be implied had the goods been new; Morley v. Mfg. Co., 196 Mass. 257, 81 N. E. 993. Where a manufacturer sells goods which are a waste product, as such, it will be generally true that the buyer assumes the risk of the quality and value of the goods; Listman Mill Co. v. Miller, 131 Wis. 393, 111 N. W. 496.

According to the English and American Sales Acts, the seller impliedly warrants the merchantable character of the goods which he sells as fully when he is merely a dealer in goods of that description as when he is a manufacturer; [1903] 2 K. B. 148.

The manufacturer of goods impliedly warrants that goods are reasonably fit for the general purpose for which they are manufactured; Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 110 U. S. 108, 3 Sup. Ct. 537, 28 L. Ed. 86; The Nimrod, 141 Fed. 215; Redhead Bros. v. Inv. Co., 126 Ia. 410, 102 N. W. 144; Southern B. & I. Co. v. Machine Works, 109 Tenn. 67, 70 S. W. 614. The word "manufacturer" includes all sellers who produce the article which they sell; thus a grower of plants or seeds; Shaw v. Smith, 45 Kan. 334, 25 Pac. 886, 11 L. R. A. 681; Hoffman v. Dixon, 105 Wis. 315, 81 N. W. 491, 76 Am. St. Rep. 916; and one who has bred horses or cattle; Edwards v. Dillon, 147 Ill. 14, 35 N. E. 135, 37 Am. St. Rep. 199.

In the sale of commercial paper without indorsement or express assumption of liability on the paper itself, the contract of sale and the obligations which arise from it as between vendor and vendee are governed by the common law relating to the sale of goods and chattels; and the undoubted rule is that in such a sale the obligation of the vendor is not restricted to the mere question of forgery vel non, but depends on whether he has delivered that which he contracted to sell, this rule being designated in England as a condition of the principal contract, and in this country being generally termed an implied warranty of identity of the thing sold; Meyer v. Richards, 163 U. S. 385, 16 Sup. Ct. 1148, 41 L. Ed. 199. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

The rule of the civil law was that a fair price implied a warranty of quality; Dig. 21. 2. 1. This rule has been adopted in Louisiana; Fuentes v. Caballero, 1 La. Ann. 27; and in South Carolina: Timrod v. Shoolbred, 1 Bay (S. C.) 324, 1 Am. Dec. 620.

A purchaser may examine an article and exercise his judgment upon it, and at the same time protect himself by a warranty; Smith v. Hale, 158 Mass. 178, 33 N. E. 493, 35 Am. St. Rep. 485; but if he elects not to accept the property as not answering the warranty, there is no duty imposed upon either party thereafter to make further tests or experiments to see whether the property complies with the warranty; U. S. Sugar Refinery v. E. P. Allis Co., 56 Fed. 786, 6 C. C. A. 121, 9 U. S. App. 530.

A warranty in general terms is held not to cover defects which the buyer must have observed; Mulvany v. Rosenberger, 18 Pa. 203. The same rule is applicable to a defect which is not obvious, but of which the seller tells the buyer; Knoepker v. Ahman, 99 Mo. App. 30, 72 S. W. 483; or of which the buyer knows; Harwood v. Breese, 73 Neb. 521, 103 N. W. 55.

Antecedent representations, made as an inducement to the buyer, but not forming part of the contract when concluded, are not warranties; it is not, however, necessary that the representation should be made simultaneously with the bargain, but only that it should enter into it; Leavitt v. Fiberloid Co., 196 Mass. 440, 82 N. E. 682, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855; Way v. Martin, 140 Pa. 499, 21 Atl. 428; Powers v. Briggs, 139 Mich. 664, 103 N. W. 194; contra, Bryant v. Crosby, 40 Me. 9; 15 C. B. 130; Benj. Sales § 610.

No special form of words is necessary to constitute a warranty; Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573; Murray v. Smith, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 277; 3 Mod. 261.

A warranty "may rest in parol and no particular form of words is necessary thereto. A warranty arises when there is a distinct assertion or affirmation of fact, which is relied upon, respecting the quality of the goods or the adaptability thereof to the purpose for which they are desired;" Conkling v. Oil Co., 138 Ia. 596, 603, 116 N. W. 822; an assurance that an article purchased for a particular use is "all right," or words equivalent, if relied on, is a warranty; Briggs v. M. Rumely Co., 96 Ia. 202, 64 N. W. 784. If a warranty is in writing a construction of it will be for the court, and if the language used is doubtful, the court will seek to give the meaning to the language which the parties intended it should bear.

The rule is simplex commendatio non obligat. See 2 Esp. 572. A warranty made after a sale requires a new consideration; 3 Q. B. 234; Oliver v. F. Ins. Co., 100 Mass. 532; representations made after a sale is complete and after delivery, and not entering into the consideration, cannot amount to a warranty; Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157, 28 N. W. 805, 4 Am. St. Rep. 834.

Where one orders a specific article, there is only an implied warranty that the article supplied shall correspond with the designation and no implied agreement that it shall be fit for the purpose for which the buyer designed it; Morris v. Fertilizer Co., 64 Fed. 55, 12 C. C. A. 34, 28 U. S. App. 87. Where a seller furnishes a machine of a particular kind in fulfillment of an order and the machine proves defective, the buyer has no right to rescind and return the machine; Worcester Mfg. Co. v. Brass Co., 73 Conn. 554, 48 Atl. 422.

Where a known, described, and definite article is ordered of a manufacturer, though he has notice that it is required for a particular purpose, there is no implied warranty that it shall answer that purpose; Seitz v. Machine Co., 141 U. S. 510, 12 Sup. Ct. 46, 35 L. Ed. 837; Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. Kerr, 165 Pa. 529, 30 Atl. 1019, 44 Am. St. Rep. 674; Davis Calyx Drill Co. v. Mallory, 137 Fed. 332, 69 C. C. A. 662, 69 L. R. A. 973.

Proposals made by an equipment company to a street railway company to furnish electric equipment which should comply with certain conditions of performances, are affirmations of quality amounting to a warranty; Accumulator Co. v. R. Co., 64 Fed. 70, 12 C. C. A. 37, 27 U. S. App. 364. Where there is a complete contract of sale in writing, there can be no implied warranty as to the subject-matter; Ramming v. Caldwell, 43 Ill. App. 175. In the sale of a patent there is an implied warranty of title, without regard to the form of the instrument of transfer; Faulks v. Kamp, 3 Fed. 898. In Louisiana a warranty, while not of the essence, is of the nature of a contract of sale, and is implied in every such contract; Meyer v. Richards, 163 U. S. 386, 16 Sup. Ct. 1148, 41 L. Ed. 199.

It is settled that in an executory agreement the vendor warrants, by implication, his title to the goods which he promises to sell, and that in the sale of an ascertained specific chattel, an affirmation by the vendor that the chattel is his is equivalent to a warranty of title, and that this affirmation may be implied from his conduct as well as his words. It is further said that the rule in England is, in the absence of such implication or affirmation, that the sale of a personal chattel implies an affirmation by the vendor that the chattel is his, and, therefore, he warrants the title, unless it be shown by the facts and circumstances of the sale that the vendor did not intend to assert ownership, but only to transfer such interest as he might have in the chattel sold; Benj. Sales, §§ 627, 639.

As to the goods in the possession of the vendor, there is an implied warranty of title; but where the goods sold are in possession of a third party at the time of the sale, then there is no such warranty; Huntingdon v. Hall, 36 Me. 501, 58 Am. Dec. 765; Long v. Hickingbottom, 28 Miss. 772, 64 Am. Dec. 118; 2 Kent 478; Close v. Crossland, 47 Minn. 500, 50 N. W. 694; Fogel v. Brubaker, 122 Pa. 7, 15 Atl. 692; contra, 3 Term 58; 17 C. B. (N. S.) 708.

A vendor knowing he has no title, and concealing the fact from the vendee, is liable on the ground of fraud; Benj. Sales § 627.

By the Sales Act: In a sale or contract to sell, unless a contrary intention appears, there is: 1. An implied warranty on the part of the seller that in the case of a sale he has the right to sell the goods, and that in the case of a contract to sell he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass. 2. An implied warranty that the buyer shall have and enjoy quiet possession of the goods as against any lawful claims existing at the time of the sale. 3. An implied warranty that the goods shall be free at the time of the sale from any charge or encumbrance in favor of any third person, not declared or known to the buyer before or at the time when the contract or sale is made. 4. This section shall not, however, be held to render liable a sheriff, auctioneer, mortgagee, or other person professing to sell by virtue of authority in fact or law, goods in which a third person has a legal or equitable interest.

But where there is a written contract for goods, sold by sample, without warranty of quality, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the seller guaranteed the quality; Vierling v. Iroquois Furnace Co., 170 Ill. 189, 48 N. E. 1069; Zimmerman Mfg. Co. v. Dolph, 104 Mich. 284, 62 N. W. 339. The rule is stated in Hare on Contracts 532, as follows: "Where the contract is reduced to writing, everything that the writing does not contain is presumably excluded from the contract, and evidence is not admissible that the vendor warranted the goods orally during the previous negotiations or when the instrument was executed; or even that the sale was by sample and the bulk does not correspond. . . . A warranty is essentially contractual—a provision or undertaking as distinguished from an affirmation, and hence, when the parties reduce the agreement to writing, nothing that is not set forth in the instrument can operate as a warranty."

See EVIDENCE.

The question is for the jury, to be inferred from the sale and the circumstances of the particular case; Morrill v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 111; Toner v. Zell, 149 Pa. 458, 27 Atl. 304; McLeunan v. Ohmen, 75 Cal. 558, 17 Pac. 687; even if the contract is written; Benj. Sales § 614; but see Brown v. Bigelow, 10 Allen (Mass.) 242.

As to the rights and remedies of the buyer and seller upon breach of warranty, see SALES; RESCISSION.

As to warranty in deeds, see DEEDS.

As to the states which have passed the Uniform Sales Act, see SALES.

In Sales of Real Property. A real covenant, whereby the grantor of an estate of freehold and his heirs were bound to warrant the title, and, either upon voucher or by judgment in a writ of warrantia chartæ, to yield other lands to the value of those from which there has been an eviction by a paramount title. Co. Litt. 365 a.

Collateral warranty existed when the heir's title was not derived from the warranting ancestor, and yet it barred the heir from claiming the land by any collateral title, upon the presumption that he might thereafter have assets by descent from or through the ancestor; and it imposed upon him the obligation of giving the warrantee other lands in case of eviction, provided he had assets. 2 Bla. Com. 301.

Lineal warranty existed when the heir derived title to the land warranted, either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty.

The statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, annulled these collateral warranties, which had become a great grievance. Warranty in its original form has never, it is presumed, been known in the United States. The more plain and pliable form of a covenant has been adopted in its place; and this covenant, like all other covenants, has always been held to sound in damages, which, after judgment, may be recovered out of the personal or real estate, as in other cases. And in England the matter has become one of curious learning and of little or no practical importance. See 4 Kent 469; Paxson v. Lefferts, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 67, n.; Bates v. Norcross, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 14, 28 Am. Dec. 271; Flynn v. Williams, 23 N. C. 509; 2 Saund. 38, n. 5.

Rawle, in his work on Covenants for Title 205, is of opinion that there is no evidence that the covenants of warranty as employed in the United States ever had a place in English conveyancing. In the earlier conveyances which remain on record in the colonies are to be found some or all of the covenants which were coming into use in the mother country, together with a clause of warranty, sometimes with and sometimes without the addition of words of covenant. Later the words of covenant became more general, and at the present day their use is almost universal. As to the extent and scope of the American covenant of warranty, the sounder view is that it is merely a covenant for quiet enjoyment, the only difference being that under the latter, a recovery may sometimes be had where it would be denied under the former. See COVENANT, and various titles thereunder.

WARRANTY, VOUCHING TO. In Old Practice. The calling a warrantor into court by the party warranted (when tenant in a real action brought for recovery of such lands), to defend the suit for him; Co. Litt. 101 b; 2 Saund. 32, n. 1; and the time of such voucher is after the demandant has counted.

It lies in most real and mixed actions, but not in personal. Where the voucher has been made and allowed by the court, the vouchee either voluntarily appears, or their issues a judicial writ (called a summons ad warrantandum), commanding the sheriff to summon him. Where he, either voluntarily or in obedience to this writ, appears and offers to warrant the land to the tenant, it is called entering into the warranty; after which he is considered as tenant in the action, in the place of the original tenant. The demandant then counts against him de novo, the vouchee pleads to the new count, and the cause proceeds to issue.

It seems to have lasted until the practical disappearance of real actions and formed an essential part of the fiction of common recovery; Jenks, Hist. E. L. 110.

WARREN. A place privileged by prescription or grant of the king for the preservation of hares, conies, partridges, and pheasants, or any of them. An action lies for killing beasts of warren inside the warren; but they may be killed damage feasant on another's land; 5 Co. 104. It need not be inclosed; Co. 4th Inst. 318.

WASHINGTON. One of the states of the United States of America.

By the act of congress of February 22, 1889, the people of Washington were enabled to form a constitution and state government, and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states. Accordingly, after all the requirements had been complied with on November 11, 1889, the president by proclamation announced the admission of Washington into the Union.

An amendment in 1910 provided for woman suffrage; and in 1912 for initiative, referendum and recall.

WASTE. Spoil or destruction, done or permitted, to lands, houses, or other corporeal hereditaments, by the tenant thereof to the prejudice of the heir or of him in reversion or remainder.

"Any unauthorized act of a tenant for a freehold estate not of inheritance, or for any lessor interest, which tends to the destruction of the tenement, or otherwise to the injury of the inheritance." Poll. Torts 327.

An unreasonable or improper use, abuse, mismanagement or omission of duty touching real estate by one rightfully in possession which results in its substantial injury. Delano v. Smith, 206 Mass. 365, 92 N. E. 500, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474.

Many of the earliest English statutes related to waste (Marlborough, Gloucester, etc.); the Year Books contain many decisions upon them which are the basis of the modern law. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 104.

Permissive waste consists in the mere neglect or omission to do what will prevent injury: as, to suffer a house to go to decay for the want of repair. And it may be incurred in respect to the soil, as well as to the buildings, trees, fences, or live stock on the premises. See infra.

Voluntary waste consists in the commission of some destructive act: as, in pulling down a house or ploughing up a flower-garden. Gardiner v. Derring, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 573.

Equitable waste may be defined as such acts as at law would not be esteemed to be waste under the circumstances of the case, but which in the view of a court of equity are so esteemed from their manifest injury to the inheritance, although they are not inconsistent with the legal rights of the party committing them. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 915.

Where a tenant "without impeachment of waste" commits acts of wanton destruction, it has been called equitable waste because such acts were cognizable only in equity. Jenks, Mod. Land L. 44.

Voluntary waste is committed upon cultivated fields, orchards, gardens, meadows, and the like, whenever a tenant uses them contrary to the usual course of husbandry or in such a manner as to exhaust the soil by negligent or improper tillage; Livingston v. Reynolds, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 157; 2 B. & P. 86. It is, therefore, waste to convert arable into wood land, or the contrary; Co. Litt. 53 b. Cutting down fruit-trees, although planted by the tenant himself, is waste; 2 Rolle, Abr. 817; and it was held to be waste for an outgoing tenant of garden-ground to plough up strawberry-beds which he had bought of a former tenant when he entered; 1 Camp. 227. When lands are leased on which there are open mines of metal or coal, or pits of gravel, lime, clay, brick, earth, stone, and the like, the tenant may dig out of such mines or pits; but he cannot open any new mines or pits without being guilty of waste; Co. Litt. 53 b; Sayers v. Hoskinson, 110 Pa. 473, 1 Atl. 308. See MINES; OIL. Any carrying away of the soil is also waste; Com. Dig. Waste (D 4); Kidd v. Dennison, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 13; Co. Litt. 53 b; 1 Sch. & L. 8. And so is the taking of clay from the soil and manufacturing it into bricks and selling the same; University v. Tucker, 31 W. Va. 621, 8 S. E. 410; 13 Q. B. 591. A tenant in common who quarries stone from the common property is guilty of waste; Childs v. R. Co., 117 Mo. 414, 23 S. W. 373; and a life tenant who unlawfully removes petroleum; Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 19 S. E. 436, 25 L. R. A. 222; so sowing the seed of a noxious plant was held waste; 2 Madd. Ch. 62; and inoculating a building with the germs of small-pox; Delano v. Smith, 206 Mass. 365, 92 N. E. 500, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474.

Waste need not consist in loss of market value; it may be an injury in the sense of destroying identity; L. R. 20 Eq. 539. Where premises leased for 99 years were sublet for a dumping ground, and there was conflicting evidence as to whether the added material increased the value of the land, an injunction was granted on the ground that it altered the premises; [1900] 1 Ch. 624; an injunction was refused against converting a store into a dwelling house; [1892] 2 Ch. 213.

It is committed in houses by removing things once fixed to the freehold, although they may have been erected by the lessee himself, unless they are mere fixtures. See FIXTURES. It may take place not only in pulling down houses or parts of them, but also in changing their forms; as, if the tenant pull down a house and erect a new one in its place, whether it be larger or smaller than the first; 2 Rolle, Abr. 815; Dooly v. Stringham, 4 Utah 107, 7 Pac. 405; 13 Q. B. 588; or convert a parlor into a stable, or a grist-mill into a fulling-mill; ibid.; or turn two rooms into one; ibid. See 13 Q. B. 572; 14 Ves. 526. The placing of an excessive weight in a building, by reason of which it falls, is waste; Chalmers v. Smith, 152 Mass. 561, 26 N. E. 95, 11 L. R. A. 769. The building of a house where there was none before was, by the strict rules of the common law, said to be waste; Co. Litt. 53 a; and taking it down after it was built was waste also; 1 B. & Ad. 161; Whiting v. Brastow, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 310; Beers v. St. John, 16 Conn. 322.

Voluntary waste may also be committed upon timber. The law of waste accommodates itself to the varying wants and conditions of different countries: that will not, for instance, be waste in an entire woodland country which would be so in cleared one. The clearing up of land for the purpose of tillage in a new country where trees abound is no injury to the inheritance, but, on the contrary, is a benefit to the remainderman, so long as there is sufficient timber left and the land cleared bears a proper relative proportion to the whole tract; 4 Kent 316; Livingston v. Reynolds, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 122; where timber is grown for sale, cutting timber would be a "mode of cultivation." See L. R. 18 Eq. 309; [1891] 3 Ch. 206.

The extent to which wood and timber on such land may be cut without waste is a question of fact for a jury; Jackson v. Brownson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258. A tenant may always cut trees for the repair of the houses, fences, hedges, stiles, gates, and the like; Co. Litt. 53 b; Dorsey v. Moore, 100 N. C. 41, 6 S. E. 270; Calvert v. Rice, 91 Ky. 533, 16 S. W. 351, 34 Am. St. Rep. 240; and for making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; Wood, Inst. 344. See ESTOVERS. He may fell dead or dying timber; Sayers v. Hoskinson, 110 Pa. 473, 1 Atl. 308; Keeler v. Eastman, 11 Vt. 293. And he may, when unrestrained by the terms of the lease, cut timber for firewood, if there be not enough dead timber for such purposes; Com. Dig. Waste (D 5). But not ornamental trees or those planted for shelter; 6 Ves. Ch. 419; or to exclude objects from sight; 16 Ves. Ch. 375; Dalton v. Dalton, 42 N. C. 197; Kidd v. Dennison, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. He cannot promiscuously cut trees to make staves to be sold; Huddleston v. Johnson, 71 Wis. 336, 37 N. W. 407; nor railroad ties; Davis v. Clark, 40 Mo. App. 515.

It is waste for a tenant for life to neglect to pay the interest on a mortgage whereby the land was sold to the prejudice of the remainderman; Wade v. Malloy, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 226; and so of a failure to pay taxes; Stetson v. Day, 51 Me. 434; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 557, 18 N. W. 527.

Windfalls are the property of the landlord; for whatever is severed by inevitable necessity, as, by a tempest, or by a trespasser, and by wrong, belongs to him who has the inheritance; 3 P. Wms. 268; 11 Co. 81.

In general, a tenant is answerable for waste although it is committed by a stranger; for he is the custodian of the property, and must take his remedy over; 2 Dougl. 745; 1 Taunt. 198; Cook v. Transp. Co., 1 Denio (N. Y.) 104.

Permissive waste to buildings consists in omitting to keep them in tenantable repair; suffering the timbers to become rotten by neglecting to cover the house; or suffering the walls to fall into decay for want of plastering, or the foundation to be injured by neglecting to turn off a stream of water, and the like; Co. Litt. 53 a. See Schulting v. Schulting, 41 N. J. Eq. 130, 3 Atl. 526; Cannon v. Barry, 59 Miss. 289; LANDLORD AND TENANT. Permissive waste in houses, however as a general rule, is now only punishable when a tenant is bound to repair, either expressly or by implication; 4 B. & P. 298; 10 B. & C. 312. See Sherrill v. Connor, 107 N. C. 630, 12 S. E. 588.

The redress for this injury is of two kinds, preventive and corrective. A reversioner or remainderman, in fee, for life, or for years, may now recover, by an ordinary action at law, all damages he has sustained by an act of voluntary waste committed by either his tenant or a stranger, provided the injury affects his reversion. But as against a tenant for years, or from year to year, he can only sustain an action for damages for permissive waste if his lease obliges the tenant to repair; 2 Saund. 252 d, note; 10 B. & C. 312; 41 Ch. D. 352. Where a particular course of user has been carried on for a considerable course of time, with the apparent knowledge and consent of the owner of the inheritance, all lawful presumptions will be made in favor of the lawfulness of the acts complained of; Pollock, Torts 328; 4 App. Cas. 465. The statutes of the several states also provide special relief against waste in a great variety of cases, following, in general, the Statute of Gloucester, which not only forfeits the premises, but gives exemplary damages for all the injury done. The rules as to waste are less stringent in the western states than in the east.

These legal remedies, however, are still so inadequate, as well to prevent future waste as to give redress for waste already committed, that they have in a great measure given way to the remedy by bill in equity, by which not only future waste, whether voluntary or permissive, will be prevented, but an account may be decreed and compensation given for past waste in the same proceeding; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 179. Complainant in an action for waste must either have actual possession, or must show in himself an actual, valid, subsisting title; Walker v. Fox, 85 Tenn. 154, 2 S. W. 98.

A contingent remainderman may maintain an injunction to restrain waste by the life tenant; University v. Tucker, 31 W. Va. 621, 8 S. E. 410.

An action on the case in the nature of waste, will lie by the holder of a mortgage on lands, against a purchaser from the mortgagor of the equity of redemption, for acts of waste committed with a knowledge that the value of the security will be injured thereby. This was a case of new impression (so stated in both courts) and was decided on general principles; Van Pelt v. McGraw, 4 N. Y. 110.

The reversioner need not wait until waste has actually been committed before filing his bill; for if he ascertains that the tenant is about to commit any act which would operate as a permanent injury to the estate, or if he threatens or shows any intention to commit waste, the court will at once interfere and restrain him by injunction from doing so; 18 Ves. Ch. 355; Douglass v. Wiggins, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 435; 1 Jac. & W. 653.

Sometimes a tenant, whether for life or for years, by the instrument creating his estate holds his lands without impeachment of waste. This expression is equivalent to a general permission to commit waste, and at common law would authorize him to cut timber, or open new mines and convert the produce to his own use; Co. Litt. 220; 11 Co. 81 b; 15 Ves. 425. But equity puts a limited construction upon this clause, and only allows a tenant those powers under it which a prudent tenant in fee would exercise, and will, therefore, restrain him from pulling down or dilapidating houses, destroying pleasure-houses, or prostrating trees planted for ornament or shelter; 2 Vern. 739; 6 Ves. 110.

As to remedy by writ of estrepement to prevent waste, see ESTREPEMENT; Dickinson v. Nicholson, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 281; 3 Bla. Com. 226.

As to remedies in cases of fraud in committing waste, see HOV. FRAUDS 226.

In Forest Law. The destruction of vert by cutting down or lopping off trees, which might afterwards grow. Rawle, Exmoor Forest 29.

As used in a tariff act, it generally refers to remnants and by-products of small value that have not the quality or utility either of the finished product or of the raw material. Scrap does retain the name and quality; Patton v. U. S., 159 U. S. 503, 16 Sup. Ct. 89, 40 L. Ed. 233. Articles produced incidentally to the manufacture of other articles and which are themselves ready to be used for various purposes without further treatment are, under the tariff laws, subject to the classification as manufactures rather than as "waste"; Shattus v. U. S., 155 Fed. 213.

WASTE-BOOK. A book used among merchants. All the dealings of the merchants are recorded in this book in chronological order as they occur.

WASTEL. A standard of quality of bread, made of the finest white flour. Cocket bread was slightly inferior in quality. The statute of 1266 mentions seven kinds of bread. See ASSISA; Studer, Oak Book of Southampton, Vol. II.

WASTING PROPERTY. A mine or a patent is considered a wasting property. See 41 Ch. Div. 1.

WASTING TRUST. A trust in which the trustee may apply a part of the principal to make good a deficiency of income.

WATCH. To stand sentry and attend guard during the night-time. Certain officers called watchmen are appointed in most of the United States, whose duty it is to arrest all persons who are violating the law or breaking the peace. See 1 Bla. Com. 356; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 14, 20.

WATCH AND WARD. A phrase used in the English law to denote the superintendence and care of certain officers whose duties are to protect the public from harm.

WATCHMAN. An officer in many cities and towns, whose duty it is to watch during the night and take care of the property of the inhabitants. He possesses, generally, the common-law authority of a constable to make arrests, where there is reasonable ground to suspect a felony, though there is no proof of a felony having been committed; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 24; 1 B. & Ald. 227. See ARREST.

WATER BAILIFF. In English Law. An officer appointed to search ships in ports. 10 Hen. VII. 30.

WATER COMPANY. A municipality has no implied power, from the mere fact of its creation, to engage in the business of supplying its citizens water for pay. It cannot do so except by virtue of express legislative authority. A municipality having such legislative authority, which has entered into a contract with an existing water company to supply the citizens with water, has thereby exhausted its power and cannot subsequently erect its own water works for the same purpose; White v. Meadville, 177 Pa. 643, 25 Atl. 695, 34 L. R. A. 567. But it was held that, although a contract between a water company and a city provided that no contract or privilege would be granted to any other person or corporation to furnish water, the city was not precluded from building its own system; Knoxville W. Co. v. Knoxville,

A municipal corporation furnishing water to its inhabitants acts in a private capacity; its relation is one of contract. Water rates are not taxes; they are the price paid for a commodity; Jolly v. Monaca Borough, 216 Pa. 345, 65 Atl. 809; but their collection has been considered not a source of private profit, but a mode of taxation; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 42 N. E. 405, 30 L. R. A. 660, 51 Am. St. Rep. 667. Their regulation is a governmental power; Owensboro v. Waterworks Co., 191 U. S. 358, 24 Sup. Ct. 82, 48 L. Ed. 217.

A water company under a statute which provides that water companies shall furnish pure water, will be enjoined from collecting water rents when it has supplied water utterly unfit for domestic use or for steam purposes. The courts cannot decree that the company must obtain a supply of pure water. They can only enjoin it from collecting water rents for impure water; Brymer v. Water Co., 172 Pa. 489, 33 Atl. 707.

A water company which has a contract with a city to furnish water to extinguish fires is not liable to the owners of private property destroyed by fire through its failure to furnish water according to the contract; House v. Waterworks Co., 88 Tex. 233, 31 S. W. 179, 28 L. R. A. 532; there is no privity of contract between the parties to the action; Nickerson v. Hydraulic Co., 46 Conn. 24, 33 Am. Rep. 1; Fitch v. Water Co., 139 Ind. 214, 37 N. E. 982, 47 Am. St. Rep. 258; Wainwright v. Water Co., 78 Hun (N. Y.) 146, 28 N. Y. Supp. 987; Beck v. Water Co., 11 Atl. 300; Foster v. Water Co., 3 Lea (Tenn.) 42; nor does the fact that the ordinance granting the franchise requires the company to supply the city and its inhabitants with sufficient water to put out fires, or to maintain the water at a certain pressure, create the necessary privity of contract; Fowler v. Waterworks Co., 83 Ga. 219, 9 S. E. 673, 20 Am. St. Rep. 313; Eaton v. Waterworks Co., 37 Neb. 546, 56 N. W. 201, 21 L. R. A. 653, 40 Am. St. Rep. 510; Britton v. Water Works Co., 81 Wis. 48, 51 N. W. 84, 29 Am. St. Rep. 856; not even a statute, requiring the pipes to be kept charged at a certain pressure, will give the right of action; 2 Exch. Div. 441, reversing 6 L. R. Exch. 404. Such owner cannot maintain an action, even though the city has raised by taxation a special fund, to which the plaintiff contributed, to pay for a sufficient supply of water for use in case of fire; Becker v. Keokuk Waterworks, 79 Ia. 419, 44 N. W. 694, 18 Am. St. Rep. 377; or though the citizens pay a special tax to the company, under its contract with the city; Howson v. Water Co., 119 Mo. 304, 24 S. W. 784, 23 L. R. A. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 654. Nor has a municipality such an interest in the property destroyed as to give it a right of action, and the owner of the property destroyed cannot maintain an action as assignee of the right of action of the municipality; Ferris v. Water Co., 16 Nev. 44, 40 Am. Rep. 485. An action of tort will not lie; Fowler v. Waterworks Co., 83 Ga. 219, 9 S. E. 673, 20 Am. St. Rep. 313. But it has been held that when the contract of a water company with the city declares that it is made, inter alia, for the protection of private property against fire, the owner of property which is taxed for water rent, and is destroyed by fire through the failure of the company to supply a sufficient quantity of water, may, in his own name, sue the company on its contract with the city; Paducah Lumber Co. v. Water Supply Co., 89 Ky. 340, 12 S. W. 554, 13 S. W. 249, 7 L. R. A. 77, 25 Am. St. Rep. 536; in such case the company is liable; Mugge v. Waterworks Co., 52 Fla. 371, 42 South. 81, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171, 120 Am. St. Rep. 207; see 13 Harv. L. Rev. 226. That a taxpayer has no right of action against a water-supply company for failure to perform its contract with the municipality, see German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Water Supply Co., 226 U. S. 220, 33 Sup. Ct. 32, 57 L. Ed. 195, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000, where it is said a majority of the cases so hold.

A company for furnishing water to the public is subject to the visitatorial power of the state; Com. v. Russell, 172 Pa. 506, 33 Atl. 709.

An existing system of water supply in a municipality which is the property of private individuals and is operated under a contract with the municipal corporation, is private property which may be acquired by eminent domain; Long Island W. S. Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 17 Sup. Ct. 718, 41 L. Ed. 1165.

A statutory provision that all water companies must furnish free water to their municipalities does not constitute a contract to which the municipality is a party. The state may relieve the water companies therefrom and permit them to furnish water at reasonable cost; Boise Water Co. v. Boise City, 230 U. S. 84, 33 Sup. Ct. 997, 57 L. Ed. 1400.

The right which a water company acquires by a lease from a riparian owner and not by the exercise of eminent domain is no greater than the right of the riparian owner; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Water Co., 182 Pa. 418, 38 Atl. 404.

A regulation requiring a consumer to pay a month's rates in advance or in default thereof the company will shut off the water or requiring the consumer to pay at the end of the month the rates for the preceding month or in default the company will shut off the water, has generally been held reasonable within the power of such public service corporations; Tacoma Hotel Co. v. Water Co., 3 Wash. 316, 28 Pac. 516, 14 L. R. A. 669, 28 Am. St. Rep. 35; Shepard v. Gas Light Co., 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; Williams v. Gas Co., 52 Mich. 499, 18 N. W. 236, 50 Am. Rep. 266; State v. Board of Duluth, 105 Minn. 472, 117 N. W. 827, 127 Am. St. Rep. 581; Cedar Rapids G. L. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 144 Ia. 426, 120 N. W. 966, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1025, 138 Am. St. Rep. 299. The rules of some companies seem to require one month's payment in advance while others have required a quarter's payment in advance. It has been held, however, that a requirement that a consumer pay one year in advance is unreasonable; Rockland W. Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472, 24 Atl. 840, 30 Am. St. Rep. 368; also that where the water has been shut off from the consumer for default in the payment of rates when due, he can not be charged $1 for turning the water off and on; American W. W. Co. v. State, 46 Neb. 194, 64 N. W. 711, 30 L. R. A. 447, 50 Am. St. Rep. 610. A company may not refuse to supply water to a consumer upon payment of rates in advance as required by the rules of the company merely because he refuses to pay a disputed bill, or to pay past-due water rates for some other and independent use, or at some other place or residence, or for a separate or distinct transaction from that for which he is claiming and demanding a water supply; Crumley v. Water Co., 99 Tenn. 420, 41 S. W. 1058; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 32 Atl. 906, 29 L. R. A. 376; American W. W. Co. v. State, 46 Neb. 194, 64 N. W. 711, 30 L. R. A. 447, 50 Am. St. Rep. 610; Covington v. Ratterman, 128 Ky. 336, 108 S. W. 297, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923; or until unpaid rates of a previous owner are paid; Turner v. Water Co., 171 Mass. 329, 50 N. E. 634, 40 L. R. A. 657, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432. A public service corporation cannot safely be invested with an authority which will allow it to become both judge and jury in the determination of a disputed claim on it by a consumer; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 32 Atl. 906, 29 L. R. A. 376.

Municipal corporations operating water works may require consumers to use water meters put in at their own expense; Cooper v. Goodland, 80 Kan. 121, 102 Pac. 244, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410; Shaw S. Co. v. Lowell, 199 Mass. 118, 85 N. E. 90, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 15 Ann. Cas. 377; State v. Gosnell, 116 Wis. 606, 93 N. W. 542, 61 L. R. A. 33.

In State v. Jersey City, 45 N. J. L. 246, this rule was upheld, but the right to charge the cost of meters to consumers was denied.

When required by franchise ordinance "to furnish water to users," a company must deliver it at the property line and a mandamus issued; Cleveland v. Waterworks Co., 69 Wash. 541, 125 Pac. 769. A water company cannot be compelled to furnish taps free without assurance of continual use; Public Service Corp. v. American Lighting Co., 67 N. J. Eq. 122, 57 Atl. 482; State v. Water Co., 49 Wash. 232, 94 Pac. 1080; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 50 Pac. 633, 38 L. R. A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261. They may require a deposit or other assurance that they will be paid for water furnished; Cedar Rapids G. L. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 144 Ia. 426, 120 N. W. 966, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1025, 138 Am. St. Rep. 299.

A city may, in contracting for its own water supply, contract that the company shall furnish water free to churches, etc.; Independent School Dist. v. Light Co., 131 Ia. 14, 107 N. W. 944, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 859.

See WATER RENTS; RATES.

WATER-COURSE. This term is applied to the flow or movement of the water in rivers, creeks, and other streams.

A water-course is a stream of water flowing in a definite channel, having a bed and sides or banks and discharging itself into some other stream or body of water. Hutchinson v. Ditch Co., 16 Idaho 484, 101 Pac. 1059, 133 Am. St. Rep. 125. The flow need not be constant, but must be more than mere surface drainage occasioned by extraordinary causes; there must be substantial indications of the existence of a stream which is ordinarily a moving body of water. Id.; Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 217.

There must be a supply which is permanent in the sense that similar conditions will always produce a flow of water in the same channel, and that the conditions recur with some degree of regularity, so that they establish and maintain for considerable periods of time a running stream; Mann v. Mining Co., 49 App. Div. 454, 63 N. Y. Supp. 752.

Whenever surface water flows in one continuous well marked channel it becomes a water-course, if this flow becomes regular each season; Borman v. Blackmen, 60 Or. 304, 118 Pac. 848; or if the course has reasonable limits as to width; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Board of Sup'rs, 182 Fed. 291, 104 C. C. A. 573, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117.

The essential characteristics of a water-course are a channel consisting of a well defined bed and banks, and a current of water; Lessard v. Stram, 62 Wis. 112, 22 N. W. 284, 51 Am. Rep. 715; Razzo v. Varni, 81 Cal. 289, 22 Pac. 848; Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 217; Board of Com'rs of Shelby County v. Castetter, 7 Ind. App. 309, 33 N. E. 986, 34 N. E. 687.

The rule is that in order to have a water-course there must be a channel; it has even been held that where there was a channel there was a water-course, although it carried no water except in times of heavy rains and of melting snows, thus forming what is called a torrential stream; York v. Davidson, 39 Or. 81, 95 Pac. 819. It does not include surface water conveyed from a higher to a lower level for limited periods during the melting of snow, or during or soon after the fall of rain, through hollows or ravines, which at other times are dry; Hoyt v. Hudson, 27 Wisc. 656, 9 Am. Rep. 473.

Where the water flows merely over the low land, a bog or a slough, it is not a water-course; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Morrow, 42 Kan. 339, 22 Pac. 413; nor where it merely oozes from a spring through soft spongy ground; Meyer v. Power Co., 8 Wash. 144, 35 Pac. 601.

The bed, which is a definite and commonly a permanent channel, is the characteristic which distinguishes the water of a river from mere surface drainage flowing without definite course or certain limits, and from water percolating through the strata of the earth. The banks of a water-course are the elevations which confine the waters to their natural channel when they rise; Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. (U. S.) 381, 14 L. Ed. 189; People v. Madison County, 125 Ill. 9, 17 N. E. 147. The water of a water-course must have a current. The flow of the water must usually be in one direction; 1 B. & Ad. 289; and by a regular channel having both a source and a mouth; Chamberlain v. Hemingway, 63 Conn. 1, 27 Atl. 239, 22 L. R. A. 45, 38 Am. St. Rep. 330.

The controlling distinction between a water-course and a pond or lake is that in the former case the water has a natural motion or a current, while in the latter the water is, in its natural state, substantially at rest. And this is so independently of the size of the one or of the other; Ne-pee-nauk Club v. Wilson, 96 Wis. 290, 71 N. W. 661. If the current continues, the mere fact that the stream spreads out does not change its character as a water-course; Macomber v. Godfrey, 108 Mass. 219, 11 Am. Rep. 349. A hollow or ravine without a permanent flow of water is not a water-course; Los Angeles C. Ass'n v. Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 461, 37 Pac. 375; neither is a swale or swamp or bog; Sanquinetti v. Pock, 136 Cal. 466, 69 Pac. 98, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169; Hough v. Porter, 51 Or. 318, 95 Pac. 732, 98 Pac. 1083, 102 Pac. 728.

It may be if water flows into it throughout the year from springs; Maxwell v. Shirts, 27 Ind. App. 529, 61 N. E. 754, 87 Am. St. Rep. 268; or where there is a flow of surface-water from rains and melting snows at regular seasons and such has been immemorially the case; Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241; Mace v. Mace, 40 Or. 586, 67 Pac. 660, 68 Pac. 737.

A stream does not cease to be a water-course and become mere surface water, because at certain points it spreads over a level meadow several rods in width, and flows for a distance without defined banks before flowing again into a definite channel; West v. Taylor, 16 Or. 165, 13 Pac. 665. Overflow water from a water-course is not surface water;

Cole v. R. Co., 20 Okl. 227, 94 Pac. 540, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268.

In the absence of a permanent source of supply, there can be no water-course in its legal sense; Jeffers v. Jeffers, 107 N. Y. 650, 14 N. E. 316; Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. 234; Robinson v. Shanks, 118 Ind. 125, 20 N. E. 713.

A swale is a low body of wet land without channel or perceptible current. In a strict legal sense it is not a water-course, but where water has accumulated from springs, rains, and melting snows and has flowed for several miles between regular banks of a well defined water-course, which empties into a lake from which the water flows through water-ways and through which the water flows into a bay or the sea, the water-ways referred to are water-courses and the water therein is not mere surface water; West v. Taylor, 16 Or. 165, 13 Pac. 665.

If a flow of water through an artificial ditch, established originally to carry a portion of a river and continued for many years without change or objection, was such as to constitute a natural water-course had the flow begun without artificial aid, the jury may find that it is a water-course, subject to the rules applicable to natural water-courses; Stimson v. Brookline, 197 Mass. 568, 83 N. E. 893, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 280, 125 Am. St. Rep. 382, 14 Ann. Cas. 907. It has often been decided both in England and America that water-courses made by the hand of man may have been created under such conditions that, so far as the rules of law and the rights of the public are concerned, they are to be treated as if they were of natural origin; Freeman v. Weeks, 45 Mich. 335. They are natural streams or flow of water, though flowing in an artificial channel; Nuttall v. Bracewell, L. R. 2 Exch. 1; Reading v. Althouse, 93 Pa. 400; Weatherby v. Meiklejohn, 56 Wis. 73, 13 N. W. 697.

Flood waters are not classified as surface waters. They are divided into ordinary and extraordinary floods. By the common law, flood water overflowing the banks of a stream is a part of the stream although not flowing in the channel; Broadbent v. Ramsbotham, 11 Exch. 602. In some states, flood waters of a stream are treated as surface waters, to be dealt with as such; Shelbyville & B. Turnpike Co. v. Green, 99 Ind. 205; Kenney v. R. Co., 74 Mo. App. 301; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Keys, 55 Kan. 205, 40 Pac. 275, 49 Am. St. Rep. 249; Cass v. Dicks, 14 Wash. 75, 44 Pac. 113, 53 Am. St. Rep. 859. But in the majority of the states, flood waters are held to be part of the stream. The United States circuit court for the district of Indiana declined to follow the decisions of the supreme court of that state respecting this subject. The supreme court in Taylor v. Fickas, 64 Ind. 167, 31 Am. Rep. 114, and subsequently, held that flood waters are surface waters. The federal court in Cairo, V. & C. R. Co. v. Brevoort, 62 Fed. 129, 25 L. R. A. 527, held that flood waters constitute the waters of the rivers and are not surface waters.

Under a covenant by a lessor to pay "all water rents imposed or assessed upon the premises or on the lessor or lessee in respect thereof," the lessor is not bound to pay for water supplied by a water company to the lessees for trade purposes; [1897] 1 Ch. 633, A. C.

WATERGANG (Law Lat. watergangium). A Saxon word for a trench or course to carry a stream of water, such as are commonly made to drain water out of marshes. Ordin. Marisc. de Romn. Chart. Hen. III.

WATERGAVEL. A rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit from, some river. Chart. 15 Hen. III.

WATERS. The peculiar nature of running water was referred to in one of the old cases holding that ejectment would not lie for a water-course; that livery could not be made of it, "for non moratur, but is ever flowing," and comparing running water to the water in the sea; Chancellor v. Thomas, Yelv. 143. "For water is a movable, wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature"; 2 Bla. Com. 18. In 1833, Lord Denman, in Mason v. Hill, 5 B. & Ad. 1, says concerning the civil law: No one had any property in the water itself, except in that particular portion which he might have abstracted from the stream and of which he had the possession. Later the rule was laid down that flowing water is publici juris, not in the sense that it is bonum vacans, to which the first occupant may acquire an exclusive right, but that it is public and common in this sense only, that none can have any property in the water itself, except in the particular portion which he may choose to abstract from the stream and take into his possession, and that during the time of his possession only. But each proprietor of the adjacent land has the right to the usufruct of the stream which flows through it; Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 355. That running water is publici juris and that no one could claim the ownership of the corpus of the water of a stream was held in [1906] A. C. 83; U. S. v. Inv. Co., 156 Fed. 123; Philadelphia v. Spring Garden, 7 Pa. 363, per Gibson, C. J.

By the modern as well as the older authorities, the right of the riparian owner in the water is usufructuary, and consists not so much in the fluid itself as in its uses; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674. The law does not recognize a riparian property right in the corpus of the water; the riparian proprietor does not own the water. He has the right only to enjoy the advantage of a responsible use of the stream as it flows through the land, subject to a like right belonging to all other riparian proprietors; Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 67 Neb. 325, 93 N. W. 781, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647. Water when reduced to possession is property, and it may be bought and sold and have a market value; but it must be in actual possession, subject to control and management; Syracuse v. Stacey, 169 N. Y. 231, 62 N. E. 354. When stored in an artificial appliance or water-course, it is personal property; Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 89 Cal. 418, 26 Pac. 889; Dunsmuir v. Power Co., 24 Wash. 114, 63 Pac. 1095.

Irrigation. To give security to irrigators, irrigation contracts are generally viewed as having for their subject matter the usufructuary right in the stream through the intermediate agency of the ditch, thereby making them contracts affecting real property—the ditch and the water right in the stream through which the ditch heads. A contract granting a right to take water from a ditch for irrigation is held to grant a servitude upon real property, upon the canal and water rights of the grantor, Stanislaus W. Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359. The arid states have settled it as a fixed rule, aside from contract, that one who has a right to take water from a ditch is an appropriator from the natural stream through the intermediate agency of the ditch; Wheeler v. Irr. Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 Pac. 487, 3 Am. St. Rep. 603; Hard v. Land Co., 9 Idaho 589, 76 Pac. 331, 65 L. R. A. 407; Gould v. Canal Co., 8 Ariz. 429, 76 Pac. 598. Rights in a flow in a ditch thus relate back to the same subject matter when concerning irrigation, though the distinction between the corpus of the water and its use and flow would still prevail in such matters as larceny from a ditch or contract for house supply in cities; see 22 Harv. L. Rev. 212.

Under the doctrine of prior appropriation, a sale of water right separate from the land, whereby the water is applied to other lands, may be made if the rights of others are not infringed; Cache La Poudre Irr. Co. v. Reservoir Co., 25 Colo. 144, 53 Pac. 318, 71 Am. St. Rep. 123. The users of the water from a canal or ditch acquire such a property right as they may transfer to other lands under such ditch or canal; Hard v. Land Co., 9 Idaho 589, 76 Pac. 331, 65 L. R. A. 407. Such a right on the part of the landowner cannot be doubted; Winchell v. Clark, 68 Mich. 64, 35 N. W. 907.

In the arid states, the common law doctrine of riparian rights has been repudiated and the law of appropriation prevails. It has been there established as a rule of property governing riparian land that mere priority of occupation or appropriation gives rights superior to those of the riparian owner in the beneficial use of the waters and the beds of streams, whether such appropriation is made upon, or adjacent to, riparian lands owned by the government or those passed to private owners. Not all riparian rights, as such are defined in the common law, are lost by such appropriation. But, generally speaking, the riparian right law does not prevail in those jurisdictions. The custom of appropriation became a law of property in those states, and as such has been confirmed by congress and the federal supreme court, as applicable to lands there situated, the rule of law having been established by the local jurisdictions and having become the common law of those states through adjudications of their own courts; Act Cong. July 26, 1866; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; Simmons v. Winters, 21 Or. 35, 27 Pac. 7, 28 Am. St. Rep. 727; Isaacs v. Barber, 10 Wash. 124, 38 Pac. 871, 30 L. R. A. 665, 45 Am. St. Rep. 772; Ft. Morgan L. & C. Co. v. Ditch Co., 18 Colo. 1, 30 Pac. 1032, 36 Am. St. Rep. 259; Boquallis L. & C. Co. v. Curtis, 213 U. S. 339, 29 Sup. Ct. 493, 53 L. Ed. 822; U. S. v. Irrig. Co., 174 U. S. 690, 19 Sup. Ct. 770, 43 L. Ed. 1136.

Although this power of changing the common law rule as to streams within its dominion undoubtedly belongs to each state, yet two limitations must be recognized: First, that in the absence of specific authority from congress a state cannot by its legislation destroy the right of the United States as the owner of lands bordering on a stream to a continued flow of its waters, so far, at least, as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the government property. Second, that it is limited by the superior power of the general government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States. In other words the jurisdiction of the general government over interstate commerce and its natural highways vests in that government the right to take all needed measures to preserve the navigability of all navigable water-courses of the country, even against any state action; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

One who diverts water from a stream for domestic and irrigation purposes must, in order to protect his appropriation, use a reasonable degree of care to prevent loss by evaporation and seepage in conveying it to the place of use, since the law will not countenance a diversion of a volume many times greater than that which is actually consumed; Sterling v. Ditch Extension Co., 42 Colo. 421, 94 Pac. 339, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238. While a prior appropriator of water can claim only the amount which is necessary to supply his needs, and can permit no water to go to waste, he is not bound to adopt the best means for utilizing the water or take extraordinary precautions to prevent waste. He is entitled to make a reasonable use of the water according to the custom of the locality, and so long as he does so other persons can not complain of his acts. The amount of water required by an appropri-ator should be determined by reference to the system used, although it results in a waste of water which might be avoided by the adoption of another system; 3 Farn. Waters & Water Rights 675; Rodgers v. Pitt, 89 Fed. 420. But where an appropriation has been made, and the original method of conveying the water was direct and economical, a change of method whereby the waste is materially increased cannot be made, to the detriment of a subsequent appropriator; Roeder v. Stein, 23 Nev. 92, 42 Pac. 867. He is not liable for water lost by absorption and evaporation, which is necessarily so lost in a well constructed ditch or flume which is kept in good condition; Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 Pac. 811; Sterling v. Ditch Extension Co., 42 Colo. 421, 94 Pac. 339, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238.

The most essential element of an appropriation of water is application to a beneficial purpose; North Fork Water Co. v. Medland, 187 Fed. 163.

Submerged Land. When land is gradually submerged by a river the former owner retains no rights in it, and the owner of the river bed acquires the absolute title; Wallace v. Driver, 61 Ark. 429, 33 S. W. 641, 31 L. R. A. 317. Where the plaintiff's lot was formerly separated from the Mississippi river by another lot, and he offered to prove that the lot had been gradually but totally submerged by the river, but had afterwards gradually emerged, forming the land in dispute, it was held that the plaintiff could acquire no land by accretion beyond his original boundary; Stockley v. Cissna, 119 Fed. 812, 56 C. C. A. 324; to the same effect; Ocean City Ass'n v. Shriver, 64 N. J. L. 550, 46 Atl. 690, 51 L. R. A. 425. See 16 Harv. L. Rev. 527; Woodbury v. Short, 17 Vt. 387, 44 Am. Dec. 344.

A grant bounded by a navigable water-course extends only to high-water mark; but one bounded by a non-navigable stream extends to the middle thereof; Ex parte Jennings, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 518, 16 Am. Dec. 447; Ball v. Slack, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 508, 30 Am. Dec. 278, 286. See Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 428; Haight v. Keokuk, 4 Ia. 199; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. Ed. 224. When an island is on the side of a river, so as to give the riparian owner of that side only one-fourth of the water, he has no right to place obstructions at the head of the island to cause one-half of the stream to descend on his side of the river, but the owner opposite is entitled to the flow of the remaining three-fourths; Crooker v. Bragg, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 260, 25 Am. Dec. 555.

Grants of the government for lands bounded on streams and other waters, without any reservations or restrictions of terms, are to be construed as to their effect according to the law of the state in which the lands lie; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 Sup.

Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 428; Hardin v. Shedd, 190 U. S. 508, 23 Sup. Ct. 685, 47 L. Ed. 1156.

It is for the states to establish for themselves such rules of property as they may deem expedient with respect to the navigable waters within their borders and the riparian lands adjacent thereto; the proprietorship of the beds and shores of navigable waters, above as well as below the flow of the tide, properly belongs to the states by their inherent sovereignty, and the United States has wisely abstained from extending (if it could extend) its survey and grants beyond the limits of high water. The cases in which this court has seemed to hold a contrary view depended on the local laws of the states in which the lands were situated; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. Ed. 224.

When land is conveyed by the United States bounded on navigable water, the land under the water does not belong to the United States, but has passed to the state by its admission to the Union. If it passes to the riparian proprietor, it does not pass by the grant alone, but by force of the declaration of the state which does own it that it is attached to the shore; Scott v. Lattig, 227 U. S. 229, 33 Sup. Ct. 242, 57 L. Ed. 490, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 107. Congress, in disposing of the public lands, has constantly acted upon the theory that navigable waters and the soil under them, whether within or above the flow of the tide, shall be held in trust for the future states, which, when admitted to the Union, shall have all the powers pertaining to the older states with regard thereto; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331 (an exhaustive opinion by Gray, J.).

There is no federal right involved in the obstruction or use by private owners of a non-navigable stream wholly within a state; where a state court has decided it to be non-navigable in fact, there is no right left to review; Illinois v. Economy Light & C. Co., 234 U. S. 497, 34 Sup. Ct. 973, 58 L. Ed. —.

Quantity Used. Each successive riparian proprietor is entitled to the reasonable use of the water for the supply of his natural wants and for the operation of mills and machinery; Ulbricht v. Water Co., 86 Ala. 587, 6 South. 78, 4 L. R. A. 572, 11 Am. St. Rep. 72; Davis v. Getchell, 50 Me. 602, 79 Am. Dec. 636; Hayes v. Waldron, 44 N. H. 580, 84 Am. Dec. 105; L. R. 2-Ex. 1; Brown v. Kistler, 190 Pa. 499. The right to use for domestic purposes is primary and for mechanical power is secondary. When the two rights conflict the latter right must yield to the former; Auburn v. Water Power Co., 90 Me. 576, 38 Atl. 561, 38 L. R. A. 188. The right of a riparian proprietor on a non-navigable stream to the use of its ordinary flow of water, undiminished by an unreasonable use by an upper proprietor, is not an easement or appurtenance, but is inseparably annexed to the soil and is part and parcel of the land itself; Pine v. New York, 103 Fed. 337. One who diverts water from a flowing stream for a beneficial purpose may have the use of it so long as he conforms to the law regulating such matters, but he has no contract with or grant from the government, federal or state, in respect to his privilege; Mohl v. Canal Co., 128 Fed. 776.

Riparian owners may not divert or sell running water for general use, and are limited in their own use of it to ordinary purposes incident to the enjoyment of the riparian land, and in exceptional cases to extraordinary uses upon the land itself, if such use does not unreasonably decrease the quantity of the water or impair its quality; Carpenter v. Gold, 88 Va. 551, 14 S. E. 329. But the extraordinary use must be upon the riparian land. A railroad company, being a riparian owner, cannot divert the water to a reservoir several miles distant, to be used for railroad purposes; Scranton G. & W. Co. v. R. Co., 240 Pa. 604, 88 Atl. 24, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710.

Landowners along tidal streams have no private riparian rights of which the state, as owner of the foreshore, may not deprive them at will; Gould v. R. Co., 6 N. Y. 522; Stevens v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269.

The test as to "domestic supply" is not whether the water is used in the course of trade, but whether the user is in its nature domestic; [1914] A. C. 118.

Pollution. Where a statute authorized one to empty sewage into a stream, it was held that only landowners above tide water could recover damages, since the foreshore of tidal streams is owned by the state; Simmons v. Paterson, 60 N. J. Eq. 385, 45 Atl. 995, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642; contra, Lyon v. Fishmongers Co., L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean 376, Fed. Cas. No. 1,740.

A landowner may not pollute the quality of the water by unwholesome or discoloring impurities; 8 E. L. & E. 217; Townsend v. Bell, 62 Hun 306, 17 N. Y. Supp. 210; Indianapolis Water Co. v. Strawboard Co., 57 Fed. 1000; [1893] App. Cas. 691; Spence v. McDonough, 77 Ia. 460, 42 N. W. 371; Satterfield v. Rowan, 83 Ga. 187, 9 S. E. 677; but see, where the pollution results from a reasonable use; Hayes v. Waldron, 44 N. H. 580, 84 Am. Dec. 105; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117, 24 L. R. A. 568, 41 Am. St. Rep. 454; Ferguson v. Mfg. Co., 77 Ia. 576, 42 N. W. 448, 14 Am. St. Rep. 319.

The plaintiffs, neither owning nor leasing any land abutting on a river, leased from a power company the right to draw water from the power canals which it had dug above its dam upon the river. A city higher up the river was impliedly authorized by statute to drain its sewage into the stream.

It was held that the plaintiffs could recover in an action against the city for pollution of the water; Doremus v. Paterson, 65 N. J. Eq. 711, 55 Atl. 304.

A state may have relief in the federal supreme court against another state to prevent it from polluting the waters of a river flowing through both states, on which the complainant state relies for water supply; Missouri v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 496, 26 Sup. Ct. 268, 50 L. Ed. 572.

See POLLUTION.

Dams. A riparian owner may construct a dam; Fisher v. Feige, 137 Cal. 39, 69 Pac. 618, 59 L. R. A. 333, 92 Am. St. Rep. 77; Anderson v. R. Co., 86 Ky. 44, 5 S. W. 49, 9 Am. St. Rep. 263. It is not per se an improper structure as to lower owners; Arroyo D. & W. Co. v. Baldwin, 155 Cal. 280, 100 Pac. 874; Sullivan v. Jones, 13 Ariz. 229, 108 Pac. 476. But a dam may not be constructed of such a height that it will back the water upon the lands of others. This rule is the same under the doctrine of appropriation as at common law; Kalama E. L. & P. Co. v. Driving Co., 48 Wash. 612, 94 Pac. 469, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 641, 125 Am. St. Rep. 948; Cline v. Stock, 71 Neb. 70, 98 N. W. 454, 102 N. W. 265; North Alabama C. I. & R. Co. v. Jones, 156 Ala. 360, 47 South. 144; Trullinger v. Howe, 53 Or. 219, 97 Pac. 548, 99 Pac. 880, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545; Mentone Irr. Co. v. Power Co., 155 Cal. 323, 100 Pac. 1082, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, 17 Ann. Cas. 1222.

By act of congress June 29, 1906, the diversion of water from Niagara river or its tributaries in the state of New York is prohibited except with the consent of the secretary of war, who is authorized to grant permits for the diversion of water in the United States for the creation of power to individuals, companies and corporations legally authorized therefor, and who may regulate the amount of water diverted. The object of the act was to prevent injury to the scenery of Niagara Falls. In pursuance of the act a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, Jan. 11, 1909, was made for the purpose of limiting the diversion of water from Niagara river.

Where streams flow through more than one state it will be presumed, in the absence of legislation on the subject, that each allows the same rights to be acquired from outside the state as could be acquired from within; Bean v. Morris, 221 U. S. 485, 31 Sup. Ct. 703, 55 L. Ed. 821. It has been held that one may appropriate water from a stream in one state for application to lands in another; Willey v. Decker, 11 Wyo. 496, 73 Pac. 210, 100 Am. St. Rep. 939.

Where riparian rights of several parcels of land in different states, but on the same river, are involved, the courts of both states have concurrent jurisdiction, and the court first taking jurisdiction should proceed to a determination without interference; Rickey L. & C. Co. v. Miller, 218 U. S. 258, 31 Sup. Ct. 11, 54 L. Ed. 1032.

Surface Water. In Hoyt v. Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 659, 9 Am. Rep. 473, the difference between the civil and the common law was thus stated: "The doctrine of the civil law is that the owner of the upper or dominant estate has a natural easement or servitude in the lower or servient one, to discharge all waters falling or accumulating upon his land, which is higher, upon or over the land of the servient owner, as in a state of nature; and that such natural flow or passage of the water cannot be interrupted or prevented by the servient owner to the detriment or injury of the estate of the dominant or any proprietor. . . . The doctrine of common law is that there exists no such natural easement or servitude in favor of the owner of the superior or higher ground or fields as to mere surface water, or such as falls or accumulates by rain or the melting of snow, and that the proprietor of the inferior or lower tenement or estate may, if he choose, lawfully obstruct or hinder the natural flow of such water thereon, and in so doing may turn the same back upon or over the lands of other proprietors, without liability for injuries ensuing from such obstruction or diversion; Walker v. R. Co., 165 U. S. 593, 17 Sup. Ct. 421, 41 L. Ed. 837, a case arising in New Mexico, where the common law rule was adopted.

The doctrine of the common law with respect to the obstruction and flow of mere surface water is not only in force in England, but is in Connecticut, Indiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Jersey, New Hampshire, New York, Vermont and Wisconsin; Eulrich v. Richter, 37 Wis. 226; Barkley v. Wilcox, 86 N. Y. 140, 40 Am. Rep. 519; Beauchamp v. Taylor, 132 Mo. App. 92, 111 S. W. 609; Clay v. R. Co., 164 Ind. 439, 73 N. E. 904; Kansas City & E. R. Co. v. Riley, 33 Kan. 374, 6 Pac. 581.

Other cases in effect adhere to the civil law doctrine—that as against the rights of the upper proprietor, the owner of the servient estate cannot obstruct surface water when it has found its way to and is running in a natural drainage channel or depression; Glass v. Fritz, 148 Pa. 324, 23 Atl. 1050; Lawton v. R. Co., 61 S. C. 548, 39 S. E. 752; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Prouty, 149 Ala. 71, 43 South. 352; Launstein v. Launstein, 150 Mich. 524, 114 N. W. 383, 121 Am. St. Rep. 635.

The common law doctrine is adopted in Oklahoma with certain qualifications; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Groves, 20 Okl. 101, 93 Pac. 755, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802; the owner of land cannot collect the water in an artificial channel or volume and pour it upon the land of another to his injury; Davis v. Fry, 14 Okl. 340, 78 Pac. 180, 69 L. R. A. 460, 2 Ann. Cas. 193; Davis v

Crawfordsville, 119 Ind. 1, 21 N. E. 449, 12 Am. St. Rep. 361; Rychlicki v. St. Louis, 98 Mo. 497, 11 S. W. 1001, 4 L. R. A. 594, 14 Am. St. Rep. 651; Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Marley, 25 Neb. 138, 40 N. W. 948, 13 Am. St. Rep. 482; he cannot interfere with the flow of surface water in a natural channel; where water has been accustomed to gather and flow along in a well defined channel where by frequent running it has worn or cut into the soil, it may not be obstructed to the injury of the dominant tenant; Earl v. De Hart, 12 N. J. Eq. 280, 72 Am. Dec. 395; Sinai v. Ry. Co., 71 Miss. 552, 14 South. 87; Boyd v. Conklin, 54 Mich. 590, 20 N. W. 595, 52 Am. Rep. 831; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Carter, 91 Va. 587, 22 S. E. 517; where by force of the surface water a ditch has been formed, a lower tenant cannot even fill up such ditch to the original level of the swale or channel; Ribordy v. Murray, 177 Ill. 134, 52 N. E. 325. The rule of the civil law is in force in Pennsylvania, Iowa, Illinois, California, Louisiana, and is referred to with approval in Ohio; Walker v. R. R. Co., 165 U. S. 593, 17 Sup. Ct. 421, 41 L. Ed. 837.

Percolating water. A city built extensive wells, which drew off the water percolating through the plaintiff's land, thus rendering it unfit for crops. The defendant was held liable for the damage done; Forbell v. New York, 27 Misc. 12, 56 N. Y. Supp. 790, following Smith v. Brooklyn, 18 App. Div. 340, 46 N. Y. Supp. 141. The court laid down the general doctrine that the right to percolating water comprises only the right to use it on the owner's land.

One may not divert percolating water from his neighbor for purposes other than his own beneficial use or the improvement of his premises; Stillwater Water Co. v. Farmer, 89 Minn. 58, 93 N. W. 907, 60 L. R. A. 875, 99 Am. St. Rep. 541; whenever interference with percolating waters has been allowed, it has been incident to a reasonable use on the land; Smith v. Brooklyn, 18 App. Div. 340, 46 N. Y. Supp. 141; diversion for any other purpose is unlawful; Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35; the use can only be according to the usual law of waters; Forbell v. New York, 164 N. Y. 522, 58 N. E. 644, 51 L. R. A. 695, 79 Am. St. Rep. 666.

Subterranean waters are classified at common law as underground currents flowing in known and defined channels; and water passing in channels which are undefined and unknown. The rights to the waters of the first class are governed by the rules of law governing surface streams; while the waters of the second class are treated as mere percolations and belong to the owner of the soil where found; Kinney, Irrigation, etc., § 1155. The right to waters of the first class (supra) was recognized in [1902] 2 Ch. 655, 665, following 7 Ex. 300, as belonging to the owner of the land just as if the stream had been wholly above ground; but if the course of the underground channel is not known, and cannot be ascertained except by excavation, the lower riparian owner on the stream has no right of action for the abstraction of the underground water; [1902] 2 Ch. 655.

Where water percolates in no known channel, one who put down an extensive well to supply water to the inhabitants of the district (some of whom were not riparian owners) was held not liable to a mill owner who had for sixty years enjoyed the use of a stream chiefly supplied by such percolating water; 7 H. L. Cas. 349. One may collect percolating waters for use off the land, though he thereby drains a well on neighboring premises, the waters from which had been used only for domestic purposes; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. East, 98 Tex. 146, 81 S. W. 279, 66 L. R. A. 738, 107 Am. St. Rep. 620, 4 Ann. Cas. 827. See 16 Harv. L. Rev. 295. Each landowner may absolutely enjoy the percolating water and owes no duty to his neighbor; Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49.

A pool of water, or a stream or water-course, is considered as part of the land; hence a pool of twenty acres would pass by the grant of twenty acres of land, without mentioning the water; 2 Bla. Com. 18; Bullen v. Runnels, 2 N. H. 255, 9 Am. Dec. 55; Rogers v. Jones, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 255, 19 Am. Dec. 493; Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 497; Hart v. Evans, 8 Pa. 13. A mere grant of water passes only a fishery; Co. Litt. 4 b; Jackson v. Halstead, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 216. But the owner of land over which water flows may grant the land, reserving the use of all the water to himself, or may grant the use of all or a portion of the water, reserving the fee of the land to himself; Rood v. Johnson, 26 Vt. 64.

But it is held that a riparian proprietor may not assign his rights in gross; 3 H. & C. 300; see 19 Harv. L. Rev. 216. A riparian owner cannot assign his water-rights as against upper or lower proprietors, but can create only a contract right against himself; 16 Harv. L. Rev. 145, citing 11 Q. B. D. 115; Gould v. Eaton, 117 Cal. 539, 49 Pac. 577, 38 L. R. A. 181. But see Gillis v. Chase, 67 N. H. 161, 31 Atl. 18, 68 Am. St. Rep. 645; St. Anthony Falls W. P. Co. v. Minneapolis, 41 Minn. 270, 43 N. W. 56.

The public cannot, in the United States, gain any proprietary right in streams of inland water too small to be used for the transportation of property; Ang. Water-C. § 2; Wadsworth v. Smith, 11 Me. 278, 26 Am. Dec. 525. In the case of navigable waters used as a highway of commerce between the states or with foreign nations no state can grant a monopoly for the navigation of any portion of such waters; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed.

23; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 36 L. Ed. 1018; Saunders v. R. Co., 144 N. Y. 88, 38 N. E. 992, 26 L. R. A. 378, 43 Am. St. Rep. 729; Pacific G. I. Co. v. Ellert, 64 Fed. 436. A state has the same power to improve such waters as it has in the case of any highway; Cooley, Const. Lim. 738; Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 1, 10 South. 688, 15 L. R. A. 42; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. U. S., 148 U. S. 312, 13 Sup. Ct. 622, 37 L. Ed. 463; Falls Mfg. Co. v. Imp. Co., 87 Wis. 151, 58 N. W. 257; and, having expended money for such improvement, it may impose tolls upon the commerce which has the benefit of the improvement; Palmer v. Cuyahoga County, 3 McLean 226, Fed. Cas. No. 10,688; McReynolds v. Smallhouse, 8 Bush (Ky.) 447. The states may authorize the construction of bridges over such waters, for railroads and other species of highways, notwithstanding they may to some extent interfere with navigation. See Hare, Am. Const. L. 457, 487, 497; Com. v. Breed, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 460; State v. Leighton, 83 Me. 419, 22 Atl. 380; Willamette I. B. Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 811, 31 L. Ed. 629; Oregon City Transp. Co. v. Bridge Co., 53 Fed. 549; BRIDGE. A state may establish ferries over such waters; Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black (U. S.) 603, 17 L. Ed. 191; Marshall v. Grimes, 41 Miss. 27; and authorize the construction of dams; Cooley, Const. Lim. 740. A state may also regulate the speed and general conduct of vessels navigating its water highways, provided its regulations do not conflict with any regulations made by congress; People v. Jenkins, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 469. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 737, 741. It may prohibit the transportation of its water into any other state; Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 28 Sup. Ct. 529, 52 L. Ed. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 560.

In the Salton Sea Cases the court, having jurisdiction of land alleged to be injured by the wrongful acts of the defendant corporation in flooding the plaintiff's land, enjoined the defendant though the wrongful act was committed in Mexico; The Salton Sea Cases, 172 Fed. 792, 97 C. C. A. 214.

WAVESON. Such goods as appear upon the waves after shipwreck. Jacob.

WAY. A passage, street, or road.

A right of way is the privilege which an individual, or a particular description of individuals, as the inhabitants of a village or the owners or occupiers of certain farms, have of going over another's ground. It is an incorporeal hereditament of a real nature, entirely different from a common highway. Cruise, Dig. tit. xxiv. s. 1.

A right to pass over another's land more or less frequently according to the nature of the use to be made of the easement, and how frequently is immaterial, provided it occurred as often as the claimant had occasion or chose to pass. Bodfish v. Bodfish, 105 Mass. 319.

A right of way may arise: By prescription and immemorial usage, or by an uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years under a claim of right; Co. Litt. 113; Garrett v. Jackson, 20 Pa. 331; Reimer v. Stuber, 20 Pa. 458, 59 Am. Dec. 744; Sheeks v. Erwin, 130 Ind. 31, 29 N. E. 11; Coburn v. San Mateo Co., 75 Fed. 520; Bushey v. Santiff, 86 Hun 384, 33 N. Y. Supp. 473; Follendore v. Thomas, 93 Ga. 300, 20 S. E. 329. By grant; as where the owner grants to another the liberty of passing over his land; 1 Ld. Raym. 75; Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 250; 7 B. & C. 257. If the grant be of a freehold right it must be by deed; 5 B. & C. 221; Foster v. Browning, 4 R. I. 47, 67 Am. Dec. 505. By necessity; as where a man purchases land accessible only over land of the vendor, or sells, reserving land accessible only over land of the vendee, he shall have a way of necessity over the land which gives access to his purchase or reservation; 5 Taunt. 311; Wissler v. Hershey, 23 Pa. 333; Collins v. Prentice, 15 Conn. 39, 38 Am. Dec. 61; Bass v. Edwards, 126 Mass. 445; Mead v. Anderson, 40 Kan. 203, 19 Pac. 708; Barnard v. Lloyd, 85 Cal. 131, 24 Pac. 658; and this may exist even after the vendor has conveyed his land to a third person; Logan v. Stogsdale, 123 Ind. 372, 24 N. E. 135, 8 L. R. A. 58; but a way of necessity is not created by the fact that a road over grantor's land would be of less distance to a highway than a road already established; Vossen v. Dautel, 116 Mo. 379, 22 S. W. 734. The necessity must be absolute, not a mere convenience; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 102, 35 Am. Dec. 302; Stevens v. Orr, 69 Me. 323; Mayo v. Thigpen, 107 N. C. 63, 11 S. E. 1052; Oliver v. Pitman, 98 Mass. 50; 11 Ch. Div. 968; L. R. 9 Ch. 111; contra, Williams v. Safford, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 309; and when it ceases the way ceases with it; Pierce v. Selleck, 18 Conn. 321; New York, L. I. & T. Co. v. Milnor, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 353. See EASEMENT. By implication; Rightsell v. Hale, 90 Tenn. 556, 18 S. W. 245. By reservation expressly made in the grant of the land over which it is claimed; White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 183; Hart v. Connor, 25 Conn. 331. By custom; as where navigators have a right of this nature to tow along the banks of navigable rivers with horses; 3 Term 253. By acts of legislature; though a private way cannot be so laid out without the consent of the owner of the land over which it is to pass; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 15 Conn. 83; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; McCauley v. Dunlap, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 57. The easement of a property owner in a private way across a railroad track is extinguished on his joining in a proceeding to establish, against the will of the company, a public road upon the private way; McKinney v. R. Co., 222 Pa. 48, 70 Atl. 946, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002.

A right of way may be either a right in gross, which is a purely personal right incommunicable to another, or a right appurtenant or annexed to an estate, and which may pass by assignment with the estate to which it is appurtenant; 3 Kent 420; Shepherd v. Watson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 35; Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 250. But see EASEMENT. A right of way appurtenant to land is appurtenant to all and every part of the land, and if such land be divided and conveyed in separate parcels, a right of way thereby passes to each of the grantees; Underwood v. Carney, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Watson v. Bioren, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 229, 7 Am. Dec. 617. A way is never presumed to be in gross when it can be construed to be appurtenant to land; French v. Williams, 82 Va. 462, 4 S. E. 591. Where a way appurtenant to land granted is not located by the grant, the parties may locate it by parol agreement at any point on the premises over which the right is granted; Kinney v. Hooker, 65 Vt. 333, 26 Atl. 690, 36 Am. St. Rep. 864.

Ways may be abandoned by agreement, by evident intention, or by long non-user. Twenty years' occupation of land adverse to a right of way and inconsistent therewith bars the right; Yeakle v. Nace, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 123; Crain v. Fox, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 184; Pope v. Devereux, 5 Gray (Mass.) 409. Where a way of necessity once existed it will be presumed to exist until some fact is shown establishing non-existence; Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362, 36 Pac. 778, 41 Am. St. Rep. 188.

A person cannot acquire a prescriptive right of way over his own lands, or the lands of another which he occupies as tenant; Vossen v. Dautel, 116 Mo. 379, 22 S. W. 734; and where one has uninterruptedly used a way over another's land for the necessary length of time to establish an easement by adverse user, it will be presumed that the user was adverse, and under claim of title, and the burden is on one claiming that it was by virtue of a license to prove that fact; Colburn v. Marsh, 68 Hun 269, 22 N. Y. Supp. 990.

The owner of a right of way may disturb the soil to pave and repair it. But a way granted for one purpose cannot be used for another; Brown v. Stone, 10 Gray (Mass.) 61, 69 Am. Dec. 303.

A person having a right of way which is obstructed by a house erected upon the way may, after notice and request to remove it, pull it down, although it is actually inhabited; [1891] 3 Ch. 411.

Lord Coke, adopting the civil law, says there are three kinds of ways: a footway, called iter; a footway and horseway, called actus; a cartway, which contains the other two, called via; Co. Litt. 56 a. To which may be added a driftway, a road over which cattle are driven; 1 Taunt. 279.

Where a railway company closed an old road at a level crossing, by the consent of the plaintiff's predecessor, it was held that the defendant had a right, in passing, to go on plaintiff's land; 39 T. L. R. 555.

See HIGHWAY; STREET; EASEMENT; THOROUGHFARE.

WAY-BILL. A writing in which are set down the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land.

WAY-GOING CROP. In Pennsylvania. By the custom of the country, a tenant for a term certain is entitled, after the expiration of his lease, to enter and take away the crop of grain which he had put into the ground the preceding fall. This is called the way-going crop; Stultz v. Dickey, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 289, 6 Am. Dec. 411; Biggs v. Brown, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 14. See AWAY-GOING CROP; EMBLEMENTS; GROWING CROPS.

WAYS AND MEANS. In legislative assemblies, there is usually appointed a committee whose duties are to inquire into and propose to the house the ways and means to be adopted to raise funds for the use of the government. This body is called the committee of ways and means.

WEAPON. An instrument of offensive or defensive combat. Statutes have been passed in many of the states prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons. They are merely police regulations; State v. Jumel, 13 La. Ann. 399. Under particular statutes it has been held that to constitute the offence locomotion is not necessary, the possession is sufficient; Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 387; even if the weapon is not in perfect order and ready for use; Atwood v. State, 53 Ala. 508; State v. Duzan, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 31; Gamblin v. State, 45 Miss. 658. Persons on their own premises; Kinhead v. State, 45 Ark. 536; or on a journey (see TRAVELLER); or having good reasons to fear bodily harm; Bell v. State, 89 Ala. 61, 8 South. 133; are exempted from the operation of such statutes; as are officers of the law; Irvine v. State, 18 Tex. App. 51. See ARMS; CONCEALED WEAPONS.

The ordinary implements of war are lawful: swords, fire-arms, and cannon, and even those which are secret or concealed, such as pits and mines. But this does not include poisoned weapons of any kind. See 2 Oppenheim, Int. L. 79. Great Britain, France, Prussia, Russia, and other nations united in a declaration at St. Petersburg in 1868, by which they agreed to renounce, in case of war among themselves, the employment of any projectile of a weight less than 400 grammes, charged with fulminating or inflammable substances. 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 563. See Oppenheim, Int. L. 503.

Floating mines were first used in the Russo-Japanese War, 1904. As to permitting their use, see 2 Oppenheim, Int. L. 189.

WEAR, WEIR. A dam made across a river accommodated for the taking of fish or to convey a stream to a mill. Jacob. See DAM.

WEAR AND TEAR. Destruction to some extent, e. g. destruction of surface by ordinary friction, but the words do not include total destruction by a catastrophe which was never contemplated by either party. 5 C. P. Div. 507.

Natural and reasonable wear and tear covers only such decay or depreciation in value of the property as may arise from ordinary and reasonable use; and injury by a freshet is not within the meaning; Green v. Kelly, 20 N. J. L. 547.

WEARING APPAREL. As generally used in statutes, refers not merely to a person's outer clothing, but covers all articles usually worn, and includes underclothing; Arnold v. U. S., 147 U. S. 494, 13 Sup. Ct. 406, 37 L. Ed. 253. It may include a gold watch; Stewart v. McClung, 12 Or. 431, 8 Pac. 447, 53 Am. Rep. 374; but see Smith v. Rogers, 16 Ga. 479; Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535; a pearl necklace; U. S. v. One Pearl Chain, 139 Fed. 513, 71 C. C. A. 500; but not a travelling trunk or a breastpin; Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 345, 66 Am. Dec. 726; and under the revenue laws shoes are not included; Swayne v. Hager, 37 Fed. 782. See BAGGAGE.

WEATHER BUREAU. Its bulletins are not notice of rain, so as to make it negligent to unload goods on an open wharf; but the master of a ship is bound to take notice of information from the weather bureau of storms of great violence and extent, such as frequently occur on the Atlantic coast; The St. Georg, 104 Fed. 898, 44 C. C. A. 246. The work of the weather bureau is not of such reputed accuracy that its prognostications as to a coming flood can be made the basis of a recovery; they may be evidence, but they are not conclusive; Cunningham v. R. Co., 40 Pa. Super. Ct. 212.

See Year Book (1903) U. S. Dept. Agricult. 304.

By a Michigan act, 1897, weather conditions are provable in civil cases by United States signal service records; so by a New York act of 1897. In Vermont, an act of 1894 provides that weather records at the place where taken are admissible to prove weather conditions. Wherever there is a duty to record official doings, the record thus kept is admissible, whether prescribed by statute or implied from the nature of the office; Wigmore, Evid. § 1639.

WED (Anglo-Sax.). A covenant or agreement; thus, a wedded husband.

A pledge. Jenks, Hist. E. L. 13. See SYMBOLIC DELIVERY.

WEDDING. In the Teutonic races, more importance was attached to the betrothal than to the subsequent wedding. The former seems to have been the sale of a woman by her guardian for a price. This came to be represented by a handsel, which was not paid over until the wedding. Later, the betrothal was the woman's own act, and the handsel was payable to herself. In Roman law there was a distinction between sponsalia and matrimonium, which was obscured by another which divided marriages into clandestine and regular—the former resting merely in the agreement of the parties. The Christian church upheld "clandestine" marriage as valid until the Council of Trent declared all marriages to be void unless made in the presence of a priest and witnesses. In England, where that decree was not received, either of the parties to a clandestine marriage could compel the other, in an ecclesiastical court, to solemnize it in due form. It has been held (10 Cl. & F. 655) that the English common law never recognized such a contract per verba de presenti as valid, although it recognized it, as well as a contract "per verba de futuro," down to the middle of the eighteenth century as giving either of the parties a right to sue for a celebration and as impeding the marriage of either party with a stranger. Holland, Jurispr. 240.

In the later Anglo-Saxon period the husband gave the parent or guardian security (wed) that "he will keep her according to God's law as a man should his wife"; he arranged with her friends and with herself what settlement he would make upon her, and what should be her rights after his death, and for this promise he gave her a wed. The actual nuptials were performed in the presence of a priest. The marriage service of the English church reproduces these old ideas. The wed appears in the ring; the settlement is found in the endowment of the bride by the bridegroom with "all his worldly goods." There is the giving away of the bride by her guardians, and the presence of the priest. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 76. The Church of England marriage service is said to be a cabinet of antiquities. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 365.

As to wedding presents, see PARAPHERNALIA.

WEEDS. As to permitting the spread of seeds, see Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Oakes, 94 Tex. 155, 58 S. W. 999, 52 L. R. A. 293, 86 Am. St. Rep. 835.

See WASTE.

WEEK. Seven days of time.

The week commences immediately after twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends at twelve o'clock, seven days of twenty-four hours each, thereafter. See Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 361, 7 L. Ed. 882; 24 L. J. Ch. 368; or it may mean a period of time of seven days duration without reference to when that period commences; State v. Mining Co., 5 Nev. 430.

In a contract for employment, week will be construed to mean week days only where employment is prohibited on Sunday; Keith v. Kellermann, 169 Fed. 196.

The first publication of a notice of a sale, under a power contained in a mortgage, which requires the notice to be published "once each week for three successive weeks," need not be made three weeks before the time appointed for the sale; Dexter v. Shepard, 117 Mass. 480. See TIME.

Week-Work. In early English times, the obligation of a tenant to work two or three days in every week for his lord, during the greater part of the year, and four or five during the summer months. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 349.

WEEKLY PAYMENT LAWS. See LIBERTY OF CONTRACT.

WEIGHAGE. In English Law. A duty or toll paid for weighing merchandise: it is called tronage for weighing wool at the king's beam, or pesage for weighing other avoirdupois goods. 2 Chitty, Com. Law 16.

WEIGHT. A quality in natural bodies by which they tend towards the centre of the earth.

Under the police power, weights and measures may be established and dealers compelled to conform to the fixed standards under a penalty; Cooley, Const. Lim. 749.

By the constitution congress has the power "to fix the standard of weights and measures."

Troy weight is used for weighing gold, silver, and precious stones, except diamonds. Troy weight is also used by apothecaries in compounding medicines; but by them the ounce is divided into eight drams, and the dram into three scruples, so that the latter is equal to twenty grains. For scientific purposes (when the metric system is not employed, as it now usually is), the grain only is used, and sets of weights are used constructed in decimal progression from 10,000 grains downward to one-hundredth of a grain. The carat used for weighing diamonds is three and one-sixth grains.

See GRAMME.

By act of March 4, 1911, R. S. § 3548, was amended by the substitution of the standard troy pound of the bureau of standards for the standard prescribed by the original section.

See LEGAL TENDER; GOLD.

The legislative power to enact statutes to compel the use of correct weights and measures can be delegated to a municipal corporation; Ford v. R. Co., 33 App. Div. 474, 53 N. Y. Supp. 764; Seattle v. Goldsmith, 73 Wash. 54, 131 Pac. 456; it is within the police power; id. A city having the statutory right to provide for the public weighing of coal, hay and corn, may maintain public scales; 165 Mo. 671; the exemption of amounts under 500 pounds, or of cases where the parties agreed does not invalidate the act; State v. Eck, 141 N. W. 106, 121 Minn. 202.

A city ordinance requiring grain sold for consumption in the city to be weighed on the city scales is not invalid as an unreasonable restraint of trade; State v. Smith, 123 Ia. 654, 96 N. W. 899; so of coal; State v. Eck, 141 N. W. 106, 121 Minn. 202.

A state act providing that the state weighmaster in various cities shall have exclusive control of the weighing of grain subject to inspection, and his action and certificates shall be conclusive on all parties, is unconstitutional, as depriving the shipper of his day in court; Vega S. S. Co. v. Elevator Co., 75 Minn. 308, 77 N. W. 973, 43 L. R. A. 843, 74 Am. St. Rep. 484.

An ordinance regulating the weight of baker's bread is void as being an unreasonable invasion of the right to engage in a lawful business; Buffalo v. Baking Co., 39 App. Div. 432, 57 N. Y. Supp. 347.

To cheat a man of his money or goods by using false weights or false measures is indictable at common law; Com. v. Warren, 6 Mass. 72; and it is no defence that the scales got out of order because of the pans getting mixed up after being cleaned; New York v. Biffle, 91 N. Y. Supp. 737.

An ordinance penalizing any person using any weight, etc., not conforming to the standard or which shall be incorrect, is aimed at the use of such defective weight and not at an intentional alteration of it; New York v. Hewitt, 91 App. Div. 445, 86 N. Y. Supp. 832. Proof of intent or guilty knowledge is not essential in an action to recover the penalty; id.

Evidence of short weight in a sale by a servant of defendant in his absence warrants a conviction; Com. v. Sacks, 214 Mass. 72, 100 N. E. 1019, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1076; but not a sale by a wholesale dealer of meats in the ordinary package, packed at the wholesale dealer's plant in another state under federal inspection; New York v. Sulzberger & Sons Co., 80 Misc. 660, 141 N. Y. S. 876.

Under act of congress of March 2, 1895, giving to the sealer of weights and measures the custody and control of such standard weights and measures as now are, or as shall hereafter be, provided by the District of Columbia, the English standard which was brought to the colonies and has been recognized by congressional action is the standard with which they are given the power to enforce conformity; Thompson v. District of Columbia, 21 App. D. C. 395.

The only method of testing scales is provided by act of congress, supplemented by How. St., which provides for supplying each county, etc., with weights and measures compared with the standards in the office of the state treasurer; and it is improper to permit any comparison of scales or weights except by reference to this standard; McGeorge v. Walker, 65 Mich. 5, 31 N. W. 601.

For French weights, see MEASURE.

In Anglo-Norman times weights were usually expressed in pounds, shillings and pence. 2 Studer, Oak Book of Southampton.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE. This phrase is used to signify that the proof on one side of a cause or issue is greater than on the other.

When a verdict has been rendered against the weight of the evidence, the court may, on this ground, grant a new trial; but the court will exercise this power not merely with a cautious but a strict and sure judgment, before they send the case to a second jury.

The general rule, under such circumstances, is that the verdict once found shall stand: the setting aside is the exception, and ought to be an exception of rare and almost singular occurrence. A new trial will be granted on this ground for either party: the evidence, however, is not to be weighed in golden scales: 2 Bingh. N. C. 109; Williams v. Gilman, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 276; Baker v. Briggs, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 122, 19 Am. Dec. 311; Rice v. Welling, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 595. See NEW TRIAL; Moore, Facts; Wigmore, Ev.

WEIR. See WEAR.

WELFARE CLAUSE. See CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

WELL. A hole dug in the earth in order to obtain water.

In a deed, well designates the portion of land under and occupied by the excavation, and its surrounding retaining walls, and by any structures or appliances built upon the land to facilitate its use, and also the water actually at any time in the excavation; Davis v. Spaulding, 157 Mass. 431, 32 N. E. 650, 19 L. R. A. 102.

The owner of the estate has a right to dig in his own ground at such a distance as is permitted by law from his neighbor's land; he is not restricted as to the size or depth, and is not liable to any action for rendering the well of his neighbor useless by so doing. See Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 170, 43 Am. Rep. 569; SUBTERRANEAN WATERS; WATERS; Collins v. Gas Co., 131 Pa. 143, 18 Atl. 1012, 6 L. R. A. 280, 17 Am. St. Rep. 791.

WELL-BORN MEN. A tribunal in New Amsterdam (New York). 1 Fiske, Dutch and Quaker Colonies 238.

WELL KNOWING. In Pleading. Words used in a declaration when the plaintiff sues for an injury which is not immediate and with force, and the act or nonfeasance complained of was not prima facie actionable. Not only the injury, but the circumstances under which it was committed, ought to be stated: as, where the injury was done by an animal. In such case the plaintiff, after stating the injury, continues, the defendant, well knowing the mischievous propensity of his dog, permitted him to go at large. See SCRIPENTER.

WELSH MORTGAGE. In English Law. A species of security which partakes of the nature of a mortgage, as there is a debt due, and an estate is given as security for the repayment, but differs from it in the circumstances that the rents and profits are to be received without account till the principal money is paid off, and there is no remedy to enforce payment, while the mortgagor has a perpetual power of redemption. It is now rarely used.

It is a species of vivum vadium. Strictly, however, there is this distinction between a Welsh mortgage and a vivum vadium: in the latter the rents and profits of the estate are applied to the discharge of the principal after paying the interest; while in the former the rents and profits are received in satisfaction of his interest only; 1 Powell, Mortg. 373 a; Jones, Mtg. 1153. See MORTGAGE.

WELSHING. Receiving a sum of money or valuable thing, undertaking to return the same or the value thereof together with other money, if an event (for example, the result of a horse-race) shall be determined in a certain manner and at the time of receiving the deposit intending to cheat and defraud the depositor. Coldr. & Hawks, Gambling 303. The crime is larceny at common law.

WEOTUMA. The purchase price of a wife among the heathen Germans. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 77. See MORNING GIFT; DOWER.

WERGILD. In Old English Law. The price which, in a barbarous age, a person guilty of homicide or other enormous offence was required to pay, instead of receiving other punishment. 4 Bla. Com. 188.

The "man's price" which a man's kinfolk were entitled to demand from his slayer, and which he sometimes might have to pay for his own offences. Pollock, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Legal Hist. 98.

The only punishments, in the proper sense, applicable to free men, were money fines, and death in the extreme cases. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 26. In the early days there was no power to compel their acceptance; Jenks, Hist. E. L. 158.

The life of every man, not excepting that of the king himself, was estimated at a certain price, which was called the wer or estimatio capitis. The amount varied according to the dignity of the person murdered. The price of wounds was also varied according to the nature of the wound, or the member injured.

See, for the etymology of this word, and a tariff which was paid for the murder of the different classes of men, Guizot, Essais sur l'Histoire de France, Essai 4ème, c. 2, § 2. See Thorpe, Wergilds; Seebohm, Tribal Customs in Anglo-Saxon Law.

WEST SAXON LAGE. The law of the West Saxons, which was observed in the counties in the south and west of England, from Kent to Devonshire, in the beginning of the eleventh century; supposed by Blackstone to have been much the same as the laws of Alfred. 1 Bla. Com. 65. It is said to have been compiled by King Alfred. 4 Steph. Com. 428.

WEST VIRGINIA. The name of one of the United States of America.

This state was formed in 1861 of the western counties of Virginia, owing to their non-concurrence in the ordinance of secession passed by the legislature of that state. A constitution was framed by a convention which met at Wheeling on November 26, 1861. This was submitted to the people on April 3, 1862, and ratified almost unanimously. The consent of the body, recognized by the federal government as the legislature of Virginia, was given, and congress then passed an act approved December 31, 1862, providing for the admission of the new state into the Union upon condition of the adoption of an amendment to the constitution providing for emancipation of slaves. This was done, and the state was admitted to the Union. The first constitution remained in force until 1872, when the present constitution was framed by a convention which met on January 16, 1872, and completed its labors on April 9 of that year. It was submitted to the people and ratified by them on August 22, 1872. The constitution was amended in 1913 by providing for prohibition, which took effect July 1, 1914.

Com. v. West Virginia, 206 U. S. 290, was a suit to adjust, between those states, the debt of Virginia before the separation. It contains much historical information.

WESTERN RESERVE. See OHIO.

WESTMINSTER 2nd, STATUTE OF. A statute of 13 Edw. I. c. 24 (1285), under which it was provided that where in one case a writ was found and in a like case no writ was to be found, the clerks of the chancery should agree in making a writ, or adjourn the complaint until the next parliament and refer to it the cases in which they could not agree. Steph. Pl. *7. See CONSIMILI CASU.

WETHER. A castrated ram, at least one year old. In an indictment it may be called a sheep. 4 C. & P. 216.

WHALER. A vessel employed in the whale fishery.

It is usual for the owner of the vessel, the captain, and crew, to divide the profits in just proportions, under an agreement similar to the contract Di Colona, which see. See LAY.

WHARF. A space of ground artificially prepared for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the convenient loading and discharge of such vessel.

A wharf occupied by a ferry company, to which access can only be had through a gate controlled by the ferry company, or over private property of another, is a private wharf; Malloy v. R. Co., 78 Hun 166, 28 N. Y. Supp. 979; but a public quay in a city, dedicated to public use, does not cease to be locus publicus and become private property because it is leased by the public authorities for a purpose subservient to the public use; New Orleans v. Const. Co., 140 U. S. 654, 11 Sup. Ct. 968, 35 L. Ed. 556.

At common law, the soil or all tide-waters below high-water mark being vested in the crown, the erection of a wharf thereon without the consent of the crown is an encroachment upon the royal domain of that kind which has been denominated a purpresture, and, as such, may be either abated, or, if more beneficial to the crown, the party arrested, unless it be a public nuisance; 10 Price, 350, 378; 18 Ves. 214; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 920. But if it obstruct navigation to such a degree as to be a public nuisance, neither the crown nor its grantee has authority to erect or maintain it without the sanction of an act of parliament; 8 Ad. & E. 336; 5 M. & W. 327; Phear, Rights of Water 54. It is not every wharf erected in navigable water which is a nuisance, for it may be a benefit rather than an injury to the navigation; and it is for the jury to determine, in each particular case, whether such a wharf is a nuisance or not; 1 C. & M. 496; 4 Ad. & E. 384; 15 Q. B. 276.

In this country, the several states, being the owners of the soil of the tide waters within their respective territories, may by law authorize and regulate the erection of wharves thereon, at least until the general government shall have legislated upon the subject; Savannah v. State, 4 Ga. 26; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53; Wilson's Lessee v. Inloes, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 351; and may grant to a municipal corporation the exclusive right to make and control wharves on the banks of a navigable river; Keokuk N. L. P. Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80, 24 L. Ed. 377. The riparian proprietor is entitled to make a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use or for the use of the public, subject to such general rules and regulations as the legislature may prescribe; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 445, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 38 L. Ed. 1018; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 504, 19 L. Ed. 984. In Massachusetts and Maine, by a colonial ordinance, the provisions of which are still recognized as the law of those states, the property of the shores and flats between high and low water mark, for one hundred rods, subject to the rights of the public, was transferred to the owners of the upland, who may, therefore, build wharfs out to that distance, if by so doing they do not unreasonably interrupt navigation; Drake v. Curtis, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 395; Partridge v. Luce, 36 Me. 16. If without legislative sanction they extend a wharf beyond that distance, such extension is prima facie a nuisance, and will be abated as such, unless it can be shown that it is no material detriment to navigation; Gray v. Bartlett, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 186, 32 Am. Dec. 208; Thornton v. Grant, 10 R. I. 477, 14 Am. Rep. 701. It is said that a wharf may extend to the point of navigability; Clifford v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 223. In Connecticut, and probably in other states, by the law of the state founded upon immemorial usage, the proprietor of the upland has the right to wharf out to the channel,—subject to the rights of the public; Chapman v. Kimball, 9 Conn. 38, 21 Am. Dec. 707; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 369, 10 L. Ed. 997; State v. Jersey City, 1 N. J. L. 525; Rippe v. R. Co., 23 Minn. 18; Paine L. Co. v. U. S., 55 Fed. 854. In Pennsylvania, the riparian proprietor is held to be the owner of the soil between high and low water mark, and to be entitled to erect wharves thereon; Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 131; but not without express authority from the state; Tinicum F. Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597. In the same state it has been held that wharves are not the private property of him who erects them, and persons who go upon and fasten vessels to them are not trespassers; Degan v. Dunlap, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 69.

Riparian owners have the right, among others, to build private wharves out so as to reach the navigable waters of the stream; Weems Steamboat Co. v. Steamboat Co., 214 U. S. 345, 29 Sup. Ct. 661, 53 L. Ed. 1024, 16 Ann. Cas. 1222.

The owner of a wharf is liable for damages caused to a vessel by concealed obstructions which he might have ascertained by reasonable diligence; Manhattan Transp. Co. v. New York, 37 Fed. 160. A railroad company which maintained a wharf was held bound to know whether obstructions existed thereat which would endanger a vessel assigned by it to berth at such wharf; Verdon v. R. Co., 157 Fed. 481. A wharfinger is bound to exercise reasonable diligence in ascertaining the condition of the berths at his wharf and remove dangerous obstructions thereat, or to give notice thereof to vessels about to dock; and the master is bound to use ordinary care; Smith v. Burnett, 173 U. S. 430, 19 Sup. Ct. 442, 43 L. Ed. 756; [1891] App. Cas. 11; Carleton v. Steel Co., 99 Mass. 216. The master is not bound to take soundings before going into the berth; and in an action for injuries sustained in grounding on a rock in the bottom of the dock, it is sufficient to show that the owner of the dock could have discovered the rock by reasonable diligence; Garfield & Proctor Coal Co. v. Lime Co., 184 Mass. 60, 67 N. E. 863, 61 L. R. A. 946, 100 Am. St. Rep. 543.

Such claims are within the jurisdiction of admiralty; and a libel in personam will lie; Ball v. Trenholm, 45 Fed. 588. The wharfinger was also held liable for damages to vessels caused by the insufficiency of the wharf; The Francisco R. v. The Waterloo, 79 Fed. 113.

Owners of land abutting on a lake, the title to which is in the state, have the right to build wharves in aid of navigation, but not obstructing it, far enough to reach water navigable for such boats as are in use; Madison v. Mayers, 97 Wis. 399, 73 N. W. 43, 65 Am. St. Rep. 127, 40 L. R. A. 635, with an extended note on the right of the riparian owner to erect wharves.

Where abutters on a navigable stream have grants from the state conveying land under water, conditioned upon their erecting docks and promoting commerce, the public has the incidental right to pass over the abutting lines to reach the docks; Thousand Island Steamboat Co. v. Visger, 179 N. Y. 206, 71 N. E. 764.

A wharf built by a railroad company by municipal authority on what might be the extension of a street is not a public wharf; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Naval Stores Co., 198 U. S. 483, 25 Sup. Ct. 745, 49 L. Ed. 1135; but one built on a navigable stream at the terminus of public highways in the country, which is the only means of reaching the river and was built for that purpose, and is being so used, is impressed with a public interest; Weems Steamboat Co. v. Steamboat Co., 214 U. S. 345, 29 Sup. Ct. 661, 53 L. Ed. 1024, 16 Ann. Cas. 1222.

Long continued use of a wharf by the public at large, without objection on the part of the town, will support a verdict finding it to be a public landing place; Coolidge v. Learned, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 504. The title to a wharf may be obtained by prescription as against the commonwealth; Nichols v. Boston, 98 Mass. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 132.

See RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; WATER-COURSE; RIVERS; WATERS; 40 L. R. A. 635; 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 506, for valuable notes.

WHARFAGE. The money paid for landing goods upon, or loading them from, a wharf. Dane, Abr. Index; Sacramento v. The "New World", 4 Cal. 41. It may be on an artificial or a natural landing; Sacramento v. The "New World", 4 Cal. 41.

Wharfingers in London are not entitled to wharfage for goods unloaded into lighters out of barges fastened to their wharves; 3 Burr. 1409; 1 W. Bla. 243. And see Camden & A. R. Co. v. Finch, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 48. It has been held that, owing to the interest which the public have in the matter, rates of wharfage may be regulated by statute; Murphy v. Montgomery, 11 Ala. 586. And see Albany v. Trowbridge, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 71; Fitzsimons v. Milner, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 370; 8 B. & C. 42.

Claims for wharfage are cognizable in admiralty, and, if the vessel is a foreign one or from another state, the claim of the wharfinger is a maritime lien against the vessel, which may be enforced by a proceeding in rem, or by a libel in personam against the owner of such vessel; Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 68, 24 L. Ed. 373; The Allianca, 56 Fed. 609. A state statute conferring a remedy for such claims by proceedings in rem is void; Brookman v. Hamill, 43 N. Y. 554, 3 Am. Rep. 731. But as to domestic vessels, the lien of the wharfinger is only enforceable as a common-law lien; Russel v. The Asa R. Swift, 1 Newb. 553, Fed. Cas. No. 12,144; Delaware R. S. Co. v. The Thomas, 9 Phila. 364, Fed. Cas. No. 3,769. See The Advance, 60 Fed. 766. In the absence of any agreement between the parties, reasonable wharfage will be allowed; Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 68, 24 L. Ed. 373. A lease giving the lessee "the sole and exclusive right to use the public wharf for his ferry boat," does not authorize the collection of toll for wharfage; Russel v. The Empire State, 1 Newb. 541, Fed. Cas. No. 12,145. A municipal corporation cannot exact a charge upon vessels for entering or leaving a port or remaining therein and using the wharves or landings, for the general revenue of such corporation; Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 577, 22 L. Ed. 417; Keokuk N. L. P. Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80, 24 L. Ed. 377; but it may collect from parties using its wharves, such reasonable fee as will fairly remunerate it for the use of its property; Northwestern U. P. Co. v. St. Louis, 100 U. S. 423, 25 L. Ed. 688; De Bary Baya M. L. v. R. Co., 40 Fed. 392. That such fees are regulated by the tonnage of the vessel will not constitute them a tonnage tax under the constitution, art. 1, paragraph 3, § 10; Johnson v. Drummond, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 419. See Leathers v. Aiken, 9 Fed. 679. A ship compelled by stress of weather to moor to a wharf for safety, is not liable to a charge for wharfage, where the wharf is a private one, and no fixed rate of charge is in use; Heron v. The Marchioness, 42 Fed. 173. Vessels which have made use of a wharf, whether under express or implied contract, cannot refuse payment of wharfage on the ground that the wharfinger is not the legal owner of the property; The Idlewild, 59 Fed. 628.

See full note on the right to wharfage in 70 L. R. A. 193; and on lien for wharfage in id. 353.

WHARFINGER. One who owns or keeps a wharf for the purpose of receiving and shipping merchandise to or from it for hire.

A wharfinger stands in the position of an ordinary bailee for hire, and therefore, like a warehouseman, he is responsible for ordinary neglect, and is required to take ordinary care of the goods intrusted to him as such; Foote v. Storrs, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 328; Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56, 33 Am. Dec. 175; 4 Term 581. He is not an insurer of the safety of his dock, but he must use reasonable care to keep it in safe condition, for vessels which he invites to enter it; Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 236; Sawyer v. Oakman, 7 Blatchf. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 12,402; New Orleans, M.

While he does not guarantee the safety of vessels coming to his wharf, he is bound to exercise reasonable diligence in ascertaining the condition of berths thereat; and a master of a ship is bound to use ordinary care; Smith v. Burnett, 173 U. S. 430, 19 Sup. Ct. 442, 43 L. Ed. 756.

He is not, like an innkeeper or carrier, to be considered an insurer unless he superadd the character of carrier to that of wharfinger; 5 Burr. 2825; Platt v. Hibbard & Webb, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 497; Ducker v. Barnett, 5 Mo. 97. The responsibility of a wharfinger begins when he acquires and ends when he ceases to have the custody of the goods in that capacity.

As to when he begins and ceases to have such custody depends, generally, upon the usages of trade and of the business. When goods are delivered at a wharf, and the wharfinger has agreed, expressly or by implication, to take the custody of them, his responsibility commences; but a mere delivery at the wharf, without such assent, does not make him liable; 3 Camp. 414; Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 56, 33 Am. Dec. 175; 14 M. & W. 28. When goods are in the wharfinger's possession to be sent on board of a vessel for a voyage, as soon as he delivers the possession and the care of them to the proper officers of the vessel, although they are not actually removed, he is, by the usages of trade, deemed exonerated from any further responsibility; 1 M. & W. 174; Gass v. R. Co., 99 Mass. 220, 96 Am. Dec. 742. The wharfinger does not, however, discharge his duty by delivering them to one of the crew, but should deliver them to the captain of the vessel, or some other person in authority on board of it; 1 C. & P. 638.

A wharfinger has a general lien upon all goods in his possession for the balance of his account; 4 B. & Ald. 50; Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 68, 24 L. Ed. 373; and in respect to the right of lien there is no distinction between the wharfinger and the warehouseman; 23 Am. L. R. Eq. 465, 468. A wharfinger has equally a lien on a vessel for wharfage; The Phebe, 1 Ware 354, Fed. Cas. No. 11,065; Johnson v. McDonough, Gilp. 101, Fed. Cas. No. 7,395.

See WHARFAGE.

WHEEL. The punishment of the wheel was formerly to put a criminal on a wheel, and then to break his bones until he expired. This punishment was never used in the United States; and it has been abolished in every civilized country.

WHELPS. The young of certain animals of a base nature or feræ naturæ.

It is a rule that when no larceny can be committed of any creatures of a base nature which are feræ naturæ, though tame and reclaimed, it cannot be committed of the young of such creatures in the nest, kennel, or den; Co. 3d Inst. 109; 1 Russ. Cr. 153.

The owner of the land is, however, considered to have a qualified property in such animals, ratione impotentia; 2 Bla. Com. 394.

WHEN. At which time. At that time. St. Louis v. Withaus, 90 Mo. 646, 3 S. W. 395.

In wills, standing by itself unqualified and unexplained, this is a word of condition denoting the time at which the gift is to commence; 6 Ves. Jr. 243; 10 Co. 50; 16 C. B. 59. The context of a will may show that the word is to be applied to the possession only, not to the vesting of a legacy; 7 Ves. 422; 3 Bro. C. C. 471. See 2 Jar. Wills 417. See DEVISE; TIME.

WHEN AND WHERE. Technical words in pleading, formerly necessary in making full defence to certain actions. See 1 Chit. Pl. *445; DEFENCE.

WHENEVER. Though often used as equivalent to "as soon as," it is also often used where the time intended by it is, and will be, until its arrival, or for some uncertain period at least, indeterminate. Robinson v. Greene, 14 R. I. 188.

WHEREAS. This word implies a recital, and, in general, cannot be used in the direct and positive averment of a fact in a declaration or plea. Those facts which are directly denied by the terms of the general issue, or which may, by the established usage of pleading, be specially traversed, must be averred in positive and direct terms; but facts, however material, which are not directly denied by the terms of the general issue, though liable to be contested under it, and which, according to the usage of pleading, cannot be specially traversed, may be alleged in the declaration by way of recital, under a whereas; 2 Chitty, Pl. 151, 178, 191.

WHEREUPON. Sequence; succession; order of action; relation. A thing done with reference to something previously done. It is interchangeable with the words upon which, and after which. Lee v. Cook, 1 Wyo. 419.

WHIPPING. The infliction of stripes.

This mode of punishment, which is still practised in several states, has yielded in most of the states to the penitentiary system. It is still used in Maryland for wife-beating, and in Delaware for all felonies (but not for women).

Whipping has been held to be punishment worse than death; Herber v. State, 7 Tex. 69; but see State v. Williams, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 418, 45 Am. Dec. 741. It is not a "cruel or unusual punishment"; Foot v. State, 59 Md. 264.

The punishment of whipping, so far as the same was provided by the laws of the United States, was abolished by the act of congress of February 28, 1839, s. 5. See CORRECTION; SEAMEN.

At common law whipping was inflicted on inferior persons for petty larceny, etc.; but by the usage of the star chamber, never on a gentleman. 4 Steph. Com. 379. By 1 Geo. IV. c. 57, it was abolished as to women. By 5 & 6 Vict. striking or firing at the queen is punishable with whipping thrice or fewer times. The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 authorize the whipping of males below 16 who have been convicted of sending letters threatening to kill; placing explosives near a house, ship, etc.; defiling a girl under 13 years of age; robbing with violence (not over twenty-five stripes); but it must be done in private and only once, and the court must specify the number of strokes and the instrument. By 25 Vict. c. 18, for boys under 14, the number of stripes shall not exceed twelve with a birch rod. For the offences of robbery accompanied with personal violence, and of attempting by any means to strangle or to render insensible any one with intent to enable himself or others to commit an indictable offence, in addition to imprisonment, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 96, direct that the offender, if a man, be once, twice, or thrice privately whipped. See Whart. Lex.

Juvenile offenders may in some cases be sentenced to receive 12 strokes with a birch rod. By act of 1912, whipping shall be privately done and the sentence shall specify the number of strokes and the instrument.

It is forbidden by the constitution of South Carolina and Georgia, except that in Georgia convicts can be so punished. So in North Carolina; see State v. Morris (N. C.) 81 S. E. 462. Whipping (but not of females) is a method of punishment in Canada under the Code for an assault on the king, burglary when armed, choking or administering a narcotic when committing an indictable offence, and for carnal knowledge of a girl under 14, or an attempt thereto. It is in most cases to be administered one, two or three times, the number of times and of strokes, and the whip, to be fixed in the sentence; otherwise to be the cat-o'-nine-tails.

It is generally understood that corporal punishment is still in use in the English public schools, although rarely administered; the cane has been substituted for the birch. The same substitution was made in 1910 at Eton for the upper form boys, but the former practice still obtains there for the younger boys.

It is in use in some penal institutions as a means of discipline. See ASSAULT.

WHISKY. Within the pure food act of 1906, it is the product of sound grain distilled at a low temperature so as to retain in the distillate the congeneric properties of the grain which gives to the liquor when matured by aging in charred casks its desirable potable character. Neutral spirits which are distilled at a high temperature may be made from different materials and do not contain such properties, and which are not rendered potable by aging although reduced by water to potable strength, and from which most of the fusel oil has been removed, are not whisky, nor a like substance with whisky; Woolner & Co. v. Rennick, 170 Fed. 662. See FOOD AND DRUG ACTS; LIQUOR LAWS.

WHITE ACRE. See BLACK ACRE.

WHITE-CAPS. A state statute disqualifying for jury service all persons shown to be engaged in a general conspiracy against law and order is not unconstitutional; Jenkins v. State, 99 Tenn. 569, 42 S. W. 263.

WHITE PERSON. As used in the naturalization laws, a person of the Caucasian race. In re Ah Yup, 5 Sawy. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 104. It does not include a Mongolian; id.; it includes a person nearer white than black or red; Jeffries v. Ankeny, 11 Ohio 375; a Mexican, In re Rodriguez, 81 Fed. 337; an Armenian; In re Halladjian, 174 Fed. 834; a Maronite; In re Ellis, 179 Fed. 1002; a Parsee; U. S. v. Balsara, 180 Fed. 694, 103 C. C. A. 660; but not a half-breed Mongolian and white; In re Knight, 171 Fed. 299; or a half-breed Indian and white; In re Camille, 6 Fed. 256. Whether one is a "free white person" cannot be determined on any ground of complexion or race, but, in view of the conditions existing in 1790, when they were first used in the naturalization statute, must be limited to persons of European nativity or descent. As so construed a Syrian is not entitled to naturalization; In re Dow, 213 Fed. 355.

This case contains an elaborate ethnological discussion by Smith, D. J. (district of South Carolina), as do also his opinions in Ex parte Dow, 211 Fed. 486, and Ex parte Shahid, 205 Fed. 812. A Syrian was held entitled to naturalization in Re Ellis, 179 Fed. 1002, and Bessho v. U. S., 178 Fed. 245, 101 C. C. A. 605.

In South Africa it means a person of European descent; [1905] T. S. 621.

See NEGRO.

In the legislation of the slave period it referred to a person without admixture of colored blood, whatever the actual complexion might be; Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 192. The words white and colored as used in the statutes providing for the maintenance of schools are held to be used in the ordinary acceptance; Van Camp v. Board of Education of Logan, 9 Ohio St. 407.

WHITE RENTS. In English Law. Rents paid in silver, and called white rents, or red-ditus albi, to distinguish them from other rents which were not paid in money. Co. 2d Inst. 19. See ALBA FIRMA.

WHITE SLAVE. A term used in the United States Compiled Statutes and in common talk (though not very appropriately) to indicate offences under the federal act of June 25, 1910, prohibiting the "transportation in interstate and foreign commerce for immoral purposes of women and girls." It makes it a criminal offence if any person shall knowingly transport or cause to be transported, or assist in obtaining transportation for, or shall transport in interstate or foreign commerce, "any woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution or debauchery, or for any other immoral purpose," or with the intent and purpose to induce, entice or compel such woman or girl to become a prostitute or engage in any other immoral practice, or in going to any place for the purpose of prostitution or debauchery, etc., or with the intent or purpose to induce, entice or compel her to give herself up to prostitution, etc. The penalty is a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both in the discretion of the court.

It is made a criminal offence if any person shall knowingly persuade, induce, entice or coerce, etc., or aid or assist in persuading, etc., any woman or girl to go to any place in interstate or foreign commerce for prostitution or debauchery, or any other immoral purpose, or with intent and purpose on the part of the person that such woman or girl shall engage in the practice of prostitution and debauchery, and a like penalty is provided.

A special section relates to a like offence in relation to a woman or girl under 18 years of age. This offence is made a felony and is punishable by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The offence is to be tried in any court having jurisdiction of crimes in the district in which it occurred, or from, through or into which any woman or girl has been carried or transported as a passenger in interstate commerce.

A section provides that for the regulation and prevention of like transportation in foreign commerce of alien women and girls under the international agreement for the suppression of the white slave traffic (as adhered to by the United States June 6, 1908), every person keeping in a house of prostitution any alien woman or girl within three years after entering the United States from any country which is a party to the agreement, is required under a penalty to file with the commissioner general of immigration a statement in writing setting forth the name of such woman or girl, etc.

The act is a legal exercise of the power of congress under the commerce clause, and does not abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the states, or interfere with the reserved powers of the states; Hoke v. U. S., 227 U. S. 308, 33 Sup. Ct. 281, 57 L. Ed. 523, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906, Ann. Cas.

1913E, 905; Wilson v. U. S., 232 U. S. 563, 34 Sup. Ct. 347, 58 L. Ed. —; Kalen v. U. S., 196 Fed. 888, 116 C. C. A. 450; Paulsen v. U. S., 199 Fed. 423, 118 C. C. A. 97, where the evidence was held sufficient to sustain a conviction; Bennett v. U. S., 194 Fed. 630, 114 C. C. A. 402; Harris v. U. S., 194 Fed. 634, 114 C. C. A. 406, where the evidence was held sufficient to sustain a conviction; U. S. v. Warner, 188 Fed. 682, where Holt, J., in the southern district of New York, in an earlier case, held the act constitutional.

The act has the quality of a police regulation, though enacted in the exercise of the right to regulate commerce. The transportation need not be by a common carrier. The offence is complete when transportation has been accomplished; there is no locus penitentiae thereafter; Wilson v. U. S., 232 U. S. 563, 34 Sup. Ct. 347, 58 L. Ed. —.

The act includes importation for the purpose of living with the person in concubinage; U. S. v. Bitty, 208 U. S. 393, 28 Sup. Ct. 396, 52 L. Ed. 543; U. S. v. Flaspoller, 205 Fed. 1006. The offence may be committed where the woman transported is the wife of the accused; Cohen v. U. S., 214 Fed. 23.

There was no error in refusing to charge that "debauchery," as used in the act, means sexual intercourse, or that the act does not extend to any vice or immorality other than that applicable to sexual actions; Athanasaw v. U. S., 227 U. S. 326, 33 Sup. Ct. 285, 57 L. Ed. 528, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 911.

See Harris v. U. S., 227 U. S. 340, 33 Sup. Ct. 289, 57 L. Ed. 534.

The opinion in U. S. v. Hoke, 187 Fed. 992, is fully considered and quotes many acts of congress in recent years having the same general purpose as the act in question.

Transporting (interstate) a woman for the purpose of sexual immorality is within the act without regard to her previous character; Suslak v. U. S., 213 Fed. 913.

Pollock, D. J. (district court, Kansas), in a recent case is said to have suggested to the accused to change his plea from guilty to not guilty, intimating that he would direct the jury to acquit, if it did not appear that the girl was taken to another state for the purpose of commercializing her immorality.

WHOLE BLOOD. Being related by both the father and mother's side; this phrase is used in contradistinction to half blood, which is relation only on one side. See BLOOD.

WHOLESALE. To sell by wholesale is to sell by large parcels, generally in original packages, and not by retail.

WHOLESALE PRICE. The price fixed on merchandise by one who buys in large quantities of the producer or manufacturer, and who sells the same to jobbers or to retail dealers therein. Fawcner v. Paper Co., 88 Ia. 169, 55 N. W. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 230.

WIDOW. An unmarried woman whose husband is dead.

In legal writings, widow is an addition given to a woman who is unmarried and whose husband is dead. A widow who has married again cannot be a widow; 20 Q. B. D. 103. A woman surviving a man to whom she has been married, but with regard to whom she had obtained a declaration of nullity of marriage, is not a widow; 52 L. J. Ch. 239. The addition of spinster is given to a woman who never was married. Love-lace, Wills 269. See ADDITION.

See DOWER; QUARANTINE.

WIDOW'S BENCH. The share of her husband's estate which a widow is allowed besides her jointure. Whart. Lex.

WIDOW'S CHAMBER. In London the apparel of a widow and the furniture of her chamber, left by her deceased husband, is so called, and the widow is entitled to it. 2 Bla. Com. 518.

WIDOWER. A man whose wife is dead. A widower has a right to administer to his wife's separate estate, and, as her administrator, to collect debts due to her, generally, at common law, for his own use. The modern married women's acts have practically abrogated this rule. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

WIDOWHOOD. The state of a man whose wife is dead, or of a woman whose husband is dead. In general, there is no law to regulate the time during which a man must remain a widower, or a woman a widow, before they marry a second time. The term widowhood is mostly applied to the state or condition of a widow.

WIFE. A woman united to a man by marriage. See MARRIED WOMAN; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

WIFE'S EQUITY. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

WIFE'S PART. See LEGITIME.

WILD ANIMALS. Animals in a state of nature; animals feræ naturæ. See WHELP; ANIMALS; FERÆ NATURÆ.

WILFULLY. Intentionally.

In charging certain offences, it is required that they should be stated to be wilfully done. Archb. Cr. Pl. 51, 58. In an indictment charging a wilful killing, it means intentionally and not by accident; State v. Schaefer, 116 Mo. 96, 22 S. W. 447. It is distinguished from maliciously in not implying an evil mind; L. R. 2 Cr. Cas. Res. 161. It is synonymous with intentionally, designedly, without lawful excuse, and, therefore, not accidentally. Miller v. State (Okla.) 130 Pac. 813.

It implies that the act is done knowingly and of stubborn purpose, but not with malice; State v. Swaim, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 68; and in penal statutes, it means with evil intent, or with legal malice; Galvin v. Mill Co., 98 Cal. 268, 33 Pac. 93; or with a bad purpose; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 220, quoted in Potter v. U. S., 155 U. S. 446, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 39 L. Ed. 214. It is frequently understood as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse; 1 Bish. Cr. Law 428.

A wilful act is one that is done knowingly and purposely, with the direct object in view of injuring another; Hazle v. So. Pac. Co., 173 Fed. 431.

A "wilful" violation of a factory act is established by proof of any conscious knowing or intentional failure to comply therewith, though there be no wrongful intent; Roberts, J. & R. S. Co. v. Dower, 208 Fed. 270, 125 C. C. A. 470.

In Pennsylvania it has been decided that the word maliciously was an equivalent for the word wilfully, in an indictment for arson; Chapman v. Com., 5 Whart. (Pa.) 427, 34 Am. Dec. 565. See MENS REA.

WILL. The disposition of one's property, to take effect after death. Swinb. Wills pt. 1, § 2; Godolphin pt. 1, c. 1, s. 2.

The term will, as an expression of the final disposition of one's property, is confined to the English laws and those countries which derive their jurisprudence from that source. The term testamentum, or testament, is exclusively used in the Roman civil law and by the continental writers upon that subject. Some controversy seems to exist whether the word testamentum is strictly derived from testatum or from that in combination with mentis. There does not seem to be much point in this controversy, for in either view the result is the same. It is the final declaration of the person in regard to the disposition of his property. It is his testimony upon that subject, and that is the expression of his mind and will in relation to it.

The practice of allowing the owner of property to direct its destination after his death is of very ancient date. Genesis, xlviii. 22; Gal. iii. 15; Plutarch's Life of Solon; Roman Laws of the Twelve Tables. But wills are not like succession, a law of nature. A stage where they are not recognized always, in every society, precedes the time when they are allowed. In their early growth they were not regarded as a method of distributing a dead man's goods, but as a means of transferring the power and authority of a family to a new chief. It is not until the latter portion of the middle ages that they become a mode of diverting property from the family or of distributing it according to the fancy of the owner. Maine, Anc. Law 171-177. Nor is the power to dispose of property by will a constitutional right. It depends almost wholly upon statute; Brettun v. Fox, 100 Mass. 234. See TAX.

"The right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law and not a natural right;" Magoun v. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 42 L. Ed. 1037; U. S. v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 16 Sup. Ct. 1073, 41 L. Ed. 287; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367; Pullen v. Wake County Com'rs, 66 N. C. 361; this statement is combated vigorously and the position maintained that it is a natural right in Nunnebacher v. State, 129 Wis. 190, 108 N. W. 627, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121, 9 Ann. Cas. 711, where a note collects the cases, finding no case agreeing with the one annotated.

The right of disposing of property by will did not exist in early times among the ancient Germans, or with the Spartans under the laws of Lycurgus, or the Athenians before the time of Solon. 4 Kent 502, and note. And in England, until comparatively a recent period, this right was to be exercised under considerable restrictions, even as to personal estate. 2 Bla. Com. 492.

"The will or testament of modern law, with its specific characters of being secret, revocable and posthumous in operation, is unknown to archaic law, and is of comparatively recent introduction wherever we find it." Pollock's Notes on Maine's Ancient Law. The power to devise land did not exist at common law but is governed by statute; Gibson v. Van Syckle, 47 Mich. 439, 11 N. W. 261.

Until the statute of 32 & 34 Henry VIII., called the statute of wills, the wife and children were each entitled to claim of the executor their reasonable portion of the testator's goods, i. e. each one-third part. So that if one had both a wife and children, he could only dispose of one-third of his personal estate, and if he had either a wife or child, but not both, he could dispose of one-half; Fitzh. N. B. 122 H (b), 9th ed.; 2 Saund. 66, n. (9); 2 Bla. Com. 492. All restrictions are now removed from the disposition of property by will, in England, whether real or personal, by the statute of 1 Vict. c. 26; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 731. As to the history of wills in England, see Bigelow, 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 770 (11 Harv. L. Rev. 69). And in the Roman civil law the children were always entitled to their share, or legitime, being one-fourth part of the estate, of which they could not be deprived by the will of their father. The legitime was by the emperor Justinian increased to one-third part of the estate where there were four or a less number of children, and if more than four then they might claim one-half the estate, notwithstanding the will. Novell. 18, c. 1; 2 Domat, Civil Law 15. See LEGITIME.

According to the civil law the naming of an executor was of the essence of a will; and that constituted the essential difference between a will and a codicil; the latter, not making any such appointment (absque executoris constitutione), was, on that account, called an unsolemn last will. Swinb. Wills 29. The executor under a Roman will succeeded to the entire legal position of the deceased. He continued the legal personality of the testator, taking all the property as his own, and becoming liable for all the obligations. Maine, Anc. Law 126.

VALIDITY. The homestead laws in some states affect the validity of wills by making void a husband's devise of homestead land; 3 Jarm. Wills (Rand. & Tal. ed.) 740. See same citation for regulations in various states as to devises to corporations, or for charitable purposes.

A testator, by his will, may make any disposition of his property not inconsistent with the laws or contrary to the policy of the state; Weed v. Knorr, 77 Ga. 636, 1 S. E. 167; Russell v. Russell, 84 Ala. 48, 3 South. 900; In re Bissell's Will, 63 Neb. 588, 88 N. W. 683. A provision for the purchase and erection of a monument on testator's grave is valid; McIlvain v. Hockaday, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 81 S. W. 54; In re Koppikus Estate, 1 Cal. App. 84, 81 Pac. 732.

The right of a decedent to recover damages for his death, does not pass by will; Sturges v. Sturges, 126 Ky. 80, 102 S. W. 884, 12 L. R. A. 1014; Caruthers v. Neal, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 567, 14 S. W. 599.

Provisions annexing to a legacy or devise a condition that it should be forfeited in case the beneficiary contested the will were resorted to very early in England, and were upheld by the courts. The rule established was that where there was probabilis causa litigandi, and no gift over of the legacy or devise, an unsuccessful contest of the validity of the will did not forfeit the legacy or devise; 2 Vern. 90; 3 P. Wms. 344; 2 Atk. 148; but if there was a gift over, the breach of the condition would work a forfeiture; 1 Atk. 526. Later it was held that such conditions were not contrary to the policy of the law; 15 M. & W. 727; and a similar decision was rendered by the Privy Council on an appeal from Quebec; L. R. 6 C. P. 1, where the French and civil law is discussed at large. In this country, such conditions have been sustained, though with some difference of opinion as to what constitutes a breach of its condition and its effect. Their validity has been upheld in several states; Bradford v. Bradford, 19 Ohio St. 546, 2 Am. Rep. 419; In re Friend's Estate, 209 Pa. 442, 58 Atl. 853, 68 L. R. A. 447; In re Barandon's Estate, 41 Misc. 380, 84 N. Y. S. 937; Smithsonian Institution v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 18 Sup. Ct. 396, 42 L. Ed. 793; Fifield v. Van Wyck's Ex'r, 94 Va. 557, 27 S. E. 446, 64 Am. St. Rep. 745; Rouse v. Branch, 91 S. C. 111, 74 S. E. 133, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1160, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1296; Kayhart v. Whitehead, 77 N. J. Eq. 12, 76 Atl. 241, 140 Am. St. Rep. 575; Moran v. Moran, 144 Ia. 451, 123 N. W. 202, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898; In re Miller's Estate, 156 Cal. 119, 103 Pac. 842, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868; Massie v. Massie, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 617, 118 S. W. 219.

In these cases generally there was no gift over, and as to the conflict of decisions on this subject, see 14 Y. L. J. 58. The mere filing of a caveat does not constitute a contest within such provision; In re McCahan's Estate, 221 Pa. 188, 70 Atl. 711. A provision that if any devisee should attempt, or aid in attempting, to prevent the proof of the will, the expense of probating it should be taken from their shares thereunder, is valid; Kayhart v. Whitehead, 78 N. J. Eq. 580, 81 Atl. 1133. Where the net income of a trust fund was given to testator's son for life, with remainder over, a condition that the gift should fail, if the son contested the will, was void; In re Wall, 76 Misc. 106, 136 N. Y. Supp. 452.

In some cases when the legatee had reasonable cause to contest he was held not barred by the provision as to forfeiture; In re Friend's Estate, 209 Pa. 442, 58 Atl. 853, 68 L. R. A. 447; Jackson v. Westerfield, 61 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 399. If bequests are made upon condition that the legatees acquiesce in the provisions of the will, no legatee can, without compliance with the condition, receive his bounty; Smithsonian Institution v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 18 Sup. Ct. 396, 42 L. Ed. 793.

A contract to give property to a person by will is valid; Howe v. Watson, 179 Mass. 30, 60 N. E. 415; Whiton v. Whiton, 179 Ill. 32, 53 N. E. 722; Stellmacher v. Bruder, 89 Minn. 507, 95 N. W. 324, 99 Am. St. Rep. 609; Spencer v. Spencer, 25 R. I. 239, 55 Atl. 637; and such agreement to dispose of property in a particular way by will may be enforced in equity after the decease of the person making the promise against his heirs, devisees or personal representatives; Austin v. Kuehn, 211 Ill. 113, 71 N. E. 841; Johnson v. Mc-

Cue, 34 Pa. 180; Anderson v. Eggers, 61 N. J. Eq. 85, 47 Atl. 727. Such contracts have been sustained, to execute a will containing a legacy compensating the other for services rendered; Banks v. Howard, 117 Ga. 94, 43 S. E. 438; Jones v. Bean, 136 Ill. App. 545; to devise a homestead in consideration of services to the testator and his wife; Brandes v. Brandes, 129 Ia. 351, 105 N. W. 499; to vest the family homestead in the son, after the death of his parents, in consideration of their maintenance; Teske v. Dittberner, 65 Neb. 167, 91 N. W. 181, 101 Am. St. Rep. 614; to leave the property to an adopted son, in consideration of the adoption; Heath v. Heath, 18 Misc. 521, 42 N. Y. Supp. 1087; to devise real estate in consideration of board and attendance; McAllister's Adm'r v. Bronaugh (Ky.) 113 S. W. 821. Such contracts must be based on sufficient consideration; Lewallen's Estate, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 320.

An action for breach of contract to make a will is not maintainable during the proposed testator's life; Warden v. Hinds, 163 Fed. 201, 90 C. C. A. 449, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529; and mutual wills between husband and wife do not raise a contractual relation; Mullen v. Johnson, 157 Ala. 262, 47 South. 584. A contract not to contest a will has been upheld; Grochowski v. Grochowski, 77 Neb. 506, 109 N. W. 742, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 484, and note, 15 Ann. Cas. 300.

Specific performance may be enforced of an agreement to give a legacy where the consideration had been accepted; Bush v. Whitaker, 45 Misc. 74, 91 N. Y. Supp. 616; or where the subject matter was real estate; Emery v. Darling, 50 Ohio St. 160, 33 N. E. 715; or if it is both real and personal; Schutt v. Society, 41 N. J. Eq. 115, 3 Atl. 398, where equity assumed jurisdiction because realty was involved and then settled the whole case; but where personal property alone was involved, and the defendant who had furnished the decedent with maintenance on condition that the property should go to him (it being a sum of money), and he took possession of it, the administrator could not recover; Koslowski v. Newman, 74 Neb. 704, 105 N. W. 295, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704. In commenting on this case, it is suggested that the doctrine that the defendant was the equitable owner with the right to specific performance, is not sustained by authority, as the citations are either dicta or cases involving both realty and personalty; but the case may be supported on the ground of avoiding circuity of action; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 473. Such a contract was not sustained in Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 Pac. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369, where the decision was put upon the ground of hardship to the wife, who had married after the contract was made and in ignorance of it. There is an adequate remedy at law on such a contract; Brady v.

Smith, 8 Misc. 465, 28 N. Y. Supp. 776; Rhodes v. Stone, 63 Hun 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 561; contra, Shakespeare v. Markham, 72 N. Y. 400; the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the death of the testator; Goodloe v. Goodloe, 116 Tenn. 252, 92 S. W. 767, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 703, and note, 8 Ann. Cas. 112.

If a contract to dispose of property by will affects real estate, it must be in writing under the statute of frauds; Goodloe v. Goodloe, 116 Tenn. 252, 92 S. W. 767, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 703, 8 Ann. Cas. 112; Hale v. Hale, 90 Va. 728, 19 S. E. 739. A promise to a testator in extremis by a residuary legatee to pay an intended legacy, is binding on him, but whether it binds the others interested was undecided; Yearance v. Powell, 55 N. J. Eq. 577, 37 Atl. 735.

An agreement to defeat probate by compensating the executor and trustee for what he would have received, is contrary to public policy and void; Cochran v. Zachery, 137 Ia. 585, 115 N. W. 486, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235 and note, 126 Am. St. Rep. 307, 15 Ann. Cas. 297; and so is a contract by an attorney to do it; id. But a contract between next of kin of a decedent to divide the estate is not an agreement to defeat probate of will, and the promise of one who intends in good faith to contest not to do so is a good consideration for a promise of a share in the estate; Blount v. Wheeler, 199 Mass. 330, 85 N. E. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036.

A joint will executed by two brothers revocable at the will of either is valid; Hill v. Harding, 92 Ky. 76, 17 S. W. 199, 437. The joint will of two persons devising to a third person land, parts of which belong to each, may be proved as the separate will of one as to his part, on his death while the other is still living; In re Davis' Will, 120 N. C. 9, 26 S. E. 636, 38 L. R. A. 289, 58 Am. St. Rep. 771. It has been said that no such testamentary paper is known to the common law; Walker v. Walker, 14 Ohio St. 157, 82 Am. Dec. 474; but it is in fact the will of each as to his property and revocable by either party without notice to the other, remaining in such case as the will of the person who does not revoke; 11 Harv. L. Rev. 67. See, as to joint wills, 20 Harv. L. Rev. 315.

In order to make the will of a married woman valid as a disposition of property which she has no power to dispose of without her husband's assent, it is not necessary that his assent should be given during her life; it is sufficient if given after her death; [1901] 1 Ch. Div. 424.

A testator cannot in his will reserve the right to alter or complete it by a subsequent unattested paper; Thayer v. Wellington, 9 Allen (Mass.) 283, 85 Am. Dec. 753; but he may provide that the disposition of property shall be altered by the occurrence of extrinsic events; Robert v. Corning, 89 N. Y. 225; In re Moore, 61 N. J. Eq. 616, 47 Atl. 731; and such event may be in control of the testator; 3 Myl. & Cr. 507.

As in England and this country the primary purpose of a will is the transmission of property after death, it is sometimes said in a general way that an instrument testamentary in form, which contains no disposition of property, is not a will, and should not be admitted to probate; so a letter to an undertaker authorizing the cremation of the writer's body, and saying, "My brother will be sole administrator and take charge of the estate," was held not to appoint an executor, or make a devise, or to be entitled to probate; In re Meade's Estate, 118 Cal. 428, 50 Pac. 541, 62 Am. St. Rep. 244. But where a writing merely made a declaration of the legitimacy of two children and revoked all testamentary dispositions, it was held that the paper should be admitted to probate; In re Williamson's Will, 6 Ohio N. P. 79. The court said that the paper was drafted in Paris by a French lawyer, educated in the civil law, under which the primary object of a will is the appointment of a hæres, and not the devolution of property, which follows the appointment as of course, with universal succession. The court further cited Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 309, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138, where the court adopted Blackstone's definition (2 Com. 499) declaring a will to "be a legal declaration of a man's intention, which he wills to be performed after his death," without any actual mention of devolution of property. In another case, the death of the sole devisee, legatee, and executrix named therein, was held no ground for defeating probate of a will; In re Davis' Will, 182 N. Y. 468, 75 N. E. 530.

Wills are unwritten or nuncupative, and written. See NUNCUPATIVE WILL.

A will may be written in pencil. But it is a strong indication that the will so written was not a final act, but merely a deliberative one. This indication may, however, be overcome by proof; Myers v. Vanderbelt, 84 Pa. 510, 24 Am. Rep. 227; 1 Hagg. 219; 3 Moo. P. C. 223; 23 Beav. 195; and it has been held that the use of a pencil in writing a will, otherwise duly executed, or in making alterations in such will, raises no presumption of want of deliberation and finality, and that its use may be as conclusive as to the intent of the testator as any other; La Rue v. Lee, 63 W. Va. 388, 60 S. E. 388, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968, 129 Am. St. Rep. 978.

A letter in lead pencil, addressed to nobody by name, but clearly intended for those who should have control of the writer's property after her death, and requesting that certain things be given to persons named is a will; its precatory form is immaterial. It is not essential that the full name should be signed (here it was "Harriet"); Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. 220, 18 Atl. 1021, 6 L. R. A. 353, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798.

It was held in Pennsylvania that writing on a slate is insufficient; Reed v. Woodward, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 541; but in a note to the citation of this case a quere is suggested whether a slate and pencil might not be used in an extreme case; Schoul. Wills § 258, note.

There is no set form of a will. A paper in the form of a deed, if testamentary, may be proved as a will; Lincoln v. Felt, 132 Mich. 49, 92 N. W. 780; but it is not a will merely because ineffectual to operate as a deed; Estate of Skerrett, 67 Cal. 585, 8 Pac. 181. In case of ambiguity, parol evidence has been permitted to prove which it is; Robertson v. Dunn, 6 N. C. 133, 5 Am. Dec. 525; L. R. 15 P. D. 156; in other cases it was excluded; Clay v. Layton, 134 Mich. 317, 96 N. W. 458; Noble v. Fickes, 230 Ill. 594, 82 N. E. 950, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1203, 12 Ann. Cas. 282. A letter may serve as a will; Milam v. Stanley, 111 S. W. 296, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 783, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1126; In re Billis' Will, 122 La. 539, 47 South. 884, 129 Am. St. Rep. 355; but an instrument in the form of a statutory deed is not testamentary simply because it is not to take effect before the grantor's death; Garrison v. McLain (Tex.) 112 S. W. 773; where a will referred to certain articles in an uncontested memorandum it was held that probate could not be refused on the ground that it was not the entire will of the testator; In re Reins' Estate, 59 Misc. 126, 112 N. Y. Supp. 203; marginal interlineations in a will will not invalidate it unless they are below the signature; In re Gibson's Will, 128 App. Div. 769, 113 N. Y. Supp. 266.

The jurisdiction of the courts to pass upon the construction of a will is not ousted by a direction in a will that the executors are to define its provisions, and that their decision shall be final and conclusive upon all matters in it; In re Reilly's Estate, 200 Pa. 288, 49 Atl. 939.

As to construction of wills, see LEGACY; DEVISE.

THE TESTATOR'S CAPACITY. He must be of the age of discretion, which, by the common law of England, was fixed at twelve in females, and fourteen in males; Swinburne, pt. 2, § 2, pl. 6; 1 Will. Ex. 13; 1 Jarm. Wills 29. This is now regulated by statute, both in England and most of the states. The period of competency to execute a will, in England, is fixed at twenty-one years, and the same rule is adopted in many of the states, and the disposition is strongly manifested in that direction throughout the states; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 748, note.

"Sound mind and memory," which constitute testamentary capacity, may be properly described as that condition which would render the testator capable of transacting the ordinary business of life; Keithley v. Stafford, 126 Ill. 507, 18 N. E. 740. But it has been held in many cases that the fact of not possessing sufficient mental capacity to enable one to transact the ordinary business of life does not necessarily involve a want of testamentary capacity; Turner's Appeal, 72 Conn. 305, 44 Atl. 310; Crossan v. Crossan, 169 Mo. 631, 70 S. W. 136; Waugh v. Moan, 200 Ill. 298, 65 N. E. 713; Stewart v. Lyons, 54 W. Va. 665, 47 S. E. 442; the ability to transact business is not the sole test; Petefish v. Becker, 176 Ill. 448, 52 N. E. 71; and probably the actual rule is fairly stated that if the testator had capacity to transact ordinary business, he is presumed by law to have testamentary capacity; but incapacity to transact ordinary business is not necessarily incapacity to make a will; Hess v. Killebrew, 209 Ill. 193, 70 N. E. 675; Whitney v. Twombly, 136 Mass. 145; and absolutely sound and perfect mental faculties are not requisite to testamentary capacity; Ring v. Lawless, 190 Ill. 520, 60 N. E. 881; nor the highest degree of mental soundness; Whitney v. Twombly, 136 Mass. 145; Hamon v. Hamon, 180 Mo. 685, 79 S. W. 422. There is required only soundness of mind with respect to the particular matters under consideration; Delaney v. City of Salina, 34 Kan. 532, 9 Pac. 271. One who has capacity to make a contract is competent to make a will; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448, 15 N. W. 545; but one may be capable of making a will, and yet incapable of making a contract, or managing his estate; Crowson v. Crowson, 172 Mo. 691, 72 S. W. 1065.

Though a will be dictated by testator when entirely competent, it is none the less invalid if executed by him at a time when he was not of sound and disposing mind; In re Hoover's Will, 19 D. C. 495.

Aliens. By the common law in England, an alien could not devise or take by devise, real estate; and an alien enemy could not devise personalty until 33 Vict. c. 14, § 2. This rule is now, in the United States, much altered by statute; 1 Redf. Wills 8-14; 3 Jarm. Wills (Rand. & Talc. ed.) 743, note. Indians, in the absence of statute on the subject, are governed by the same law as resident aliens; p. 745 of last citation. See same citation as to convicts, for whom the regulations are mostly statutory. Coverture was a disability in the execution of a will, unless by the consent of the husband; 2 Bla. Com. 498; 4 Kent 505. But a married woman could not, even with her husband's consent, devise land, because she would thereby exclude her heir; otherwise with chattels; Osgood v. Breed, 12 Mass. 525; Reed v. Blaisdell, 16 N. H. 194, 41 Am. Dec. 722; West v. West, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 445; Van Winkle v. Schoonmaker, 15 N. J. Eq. 384. The disability as to coverture has been largely changed by statute; 1 Redf. Wills 22-29. Blindness is so far an incapacity that it requires express and satisfactory proof that the testator understood the contents of the will, in addition to what is required in other cases; 1 Rob. Eccl. 278; Ray v. Hill, 3 Strobb. (S. C.) 297, 49 Am. Dec. 647. Deaf and dumb persons will labor under a similar inconvenience, and especially in communicating with the witnesses, unless they have been educated so as to be able to write; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 13. But the witnesses must, to be present with the testator, be within the possible cognizance of his remaining senses; Richardson, J., in Reynolds v. Reynolds, 1 Spears (S. C.) 256, 40 Am. Dec. 599. Persons deaf, dumb, and blind were formerly esteemed wholly incapable of making a will; but that class of persons are now placed upon the same basis as the two former, with only the additional embarrassment attending the defect of another sense; 1 Will. Ex. 17, 18; 1 Redf. Wills 53. A speechless paralytic, who retained his interest in and knowledge of the details of his business, and whose mind was unimpaired up to the time of his death, was held capable of making a will where his wishes as to the disposition of his property were communicated by negative and affirmative replies to questions asked him, and, after it had been written, it was read to him item by item, and his assent given by nods of his head; Rothrock v. Rothrock, 22 Or. 551, 30 Pac. 453.

Idiots are wholly incapable of executing a will, whether the defect of the understanding is congenital or accidental; but imbecility of mind alone is not incapacity, unless it amounts to a total deprivation of understanding; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 50 Am. Dec. 329. Lunatics are incapable of executing a last will and testament, except during such a lucid interval as allows the exercise of memory and judgment. It must be an absolute, but not necessarily a perfect, restoration, to reason and reflection, and not a mere temporary remission; 3 Bro. C. C. 441; 3 Add. Eccl. 79; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 255; Lee v. Scudder, 31 N. J. Eq. 633; Brown v. Rigin, 94 Ill. 560; Stewart's Ex'r v. Lisenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255; 1 Redfield, Wills 107, 120. But mere weakness of understanding is not sufficient to invalidate a will, if the testator is capable of comprehending the object in view; Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 292. Nor as a matter of law is a testator of unsound mind, if he mistakenly believed that his relatives had mistreated him, and therefore made no provision for them in his will; Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 406, 29 Pac. 1101.

Moral debasement is not of itself necessarily insanity amounting to testamentary incapacity; Mayo v. Jones, 78 N. C. 402; nor is mere moral insanity unless accompanied by insane delusions; Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120; the legal test with respect to such capacity is not disorder of the feelings and propensities, but of the intellect, which is delusion; In re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274; and the essence of an insane delusion is that it has no basis in reason and therefore cannot be dispelled by it; In re Tracy, 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 103; but mere prejudice, however unreasonable, or a mistake of fact, however absurd, is not an insane delusion; 2 Läck. Leg. N. 43; nor is a mistaken belief respecting a person's character; In re Lang's Will, 9 Misc. 521, 30 N. Y. Supp. 388.

Delusions are only to be considered so far as they concern the person to whom they relate; Ballantine v. Proudfoot, 62 Wis. 216, 22 N. W. 392; Potter v. Jones, 20 Or. 239, 25 Pac. 769, 12 L. R. A. 161. See In re White, 121 N. Y. 406, 24 N. E. 935; unless they are insane delusions; Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 376, 36 Am. Rep. 422. Belief in Spiritualism does not constitute incapacity to make a will; Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 376, 36 Am. Rep. 422; In re Spencer, 96 Cal. 448, 31 Pac. 453; McClary v. Stull, 44 Neb. 175, 62 N. W. 501; In re Halbert's Will, 15 Misc. 308, 37 N. Y. Supp. 757; Whipple v. Eddy, 161 Ill. 114, 43 N. E. 789; especially if the views held thereon had nothing to do with making the will; id.; nor does a belief in witchcraft; Addington v. Wilson, 5 Ind. 137, 61 Am. Dec. 81; Lee's Heirs v. Lee's Ex'r, 4 McC. (S. C.) 183, 17 Am. Dec. 722; nor moral insanity; In re Jones, 5 Misc. 199, 25 N. Y. Supp. 109; nor partial unsoundness; L. R. 5 Q. B. 549; Reynolds v. Root, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 250; nor advanced age, nor enfeebled condition; Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 269; nor failure of memory alone; unless it be total or extend to the members of his family or property; 4 Kent 510; if the testator comprehends the nature and extent of his property and the nature of the claims of those he is excluding, he is competent; L. R. 5 Q. B. 549; Meeker v. Meeker, 75 Ill. 260; L. R. 3 P. & D. 64; Converse's Ex'r v. Converse, 21 Vt. 168, 52 Am. Dec. 58; Martin v. Thayer, 37 W. Va. 38, 16 S. E. 489; Tucker v. Sandidge, 85 Va. 546, 8 S. E. 650; Howell v. Taylor, 50 N. J. Eq. 428, 26 Atl. 566; Prentiss v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567, 50 N. W. 637; In re Estate of Douglass, 162 Pa. 567, 29 Atl. 715; Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 406, 29 Pac. 1101; Ledwith v. Claffey, 18 App. Div. 115, 45 N. Y. Supp. 612; Berry v. Trust Co., 96 Md. 45, 53 Atl. 720; Todd v. Fenton, 66 Ind. 25; Martin v. Bowdern, 158 Mo. 379, 59 S. W. 227; Mullen v. Johnson, 157 Ala. 262, 47 South. 584.

The use of narcotics by a testatrix, with a cancerous disease, raises a presumption of absence of testamentary capacity; Mullen v. Johnson, 157 Ala. 262, 47 South. 584.

Moral-medical insanity, manifested in jealousy, anger and hate, however violent or unintentional, will not defeat a will unless an emanation of a delusion; Taylor v. McClinck, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405.

A finding that a testator was insane at any time prior to the making of the will does not support a presumption that the insanity continued to the making of the will, unless it is also found that the insanity is habitual and fixed; Johnson v. Armstrong, 97 Ala. 731, 12 South. 72; Manley's Ex'r v. Staples, 65 Vt. 370, 26 Atl. 630. When it appears that the will is the direct offspring of monomania it should be held invalid, notwithstanding the general soundness of the testator; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 50 Am. Dec. 329; Townshend v. Townshend, 7 Gill (Md.) 10; Boyd v. Eby, 8 Watts (Pa.) 70. See, also, 6 Moore, P. C. 341, 349; 12 Jurist 947, where Lord Brougham contends for the extreme notion that every person laboring under any form of partial insanity or monomania is incompetent to execute a valid will, because the mind being one and entire, if unsound in any part it is an unsound mind. This extreme view will scarcely gain final acceptance in the courts; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 18, contra.

Delirium from disease or stimulus. This, while the paroxysm continues to such an extent as to deprive a person of the right exercise of reason, is a sufficient impediment to the execution of a will; Tayl. Med. Jur. 626; 18 Ves. Ch. 12; 1 Ves. Sen. 19. See, also, Barrett v. Buxton, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 167, 16 Am. Dec. 691. But there is not the same presumption of the continuance of this species of mental perversion, whether it proceed from the intoxication of stimulus or the delirium of fever, as in ordinary insanity; Black v. Ellis, 3 Hill (S. C.) 68; Hix v. Whittemore, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 545. See DELIRIUM FEBRILE; DELIRIUM TREMENS; DRUNKENNESS; DEMENTIA; IDIOT.

Fraud. If a person is induced by fraud or undue influence to make a will or legacy, such will or legacy is void; 4 Ves. 802; 6 H. L. Cas. 2; Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. Y. 559; Griffith v. Diffenderffer, 50 Md. 466, 480; 1 Redf. Wills 507-537. See UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The nature and character of the will are generally irrelevant; Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; though unreasonable or unnatural provisions are evidence of mental defect; Caldwell v. Anderson, 104 Pa. 199; Lamb v. Lamb, 105 Ind. 456, 5 N. E. 171; In re Budlong, 126 N. Y. 423, 27 N. E. 945.

When a testator has the legal capacity to make a will he has the legal right to make an unequal, unjust, or unreasonable will; Couch v. Eastham, 29 W. Va. 784, 3 S. E. 23; Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 4 South. 225. The fact that a will is unreasonable is not enough to render it invalid; In re Spencer, 96 Cal. 448, 31 Pac. 453; but it tends to prove invalidity; Appeal of Crandall, 63 Conn. 365, 28 Atl. 531, 38 Am. St. Rep. 375.

The burden of proof on the issue of testamentary capacity is upon those who contest the will; Leach v. Burr, 188 U. S. 510, 23 Sup. Ct. 393, 47 L. Ed. 567; In re Motz's Estate, 136 Cal. 558, 69 Pac. 294; Entwistle v. Meikle, 180 Ill. 9, 54 N. E. 217; Smith v. Day, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 245, 45 Atl. 396; In re Burns' Will, 121 N. C. 336, 28 S. E. 519; a person of full age is presumed to be capable of making a will; Steele v. Helm, 2 Marv. (Del.) 237, 43 Atl. 153; Hull v. Hull, 117 Ia. 738, 89 N. W. 979; but where unsoundness of mind is established, the burden of proving a sufficient disposing memory, when the will was executed, is on the defendant; Kenworthy v. Williams, 5 Ind. 375; when permanent unsoundness of mind has been established by the plaintiffs, it is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown, but the presumption is overcome when the evidence of defendants leaves the question evenly balanced; Roller v. Kling, 150 Ind. 159, 49 N. E. 948. The effect of the presumption in favor of sanity is merely to shift the duty of going forward with the evidence to the contestants and not to change the burden of establishing the will. See 13 Harv. L. Rev. 510. Where insanity is in issue, the burden is on the proponent to show testamentary capacity; but the presumption of sanity obtains until it is overcome by the contestant's evidence; Hopkins v. Wampler, 108 Va. 705, 62 S. E. 926; Dobie v. Armstrong, 160 N. Y. 584, 55 N. E. 302.

See also, as to the burden of proof, 36 Cent. L. J. 408; Prentiss v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, 53 N. W. 153, 17 L. R. A. 494; Graybeal v. Gardner, 146 Ill. 337, 34 N. E. 528; Norton v. Paxton, 110 Mo. 456, 19 S. W. 807; Eastis v. Montgomery, 95 Ala. 486, 11 South. 204, 36 Am. St. Rep. 227.

THE MODE OF EXECUTION depends upon the statutory requirements; 3 Jarm. Wills (Rand. & Talc. ed.) 763.

By the uniform act relating to foreign wills, a will admitted to probate in the testator's domicile may be admitted to probate in the state passing the act by filing a duly exemplified copy thereof. It has been enacted in Colorado, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Rhode Island, Washington, Wisconsin and Alaska.

Under the English statute of frauds, 29 Car. II., as "signing" only was required, it was held that a mark was sufficient; 8 Ad. & E. 94; Chaffee v. Missionary Convention, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 85, 40 Am. Dec. 225. And under the statute of 1 Vict. c. 26, the same form of execution is required so far as signing is concerned. But sealing seems not to be sufficient where signing is required; 1 Wils. 313; 1 Jarm. Wills 69, 70. So, it was immaterial in what part of the will the testator signed. It was sufficient if the instrument began, I, A B, etc., and was in the handwriting of the testator, and he treated that as signing or did not regard the instrument as incomplete, as it evidently would be so long as he intended to do some further act to authenticate it; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 403, pl. 9; Prec. in Chanc. 184; Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256. But, if it appear from the form of attestation at the close, or in any other way, that the testator did not regard the instrument as complete, the introduction of the testator's name at the beginning, in his own handwriting, is not a sufficient signing; Dougl. 241; Waller v. Waller, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 454, 42 Am. Dec. 564; Ramsey v. Ramsey's Ex'r, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 664, 70 Am. Dec. 438; Chaffee v. Missionary Convention, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) §5, 40 Am. Dec. 225. See 7 Q. B. 450.

Inability to write does not create a presumption that a testator did not know the contents of the paper declared to be by him his last will and duly executed as such. There is a presumption that the testator does know the contents of a will properly executed, which, while not conclusive, must prevail in the absence of proof of fraud, undue influence, or want of testamentary capacity, even where the testator's inability to read is proved; Lipphard v. Humphrey, 209 U. S. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. 561, 52 L. Ed. 783, 14 Ann. Cas. 872.

The testator should sign before the witnesses subscribe; L. R. 2 P. & D. 97; Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; but if the testator acknowledge his signature, so that the witnesses can see it at the time, it is enough; 7 P. D. 102.

A will may be signed by another, if done in the testator's presence and at his request, when he cannot write; Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 7, 42 Am. Rep. 565; or is physically incapacitated; Smythe v. Irick, 46 S. C. 299, 24 S. E. 69, 32 L. R. A. 77, 57 Am. St. Rep. 634; but see McFarland v. Bush, 94 Tenn. 538, 29 S. W. 899, 27 L. R. A. 662, 45 Am. St. Rep. 760.

In England and in some states there is a statutory requirement that the signature shall be at the end of the will. In England it was held to mean the end of the sequence of meaning; 3 Sw. & Tr. 427; but in New York, literally, the physical end of the writing; In re O'Neil's Will, 91 N. Y. 516; In re Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, 26 N. E. 1028, 11 L. R. A. 796; and the statute was not complied with if any disposing part of the will followed the name signed; In re Andrews' Will, 162 N. Y. 1, 56 N. E. 529, 48 L. R. A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294; where the attestation and signature were at the top of the second page so that the two first paragraphs made a complete will, it was held not subscribed at the end when the third paragraph contained further material and a complete disposition of property in no way connected with the first or second page; and where the name was not signed in a blank left for it, but in one contained in the printed attestation clause; Sears v. Sears, 77 Ohio St. 104, 82 N. E. 1067, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353, and note, 11 Ann. Cas. 1008; but it was held sufficient when it followed the attestation clause; In re Morrow's Estate, 204 Pa. 479, 54 Atl. 313; see 21 Harv. L. Rev. 452. In a later Pennsylvania case, it was held that the validity of the signature with respect to its position depends on the continuity of sense and not the mere position on the page; In re Swire's Estate, 225 Pa. 188, 73 Atl. 1110, where the signature was at the bottom of the page after paragraph eight with three other paragraphs written on the margin; but where there was written on the margin a disposing clause separate and not marked to show where it came in, the signature at the bottom of the last page of what was written across was not "at the bottom". In Irwin v. Jacques, 71 Ohio St. 395, 73 N. E. 683, 69 L. R. A. 422, it was said that the only question is whether it has been executed in substantial compliance with the statutory requirements; and where a marginal interlineation was immaterial, the will was admitted to probate; In re Gibson's Will, 128 App. Div. 769, 113 N. Y. Supp. 266. Where there was a blank space between the last clause and the in testimonium clause (in a printed blank) it did not invalidate the will, as the signature, being in the place intended, was held to be at the end; Mader v. Apple, 80 Ohio St. 691, 89 N. E. 37, 131 Am. St. Rep. 719, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515, and note, with cases. But where there was a long blank above the signature where unauthorized insertions could have been made, and a material part of the will was written after the signature in lieu of in the blank where it belonged, it was held not properly executed; In re O'Neil's Will, 91 N. Y. 516; In re Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, 26 N. E. 1028, 11 L. R. A. 796; where the whole of the disposing portion of a will was written on the first side of a sheet of foolscap, the second and third sides being blank, while the attestation clause, with the signatures of the testator and the witnesses, was on the fourth side, the will was held to be duly executed; [1892] Prob. 377.

Written matter, following the signature to a will, will not invalidate it, if such matter be not testamentary in character; In re Beaumont's Estate, 216 Pa. 350, 65 Atl. 799, 9 Ann. Cas. 42.

It was held not necessary under the statute of frauds that the witnesses should subscribe in the presence of each other. They might attest the execution at different times; 1 Ves. Ch. 12; 1 Will. Ex. 79.

The term "presence" in a statute requiring the subscription of witnesses to a will, to be made in the presence of a testator, means "conscious presence"; Tucker v. Sandidge, 85 Va. 546, 8 S. E. 650.

A will invalid in New York for lack of subscribing witnesses is valid in Pennsylvania if the testator subsequently changed his domicile to Pennsylvania; In re Beaumont's Estate, 216 Pa. 350, 65 Atl. 799, 9 Ann. Cas. 42.

The presence of the witness may be actual or constructive; 1 Brown C. C. 98; and the effort of the courts is to support the will as against a technicality; 1 Dougl. 243. Attestation in another room out of the rays of testator's vision is not in his presence; Calkins v. Calkins, 216 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 182, 108 Am. St. Rep. 233, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393, and note; but where it was in another room, but might have been seen, it was sufficient; Raymond v. Wagner, 178 Mass. 315, 59 N. E. 811; Baldwin v. Baldwin's Ex'r, 81 Va. 405, 59 Am. Rep. 669; but the rule is not complied with when the signing is done elsewhere and subsequently acknowledged in his presence; Mendell v. Dunbar, 169 Mass. 74, 47 N. E. 402, 61 Am. St. Rep. 277; In re Downie's Will, 42 Wis. 66; when in the same room out of the testator's sight, it was not sufficient; Beall v. Drane, 25 Ga. 441; or in an adjoining room, out of his sight; Mandeville v. Parker, 31 N. J. Eq. 242.

The witness may have had no other previous acquaintance with testator; Barbour v. Moore, 10 App. D. C. 30; In re Lee's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 396; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; dictum, contra, Brinckerhoof v. Remsen, 8 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 488; except the latter's statement that he was such person and signed and acknowledged the will as such; Harris v. Martin, 150 N. C. 367, 64 S. E. 126, 17 Ann. Cas. 685, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531, and note. The identity may be otherwise established; Mowry v. Silber, 2 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 133.

Testimony of a subscribing witness that testator was not in condition to make a will, does not impair the effect of his attestation, and a will may be established in opposition to the testimony of the subscribing witnesses; In re Shapter's Will, 35 Colo. 578, 85 Pac. 688, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 117 Am. St. Rep. 216; such testimony is generally received with great caution; In re Robinson's Will, 190 Ill. 95, 60 N. E. 194; Lamberts v. Cooper, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 61; Hoerth v. Zable, 92 Ky. 203, 17 S. W. 360; In re Nelson's Estate, 132 Cal. 182, 64 Pac. 294; Gwin v. Gwin, 5 Idaho 271, 48 Pac. 295; on the ground that their act and their subsequent testimony are inconsistent; Southworth v. Southworth, 173 Mo. 59, 73 S. W. 129; McMeekin v. McMeekin, 2 Bush (Ky.) 79.

The attestation clause is not necessary to make a will valid; Mead v. Presbyterian Church, 229 Ill. 526, 82 N. E. 371, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 11 Ann. Cas. 426.

Where three witnesses were required, and two signed and a notarial acknowledgment signed by the notary was surplusage, the notary's signature was held equivalent to a third witness; Keely v. Moore, 196 U. S. 38, 25 Sup. Ct. 169, 49 L. Ed. 376.

Where a statute provided that the will must be attested by credible witnesses, it was held that the executors were not such, but that they might be compelled to testify and barred from acting as executors; Jones v. Grieser, 238 Ill. 183, 87 N. E. 295, 15 Ann. Cas. 787; contra, Stewart v. Harriman, 56 N. H. 25, 22 Am. Rep. 408; and this is said to be in accordance with the weight of authority that an executor is not beneficially interested and is therefore competent; 22 Harv. L. Rev. 616.

Where a statute declared void devises and legacies to subscribing witnesses, the devise was valid and the witnesses were competent where a will leaving all of testator's property to a charitable corporation was witnessed by two members of the corporation; Will v.

Sisters of St. Benedict, 67 Minn. 335, 69 N. W. 1090; Quinn v. Shields, 62 Ia. 129, 17 N. W. 437, 49 Am. Rep. 141.

The competency of witnesses and the validity of devises to witnesses, or to the husband or wife of a witness, are questions usually controlled by statute; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 775.

A holographic will is one wholly written, dated and signed by the hand of the testator himself; In re Lakemeyer's Estate, 135 Cal. 28, 66 Pac. 961, 87 Am. St. Rep. 96; In re Plumel's Estate, 151 Cal. 77, 90 Pac. 192, 121 Am. St. Rep. 100; it need not be in any particular form; In re Noyes' Estate, 40 Mont. 190, 105 Pac. 1017, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1145, 20 Ann. Cas. 366; but the words "my will" in another handwriting as a caption do not invalidate it; Baker v. Brown, 83 Miss. 793, 36 South. 539, 1 Ann. Cas. 371; Stead v. Curtis, 191 Fed. 529, 112 C. C. A. 463. The statutes in the different states differ to some extent, but agree substantially with the English statute of Charles II.

Holographic wills in general require no attestation; 3 Jarm. Wills (Rand. & Talc. ed.) 767; but, if required, it is sufficient if the testator acknowledge his signature to two witnesses; Stewart v. Stewart, 56 N. J. Eq. 761, 40 Atl. 438; Matter of Akers, 74 App. Div. 461, 77 N. Y. Supp. 643, order affirmed 173 N. Y. 620, 66 N. E. 1103. Such will is not invalidated by bearing an attestation clause without witnesses; Ainsworth v. Briggs, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 108 S. W. 753; and the absence of an attestation clause is not fatal; In re Palmer's Will, 42 Misc. 469, 87 N. Y. Supp. 249; nor that the amount of the legacy is in figures; Succession of Vanhille, 49 La. Ann. 107, 21 South. 191, 62 Am. St. Rep. 642. The writing of the name of testator at the commencement of a paper is not sufficient signing; Roy v. Roy's Ex'r, 16 Grat. (Va.) 418, 84 Am. Dec. 696; but the writing of his name in a clause in the will is sufficient; In re Camp's Estate, 134 Cal. 233, 66 Pac. 227. The fact that it is holographic does not dispense with the acknowledgment of his signature by the testator and his declaration that it is his will; In re Turell, 166 N. Y. 330, 59 N. E. 910; Matter of Moore, 109 App. Div. 762, order affirmed 187 N. Y. 573, 80 N. E. 1114; but probate will be refused where both of the subscribing witnesses swear positively that there was no publication and that they did not know that it was a will until long after they signed it; In re Wilmerding, 75 Misc. 432, 135 N. Y. Supp. 516.

A memorandum written on the front page of a book, dated eight years before the death of testator and signed by testator, reading "everything is Lou's," is insufficient; Smith v. Smith, 112 Va. 205, 70 S. E. 491, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018. A letter written six months before death has been approved as a valid holographic will; Buffington v. Thomas, 84

Miss. 157, 36 South. 1039, 105 Am. St. Rep. 423, where it was held that the insertion of a request to "answer at once" or "this is private" raised no presumption of a design of the writer to alter the nature of the instrument. A letter was also held good as a will; Alston v. Davis, 118 N. C. 202, 24 S. E. 15; and also in Dougherty v. Holschelder, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 31, 88 S. W. 1113, where it was wholly written by the testator and the attestation of subscribing witnesses was held unnecessary.

A holographic will of an illiterate testator was sustained and the words at the beginning, "I am going on a journey and may not ever return, and if I do not, this is my last request," were held not conditional; Eaton v. Brown, 193 U. S. 411, 24 Sup. Ct. 487, 48 L. Ed. 730, where English cases contra are reviewed.

Where such will was found in a locked safe in which testator kept valuable papers, it meets the requirements of a statute that a holographic will must have been found among valuable papers of decedent, although there was no other paper in that particular drawer of the safe; Harper v. Harper, 148 N. C. 453, 62 S. E. 553.

An unofficial will, in the civil law, testamentum inofficium, was one made in disregard of natural obligations as to inheritance; Stein v. Wilzinski, 4 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 450; and was set aside if it disinherited children without assigning any cause, though this was prevented by any legacy however small; 2 Bla. Com. 502; Hadley, Rom. L. 317. It has no place in the common law; 1 Fost. & F. 578. An unnatural division of his property is not sufficient, but where there is evidence of an insane delusion in respect to a certain person or thing, and the disposition of the property is in accordance therewith and indicates the effect of such delusion, such disposition may be considered in connection with the evidence tending to prove an insane delusion; Morgan v. Morgan, 30 App. D. C. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 1037. To the same effect, Donnan v. Donnan, 236 Ill. 341, 86 N. E. 279.

A non-intervention will is one, known in some jurisdictions, authorizing the executor to act without bond and to manage, control, and settle the estate without the intervention of any court whatsoever; In re MacDonald's Estate, 29 Wash. 422, 428, 69 Pac. 1111.

A mystic will is a form of testament made under Spanish law which prevailed in Louisiana and California. It is recognized in the Louisiana Civil Code; see Broutin v. Vasant, 5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 182; Schoul, Wills § 9. It is in writing and signed by the testator, with seven witnesses. It takes its name from the liberty given the testator, if he wishes to conceal the disposition of his property, to enclose it in an envelope and write his name thereon, and the witnesses did the same, with a declaration that it was his last will and testament; Adams v. Norris, 23 How. (U. S.) 353, 16 L. Ed. 539. See TESTAMENT.

PUBLICATION. The best-considered cases, under statutes similar to that of Charles II., only require the production of the instrument by the testator for the purpose of being attested by the witnesses, if it bear his signature; Oshorn v. Cook, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 532, 59 Am. Dec. 155; 1 Burr. 421; 3 Curt. Eccl. 181; Webb v. Fleming, 30 Ga. 808, 76 Am. Dec. 675; Allison v. Allison, 46 Ill. 61, 92 Am. Dec. 237; Cilley v. Cilley, 34 Me. 162; Will of Meurer, 44 Wis. 392, 28 Am. Rep. 591; Robbins v. Robbins, 50 N. J. Eq. 742, 26 Atl. 673. Where a will or codicil refers to an existing unattested will or other paper, it thereby becomes a part of the will; 1 Ad. & E. 423; 1 Will. Ex. 86; 1 Rob. Eccl. 81; but a document referred to in a will, which is not in existence at the time of its execution, does not constitute a part of the will, and is not entitled to probate as such; Estate of Shillaber, 74 Cal. 144, 15 Pac. 453, 5 Am. St. Rep. 433.

Witnesses may attest by a mark; 4 Kent 514, n.; Davis v. Semmes, 51 Ark. 48, 9 S. W. 434.

REVOCATION. The mode of revocation of a will provided in the statute of frauds is by "burning, cancelling, tearing, or obliterating the same." See Graham v. Burch, 47 Minn. 171, 49 N. W. 697, 28 Am. St. Rep. 339. In the English statute of wills, the terms used are "burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying."

Revocation by destroying must be with intent; "all the destroying in the world without intention will not revoke a will, nor all the intention in the world without destroying; there must be the two;" L. R. 2. P. D. 251. Where a will was executed in duplicate and testator destroyed the copy in his possession, evidence of his oral declarations is admissible to prove that the act was not animo revocandi; Managle v. Parker, 75 N. H. 139 (where many authorities are collected), 71 Atl. 637, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 180, and note, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 269; but the intention to revoke is presumed; Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 4 South. 225.

It was held to be a revocation where the seal and signature at the end of the will were torn off or effaced; 1 Add. Eccl. 78; In re White's Will, 25 N. J. Eq. 501; where lines were drawn over the name of the testator; In re Philp's Will, 64 Hun 635, 19 N. Y. Supp. 13; where the instrument was cut out from its marginal frame, but not otherwise defaced, except that the attestation clause was cut through; 1 Phil. Eccl. L. 375, 406; where a memorandum (in pencil) was written on the will; Billington v. Jones, 108 Tenn. 234, 66 S. W. 1127, 56 L. R. A. 654, 91 Am. St. Rep. 751; where a letter was duly signed and attested requesting a third person to destroy the will; 2 P. & D. 406; where the words "null and void" with testator's name were written on the face of each paragraph; In re Barnes' Will, 76 Misc. 382, 136 N. Y. Supp. 940; where a revocation was written on the back of a page including material parts; Warner v. Warner's Estate, 37 Vt. 356; but a signed and witnessed statement that it was revoked, indorsed on a will, is not a revocation under the New York statute, which specifies burning, tearing, cancelling, obliterating or destroying; In re Miller's Estate, 50 Misc. 70, 100 N. Y. Supp. 344; nor is a revocation in the margin sufficient; Lewis v. Lewis, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 455, even if touching an immaterial part of the will; In re Aker's Will, 74 App. Div. 461, 77 N. Y. Supp. 643; Oetjen v. Oetjen, 115 Ga. 1004, 42 S. E. 387; it must cancel some material part; Howard v. Hunter, 115 Ga. 357, 41 S. E. 638, 90 Am. St. Rep. 121. The New York decision is said to be the soundest construction of such statutes; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 76.

Where a will was destroyed under the mistaken supposition that another had been made, a copy was admitted to probate with the consent of the next of kin, all being sui juris; 25 L. R. 41; see comments on this and other cases of mistake; 22 Harv. L. Rev. 374.

To effect revocation actual destruction is not essential, as where the instrument was thrown on the fire with the intention of destroying it, and snatched off partly burned without testator's knowledge; 2 W. Bl. 1043. But it would seem that it must be an actual burning or tearing to some extent,—an intention merely to do the acts not coming within the statute; 6 Ad. & E. 209; 2 Nev. & P. 615. See Graham v. Burch, 47 Minn. 171, 49 N. W. 697, 28 Am. St. Rep. 339. But, aside from the statute, a mere intention to revoke evidenced by any other act, will be effectual to revoke: as, burning or tearing, etc.; 8 Ad. & E. 1. How much the will must be burned or torn to constitute a revocation under the statute of frauds was left by the remarks of the different judges in Doe v. Harris, 6 Ad. & E. 209, in perplexing uncertainty; 1 Williams, Ex. 121.

It was held no revocation where the purpose was arrested before completion, though the will was somewhat torn; 3 B. & Ald. 489; nor tearing a will and writing upon it "superseded by the written one," where the written one is ineffectual, because not properly executed, and it was clear that the revocation proceeded upon the assumption that the written one was valid; Appeal of Strong, 79 Conn. 123, 63 Atl. 1089, 118 Am. St. Rep. 138, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1107, and note upon the effect of the cancellation or mutilation of a will as affected by the invalidity of a second will, the conclusion reached being that such cancellation or mutilation, if under a mistake of fact, does not work a revocation.

What is termed the doctrine of dependent relative revocation is that the cancellation, by the testator, under a mistake of law that he has executed another valid will, which is not effective to pass his property, does not work a revocation. Under this doctrine a will was not revoked by being torn in pieces; 2 Vernon 742; or by cutting off the signature and seal; 14 East 423; or where the will had been destroyed; Wilbourn v. Shell, 59 Miss. 205, 42 Am. Rep. 363; 78 L. T. N. S. 25; 82 id. 203; or where partial obliterations or cancellations were made with the intent not carried out of substituting other words; In re Knapen's Will, 75 Vt. 146, 53 Atl. 1003, 98 Am. St. Rep. 808.

In some cases where the court is unable to determine that the testator would not have destroyed the will if he had known that the other one would never have gone into effect, it declines to apply the doctrine as stated; Townshend v. Howard, 86 Me. 285, 29 Atl. 1077; Banks v. Banks, 65 Mo. 432; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 279, 10 Am. Dec. 601.

An existing will is not revoked by a later one which the testator afterwards purposely destroys; Bates v. Hacking, 28 R. I. 523, 68 Atl. 622, 125 Am. St. Rep. 759, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937, with note. That case was based on the statute providing that all wills should continue in force unless destroyed or altered by other will, or codicil, or other writing. And the same decision under a like statute is in Stetson v. Stetson, 200 Ill. 601, 66 N. E. 262, 61 L. R. A. 258. But in a leading case it was said that there is an irreconcilable conflict of authority upon the question of the effect of a second or subsequent will upon an earlier one. "The great weight of authority is that the execution of a subsequent will containing an express clause revoking the former will operated as a revocation at once, and that the former will thus revoked cannot be subsequently revived except by republication and is not renewed by a destruction of the later will;" Cheever v. North, 106 Mich. 390, 64 N. W. 455, 37 L. R. A. 561 and note, 58 Am. St. Rep. 499. This view was later affirmed by the same court; Danley v. Jefferson, 150 Mich. 590, 114 N. W. 470, 121 Am. St. Rep. 640, 13 Ann. Cas. 242; and in other states; In re Noon's Will, 115 Wis. 299, 91 N. W. 670, 95 Am. St. Rep. 944; Hopf v. State, 72 Tex. 281; In re Moore's Will, 72 N. J. Eq. 371, 65 Atl. 447, in which, however, the decision seems to be based upon the want of proof of evidence of intention, and the question whether the former will was revoked has been held to depend upon the intention of the testator to be inferred from the circumstances; Williams v. Miles, 68 Neb. 463, 94 N. W. 705, 62 L. R. A. 383, 110 Am. St. Rep. 431, 4 Ann. Cas. 306, in which a rehearing was denied; Williams v. Miles, 68 Neb. 479, 96 N. W. 151, 62 L. R. A. 383, 110 Am. St. Rep. 431, 4 Ann. Cas. 306.

The case in Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U.

S. 552, 21 Sup. Ct. 474, 45 L. Ed. 663, involved the will of Judge Advocate Holt. The paper was addressed to the register of wills in an envelope sent through the mails. It bore evident signs of mutilation by tearing and burning, and although it recited that it had been signed and sealed, there was no seal on it, and if it had ever been affixed, it had been torn away. The court held that no presumption of revocation arose by its appearance when first received by the register of wills. There must be some evidence of the act by the deceased, or under his direction, sufficient to show the fact, or the instrument must have been found among the papers of the deceased, mutilated, torn or defaced under such circumstances that the revocation might be presumed.

This will bore the signatures of U. S. Grant and W. T. Sherman (at that time president and general of the army) and of Mrs. Sherman, all of whose handwriting was proved by members of their families.

Where a paper on which was written a bequest was pasted over a legacy, the court refused to remove it; L. R. 3 P. D. 211; but afterwards finding that the covered passages could be read by holding the document against a window pane, the court allowed probate of the will in its original form; [1894] P. D. 191.

Alteration by a stranger is mere spoliation and does not affect the will; Monroe v. Huddart, 79 Neb. 569, 113 N. W. 149, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259.

Erasures by hand in a holographic will are legal revocation of the portions erased; La Rue v. Lee, 63 W. Va. 388, 60 S. E. 388, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968, 129 Am. St. Rep. 978; pencil is sufficient; id.

A will may be revoked in part; 2 Rob. Eccl. 562, 572. But partial revocations which were made in anticipation of making a new will, and intended to be conditional upon that, are not regarded as complete until the new will is executed; 1 Add. Eccl. 409; 2 id. 316. Thus a "memorandum of my intended will" was upheld as a will, and held not to be revoked by the drawing up of a new will which was not signed; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 225; 14 C. L. J. 248.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a testator wanted his will to be revoked in the event of a certain contingency happening before his death; Sewell v. Shingluff, 13 Repr. (Md.) 526; but see, contra, 3 Sw. & Tr. 282.

Execution of a will and its possession by testatrix having been proved, her subsequent declarations concerning it, though made after its supposed destruction are inadmissible to rebut the presumption of revocation; In re Kennedy, 53 App. Div. 105, 65 N. Y. Supp. 879. This case is said to be against the "great weight of authority in England and America"; 14 Harv. L. Rev. 231, citing L. R. 1 P. D. 154; Pickens v. Davis, 134 Mass.

252, 45 Am. Rep. 322. The declarations were probative of her intent at the time they were made and as such were admissible; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706; as part of the res gesta; Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. Ct. 474, 45 L. Ed. 663. See 15 Harv. L. Rev. 149, and 17 id. 359.

The loss of a will raises a presumption of intention to revoke; Behrens v. Behrens, 47 Ohio St. 323, 25 N. E. 209, 21 Am. St. Rep. 820; which may be rebutted by proof to the contrary; In re Steinke's Will, 95 Wis. 121, 70 N. W. 61.

The mere act of defacing a will by accident and without the intention to revoke, or under the misapprehension that a later will is good, will not operate as a revocation; 1 P. Wms. 345; 1 Saund. 279 b, c; 1 Add. Eccl. 53. The revocation of a will is prima facie a revocation of the codicils; 4 Hagg. Eccl. 361. But it is competent to show that such was not the testator's intention; 2 Add. Eccl. 230; 1 Curt. Eccl. 289. The same capacity is requisite to revoke as to make a will; Idley v. Bowen, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 227; Rhodes v. Vinson, 9 Gill (Md.) 169, 52 Am. Dec. 685; Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 92.

One lacking testamentary capacity is not competent, by means of an attempted testamentary act, to revoke a prior will; In re Goldsticker's Will, 192 N. Y. 35, 84 N. E. 581, 15 Ann. Cas. 66, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99, and note citing cases to the same effect, and others which, while not adjudicating it, referred to it as a well settled rule.

A testator who is insane cannot revoke an existing will; Estate of Lang, 65 Cal. 19, 2 Pac. 491; Rich v. Gilkey, 73 Me. 595; and tearing a will while suffering from delirium tremens is not a revocation; L. R. 3 P. & D. 37.

Revocation induced by fraud or undue influence is not effectual; Rich v. Gilkey, 73 Me. 595; McIntire v. Worthington, 68 Md. 203, 12 Atl. 251.

The making of a new will purporting on its face to be the testator's last will, and containing no reference to any other paper, and being a disposition of all the testator's property, and so executed as to be operative, will be a revocation of all former wills, notwithstanding it contain no express words of revocation; 2 Curt. Eccl. 468; 4 Moore, P. C. 29; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 266, 1 L. Ed. 375; Miffin's Estate, 49 Pa. Super. Ct. 605.

So the appointment of an executor is a circumstance indicating the exclusiveness of the instrument; 1 Macq. H. L. 163, 173. And the revocation will become operative, notwithstanding the second will becomes inoperative from the incapacity of the devisee; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 535, 543.

A will is revoked by one executed an hour later on the same day, revoking all prior wills; Head v. Nixon, 22 Idaho 765, 128 Pac. 557. Revocation by destruction of a codicil, containing only a specific legacy, does not revoke the will; Osburn v. Deposit Co., 152 App. Div. 235, 136 N. Y. Supp. 859.

It is regarded as the prima facie presumption from the revocation of a later will, a former one being still in existence and uncanceled, that the testator did intend its restoration without any formal republication; 3 Phill. Eccl. 554; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 266, 1 L. Ed. 375. But it is still regarded as mainly a question of intention to be decided by all the facts and circumstances of the case; Bohanow v. Walcott, 1 How. (Miss.) 336, 29 Am. Dec. 631; 2 Add. Eccl. 125; 1 Moore, P. C. 299, 301; Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 266, 1 L. Ed. 375; McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 173, 6 S. W. 44. See 15 Harv. L. Rev. 142. The revocation of a will by intentionally destroying it will not revive a former will which was expressly revoked by the later one; Hopf v. State, 72 Tex. 281, 10 S. W. 589; and revocation by the mere execution of a subsequent will without a clause of revocation is denied, but it is held that the destruction of the later will revives the former one; Cheever v. North, 106 Mich. 390, 64 N. W. 455, 37 L. R. A. 561, 58 Am. St. Rep. 499; Williams v. Williams, 142 Mass. 515, 8 N. E. 424, in which case the testator had made three successive wills, intending to choose one of them and then cancelled the first and third; but it will not where the testator intended to make a new one; McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 173, 6 S. W. 44.

The probability of there having been a revocation can be shown by proving the testator's verbal statements concerning his will; Southworth v. Adams, 11 Biss. 256, Fed. Cas. No. 13,194; but a declaration of an intent to make a will at a future time, even when made as a formal recital in a deed, is not a revocation of an earlier will; Appeal of Rife, 110 Pa. 232, 1 Atl. 226. Where there has been an act sufficient to constitute a revocation, it would seem that a verbal statement as to the intent of such act would be evidence. See Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 485. An express revocation must be made in conformity with the statute, and proved by the same force of evidence requisite to establish the will in the first instance; 8 Bingh. 479. If one republish a prior will, it amounts to a revocation of all later wills or codicils; 1 Add. Eccl. 38; 7 Term 138. A subsequent will containing a clause revoking former wills is not evidence of revocation until it is admitted to probate; Sewall v. Robbins, 139 Mass. 164, 29 N. E. 650.

When a will, once known to exist, and to have been in the custody of the testator, cannot be found after his decease, the legal presumption is that it was destroyed by the testator with the intention of revoking it;

Behrens v. Behrens, 47 Ohio St. 323, 25 N. E. 209, 21 Am. St. Rep. 820; where a will was executed in duplicate and the one retained by testatrix was not forthcoming at her decease, it was held that she was presumed to have destroyed it, animo revocandi; 58 L. T. R. 60.

Implied revocations were very common before the statute of frauds. But since the new statute of 1 Vict. c. 26, § 19, as to all estates real and personal, it is provided that no will shall be revoked on the ground of a presumed intention resulting from change of circumstances. Before that, it was held under the statute of frauds, by a succession of decisions, that, even as to lands, the marriage of the testator and the birth of children who were unprovided for was such a change of circumstances as to work an implied revocation of the will; 2 Show. 242; 4 Burr. 2171, 2182, in note; and, finally, by all the judges in England in the exchequer chamber; 8 Ad. & E. 14; 2 Nev. & P. 504. This latter case seems finally to have prevailed in England until the new statute; 2 Moore, P. C. 51, 63, 64; 2 Curt. Eccl. 854; 1 Rob. Eccl. 680. And the subsequent death of the child or children will not revive the will without republication; 1 Phill. Eccl. 342; 2 id. 266. See Alden v. Johnson, 63 Ia. 124, 18 N. W. 696.

The marriage alone or the birth of a child alone is not always sufficient to operate a revocation; 4 Burr. 2171; Ambl. 487, 557, 721; 5 Term 52, and note. The marriage alone of a woman will work a revocation; 4 Rep. 61; 2 Bro. C. C. 613; the reason assigned being that, as she was incapable of making a will after marriage, neither could she revoke one, hence the law did it for her; and the rule has been quite generally adopted, either as a common law rule, or by statute; Nutt v. Norton, 142 Mass. 242, 7 N. E. 720; Hale v. Hale, 90 Va. 728, 19 S. E. 739; In re Kaufman's Will, 131 N. Y. 620, 30 N. E. 242, 15 L. R. A. 292; In re Craft's Estate, 164 Pa. 520, 30 Atl. 493; in some states the common law rule is considered as at an end because as she has now power to make a will; Appeal of Emery, 81 Me. 275, 17 Atl. 68; Webb v. Jones, 36 N. J. Eq. 163.

At common law a man's will was not revoked by his marriage alone and the reason given was that the wife under the rules of descent, would not be thereby benefited; Page, Wills § 281; but when the wife is by statute made an heir, there is again a case of cessat ratio, and marriage has been held to be a revocation; Scherrer v. Brown, 21 Colo. 481, 42 Pac. 668; but in other states, it is held that such a statute does not change the common law rule; Hulett v. Carey, 66 Minn. 327, 69 N. W. 31, 34 L. R. A. 384, 61 Am. St. Rep. 419; Hoy v. Hoy, 93 Miss. 732, 48 South. 903, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 182, 136 Am. St. Rep. 548, 17 Ann. Cas. 1137; Munday's Ex'rs v. Munday, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. R.

155; contra, Weld v. Sweeney, 85 Ill. 50; Morgan v. Ireland, 1 Idaho 786; Colcord v. Conroy, 40 Fla. 97, 23 South. 561.

See Page, Wills, § 281, where the cases are collected; and see Hulett v. Carey, 66 Minn. 327, 69 N. W. 31, 34 L. R. A. 384, 61 Am. St. Rep. 419, and note.

Marriage and birth of issue work implied revocation of a woman's will; Nutt v. Norton, 142 Mass. 242, 7 N. E. 720; Durfee v. Risch, 142 Mich. 504, 105 N. W. 1114, 1 Ann. Cas. 785, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084, and note; but the will of a married woman is not revoked by subsequent marriage after being a widow, under a statute revoking by marriage a will made by an unmarried woman; In re Comassi, 107 Cal. 1, 40 Pac. 15, 28 L. R. A. 414, where it was also held that adoption of a child is not equivalent to birth of issue, to revoke a will.

But the birth of a child, with circumstances favoring such a result, may amount to an implied revocation; 5 Term 52; 1 Phil. Eccl. 147. See Ware v. Wisner, 50 Fed. 310; Alden v. Johnson, 63 Ia. 124, 18 N. W. 696. A will not made in contemplation of matrimony is revoked by the marriage of the testator and the birth of a posthumous child; Belton v. Summer, 31 Fla. 139, 12 South. 371, 21 L. R. A. 146; Hart v. Hart, 70 Ga. 764. For the history of the common law on this subject, see Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 510. In the absence of statute this rule of the common law may be considered abrogated in those states which give a married woman unrestricted testamentary powers. This matter is controlled in most of the American states, more or less, by statute; 3 Jarm. Wills (Rand. & Talc. ed.) 783, note. In many of them a posthumous child unprovided for in the will of the father inherits the same as if no will had been made; Wilson v. Ott, 160 Pa. 433, 28 Atl. 848. In others, all children born after the execution of the will, and in some states all children not provided for in the will, are placed on the same ground as if no will existed; 1 Will. Ex. 170, 171.

As to revocation by subsequent birth of a child, see article by Marvin H. Altizer in 9 Va. L. Reg. 473, 519 (Oct. and Nov. 1903), for state statutes and cases interpreting them; and see also 17 Harv. L. Rev. 210.

By the express provisions of the act of 1 Vict. the marriage of the testator, whether man or woman, amounts to a revocation; 1 Jarm. Wills 106-173. See 89 Law T. 20. Subsequent marriage revokes the antenuptial will made by a wife; Blodgett v. Moore, 141 Mass. 75, 5 N. E. 470; contra, Fellows v. Allen, 60 N. H. 439, 49 Am. Rep. 328. The adoption of a child does not revoke an antecedent will of the adopting parent; Davis v. Fogle, 124 Ind. 41, 23 N. E. 860, 7 L. R. A. 485.

Divorce procured by the wife after the execution of a will by the husband two years before his death does not revoke by implication a will containing a legacy to her, describing her as his wife; Jones' Estate, 211 Pa. 364, 60 Atl. 915, 69 L. R. A. 940, 107 Am. St. Rep. 581, 3 Ann. Cas. 221. Other cases decline to imply a revocation of a will by reason of divorce; Card v. Alexander, 48 Conn. 492, 40 Am. Rep. 187; Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307; contra, Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 54 N. W. 699, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545 (where a settlement inter partes was somewhat relied on). See 19 Harv. L. Rev. 69; In re Jones' Estate, 211 Pa. 364, 60 Atl. 915, 107 Am. St. Rep. 581, 3 Ann. Cas. 221, 69 L. R. A. 940, with note on the subject which concludes that divorce is not a revocation unless the court is irresistibly convinced of an intention to that effect.

Where a will is executed in duplicate, only one part of which the testator retains, if he destroys that one, an intention to revoke is presumed; Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 4 South. 225.

REPUBLICATION. This, under the statute of frauds, could only be done in the same manner a will of lands was required to be first executed. And the same rule obtains under the statute of 1 Vict., and in many, perhaps most, of the American states. The general rule may be said to be, that a will can be republished only by an instrument of as high a nature as that which revoked it. Thus a will once revoked by written declaration cannot be republished by parol; Witter v. Mott, 2 Conn. 67; Jackson v. Potter, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; Sawyer v. Sawyer, 52 N. C. 134. In Pennsylvania, a parol republication is allowed. But the intention of the testator to republish must be clearly proved; Wallace v. Blair, 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 75; Jones v. Hartley, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 103. It is doubtful, however, if parol evidence alone is sufficient; Battle v. Speight, 32 N. C. 459. A codicil ratifying and confirming a will, in whole or in part, will amount to a republication of the will, as of the date of the codicil; Hawke v. Euyart, 30 Neb. 149, 46 N. W. 422, 27 Am. St. Rep. 391.

Constructive republication is effected by means of a codicil, unless neutralized by internal evidence of a contrary intention; 1 Ves. Sen. 437; Miles v. Boyden, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 213.

PROBATE OF WILLS. The proof of a will of personal property must always be made in the probate court. But in England the probate of the will is not evidence in regard to real estate. In most of the states the same rule obtains in regard to real as to personal estate—as the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction, in most of the states, in all matters pertaining to the settlement of estates; 9 Co. 36, 38 a; 4 Term 260; 1 Jarm. Wills 118; Poplin v. Hawke, 8 N. H. 124; Hutchins v. Bank, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 421; Swazey's Lessee v. Blackman, 8 Ohio 5.

As the authority to make wills is derived from the state, matters of probate are not strictly within the federal jurisdiction. But where the state law, by statute or custom, gives to the citizens of the state in a suit inter partes a right to question at law the probate of a will, or to assail it in equity, the federal courts, in administering the rights of citizens of other states or aliens, will enforce such remedies; but such suit must relate to independent controversies and not to such merely as might arise on an application for probate, or a mere method of procedure ancillary to the original proceeding; Farrell v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101.

A will refused probate for want of testamentary capacity in the state of testator's domicile has been admitted to probate in another state where lands passed under it; Rice v. Jones, 4 Call (Va.) 89; and see Succession of Gaines, 45 La. Ann. 1237, 14 South. 233. See PROBATE OF A WILL.

The probate of a will has no effect out of the jurisdiction of the court before which probate is made, either as to persons or property in a foreign jurisdiction; 8 Ves. Ch. 44; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 153; Ives v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 589 (but see supra, under MODE OF EXECUTION).

In regard to the probate of wills passing realty, the lex rei sitæ governs; personalty is controlled by the lex domicilii; Whart. Conf. Laws §§ 570, 587, 592; Schultz v. Dambmann, 3 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 379; Story, Conf. Laws §§ 69, 431; 10 Moore, P. C. 306. But the indorsement of negotiable paper by the executor or administrator in the place of his appointment will enable the indorsee to maintain an action in a foreign state upon the paper in his own name; Robinson v. Crandall, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 425. But see Stearns v. Burnham, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 261, 17 Am. Dec. 228; Thompson v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 291, where the rule is held otherwise. The executor may dispose of bankshares in a foreign state without proving the will there; Hutchins v. Bank, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 421.

Any person interested in the will may compel probate of it by application to the probate court, who will cite the executor or party having the custody of it; Stebbins v. Lathrop, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 33; 3 Bacon, Abr. 34. Executors. The judge of probate may cite the executor to prove the will at the instance of any one claiming an interest; Stebbins v. Lathrop, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 33; 1 Jarm. Wills 224. The attesting witnesses are indispensable, if the contestants so insist, as proof of the execution and authenticity of the will and the competency of the testator, when they can be had; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 691; 1 Jarm. Wills 226. But if all or part of the subscribing witnesses are absent from the state, deceased, or disqualified, then their handwriting must be proved; 9 Ves. Ch. 381; Jackson v. Le Grange, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 386, 10 Am. Dec. 237; 1 Jarm. Wills 226. And see Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 364; Hawes v.

Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350, 20 Am. Dec. 481; Smith v. Jones, 6 Rand. (Va.) 33. It will be presumed that the requisite formalities were complied with when the attestation is formal, unless the contrary appear; Welty v. Welty, 8 Md. 15; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. 218; 1 Jarm. Wills 228; Burkett v. Whittemore, 36 S. C. 428, 15 S. E. 616. But it has sometimes been held that no such presumption will be made in the absence of a subscribing witness who might be called; Jackson v. Le Grange, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 386, 10 Am. Dec. 237. While the probate of a will settles the question of due execution, it does not establish validity, or determine its force and effect upon titles to real estate claimed under it; Ware v. Wisner, 50 Fed. 310. Wills over thirty years old, and appearing regular and perfect, and coming from the proper custody, are said to prove themselves; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 21, 570. See LOST INSTRUMENT.

In most of the states statutory provision has been made for proving foreign wills by exemplified copy; 3 Jarm. Wills (Rand. & Talc. edition) 725, note.

GIFTS VOID FOR UNCERTAINTY. Where the subject-matter of the gifts is not so defined in the will as to be ascertained with reasonable certainty; Kelley v. Kelley, 25 Pa. 460; Wootton v. Redd's Ex'r, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196; the person intended to be benefited may not be so described or named that he can be identified. But, in general, by rejecting obvious mistakes, this kind of uncertainty is overcome; 1 Jarm. Wills 330. Determinate meanings have now been assigned to numerous doubtful words and phrases, and rules of construction adopted by the courts, which render devises void for uncertainty less frequent than formerly; 1 Jarm. Wills 356-383. A will otherwise effective, should not be refused probate because certain bequests contained therein are void for uncertainty; Estate of Shillaber, 74 Cal. 144, 15 Pac. 453, 5 Am. St. Rep. 433; Adams v. Berger, 18 N. Y. Supp. 33; Brown v. Richter, 76 Hun 469, 27 N. Y. Supp. 1094; Armstrong v. Douglass, 89 Tenn. 219, 14 S. W. 604, 10 L. R. A. 85.

The testator's body cannot be disposed of by his will, because the law recognizes no property in a dead body, and it is the duty of the executor to bury it; 21 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 508. See DEAD BODY.

PAROL EVIDENCE, HOW FAR ADMISSIBLE. The rule in regard to the admissibility of parol evidence to vary, control, or to render intelligible the words of a will, is not essentially different from that which obtains in regard to contracts. It may be received to show the state of the testator, the nature and condition of his property, his relation to the contestants, and all the surrounding circumstances. But this is done to place the court in the condition of the testator, in order as far as practicable to enable them the more fully to understand the sense in which he probably used the language found in his will; 1 Nev. & M. 524; Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 400; 1 Jarm. Wills 349; Kinsey v. Rhem, 24 N. C. 192. To ascertain the intention of testator, circumstances existing at the date of the execution of a will, but not those subsequent thereto, are admissible in evidence; Morris v. Sickly, 133 N. Y. 456, 31 N. E. 332; Gilmor's Estate, 154 Pa. 523, 26 Atl. 614, 35 Am. St. Rep. 853; White v. Holland, 92 Ga. 216, 18 S. E. 17, 44 Am. St. Rep. 87.

Letters and oral declarations of the testator are not admissible to show the intention of the testator; 2 Vern. 625; Mann v. Mann, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 7 Am. Dec. 469; Lewis v. Lewis, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 455. But see Ryerss v. Wheeler, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 148. Parol evidence is not admissible to supply any word or defect in the will; Negro Cesar v. Chew, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 127; Comstock v. Hadlyme, 8 Conn. 254, 20 Am. Dec. 100; Hyatt v. Pugsley, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 285. Parol declarations of the testator about the time of making the will are often admitted to show the state of mind, capacity, and understanding of the testator; but they are not to be used to show his intention; that must be learned from the language used; Comstock v. Hadlyme, 8 Conn. 254, 20 Am. Dec. 100; Foster v. Smith, 156 Mass. 379, 31 N. E. 291. Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a gift to a nephew was really intended for the wife's nephew of the same name; Root's Estate, 187 Pa. 118, 40 Atl. 818; but see 12 Harv. L. Rev. 210. See, generally, Tud. Lead. Cas. R. P. 918; Wigram, Wills.

Parol evidence has also been admitted in the case of mistake in the description of the subject matter of the devise, as where "the tract of land on which I now live" was held to prevail over courses and distances; Thomson v. Thomson, 115 Mo. 56, 21 S. W. 1085, 1128; Board of Trustees of M. E. Church v. May, 201 Mo. 360, 99 S. W. 1093 (where the numbers of the lots were wrongly given); Douglas v. Bolinger, 228 Ill. 23, 81 N. E. 787, 119 Am. St. Rep. 409 (where the north half of a section was stricken out and the west half held to pass, the latter being owned by the testator).

The doctrine that a non-testamentary document may be admitted to probate with a will (1) if referred to in the will as an existing document, (2) if written before the will was made, and (3) if actually in existence at the time of the execution of the will, is said to be firmly established in England; 13 L. R. Ir. 13; L. R. 1 P. & D. 198; also as to the first point; 34 L. J. P. 105; and as to the third; 3 App. Cas. 404; L. R. 1 P. 19. It may be sufficiently identified by reference in the will; 3 Sw. & Tr. 192. American courts generally seem to adopt the doctrine; Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 436, 21 L. Ed. 779;

Skinner v. Bible Soc., 92 Wis. 209, 65 N. W. 1037; Fickle v. Snepp, 97 Ind. 289, 49 Am. Rep. 449; Beall v. Cunningham, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 390, 39 Am. Dec. 469; Newton v. Seaman's Friend Soc., 130 Mass. 91, 39 Am. Rep. 433; Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Grat. (Va.) 439; Gerrish v. Gerrish, 8 Or. 351, 34 Am. Rep. 585; In re Bresler's Estate, 155 Mich. 567, 119 N. W. 1104. See note in 19 Harv. L. Rev. 528.

The same doctrine is recognized in Magnus v. Magnus, 80 N. J. Eq. 346, 84 Atl. 705; but in that case a provision giving property to be disposed of according to "my instructions to her" failed because not identifying the instructions; and a bequest to creditors as shown by a list to be found with the will was void as an attempt to bequeath property to persons only ascertainable by reference to a non testamentary paper; Hartwell v. Martin, 71 N. J. Eq. 157, 63 Atl. 754.

In New York the doctrine was followed in early cases: Jackson v. Babcock, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 394, where it was said that "there is no question, since the statute of wills, as well as before;" and that there was never any doubt that when a paper is referred to, its contents become a part of the will, and the requirement of signing at the end is not affected; Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140, where the paper was a copy of a map annexed after the signature. The doctrine was, however, not applied in the case of wills not actually signed at the physical end (as where some material part of the will followed the signature); In re Andrews, 162 N. Y. 1, 56 N. E. 529, 48 L. R. A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294; and in other cases the doctrine seems to have been rejected, and it was said that an unattested paper of testamentary nature referred to cannot be taken as part of the will; Vogel v. Lehritter, 139 N. Y. 223, 34 N. E. 914; In re Emmons, 110 App. Div. 701, 96 N. Y. Supp. 506, where a will invalidly executed was not made valid by a subsequent codicil properly executed referring to it, and it was said generally that no testamentary provision in other unexecuted or unattested papers can be incorporated into a will; where there was no indication that testator intended to make an agreement part of a will and it would make no change, it should not be included; In re Martindale, 69 Misc. 522, 127 N. Y. Supp. 887.

The paper must be described in clear and definite terms, and where a sum of money was given to be held in trust "for purposes set forth in a sealed letter, which will be found with the will," it was held not to designate a specific existing document with such definiteness as to admit of its incorporation in the will; Appeal of Bryan, 77 Conn. 240, 58 Atl. 748, 68 L. R. A. 353, 107 Am. St. Rep. 34, 1 Ann. Cas. 393; and where the letter directed to whom the money should be paid, being testamentary in character it was ineffective, not being executed as a will; Bryan v. Bigelow, 77 Conn. 604, 60 Atl. 266, 107 Am.

St. Rep. 64. As to the precision required in the clause incorporating the document, there is some doubt; parol evidence has been admitted to show what paper it was; 11 Moore P. C. 427; 1 Nev. & Man. 576; the reference must be certain as to the exact paper and as to its existence; [1902] L. R. P. D. 238; In re Young's Estate, 123 Cal. 342, 55 Pac. 1011; Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 273; at the time the will was made; Chambers v. McDaniel, 28 N. C. 226; Johnson v. Clarkson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 305; St. John's Parish v. Bostwick, 8 App. D. C. 452.

Provisions of a trust deed not attested as a will cannot be incorporated by reference for the purpose of denoting a bequest not made by the will; Hatheway v. Smith, 79 Conn. 506, 65 Atl. 1058, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 310, 9 Ann. Cas. 99; nor can an ambiguous deed of bargain and sale be converted into a will by parol evidence tending to show an animus testandi in the maker; Noble v. Fickes, 230 Ill. 594, 82 N. E. 950, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1203 and note, 12 Ann. Cas. 282; Clay v. Layton, 134 Mich. 317, 96 N. W. 458, followed in Dodson v. Dodson, 142 Mich. 586, 105 N. W. 1110.

FOREIGN WILL. Where a German testator specially appointed a person in England to realize on his English estate and transmit the proceeds to the German executor, the court declined to grant probate to these persons as executors according to the tenor of the will; [1894] 2 Q. B. 260.

Where property was settled upon English trustees with power of appointment, the owner of the power exercised the power it gave by will made in English form but invalid by French law. It was held that the appointment was valid; L. R. 1 P. D. 90.

There may be independent wills in different jurisdictions; [1894] P. 9; [1896] P. 65.

Where a testator made two separate wills dealing separately with English and Scotch assets, the court being satisfied that no creditor would be prejudiced, granted letters under the English will without requiring the Scotch will to be incorporated, upon condition that a copy thereof should be filed and a note to that effect made on the probate; [1891] P. 285. And where a resident of England made two wills, one termed the "English will" relating solely to property in England, and the other the "American Will" relating solely to property in this country, the original of the latter was held entitled to probate in Kansas, the statute authorizing record of the probate of foreign wills being held as enlarging not restricting the jurisdiction of the probate court; Parnell v. Thompson, 81 Kan. 119, 105 Pac. 502, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658. So where a resident of Delaware executed a will there called the "American will," and removed to England and executed another one, called the "English will," recognizing the former, the two were held to constitute one will; Flinn v. Frank, 8 Del. Ch. 186, 68 Atl. 196.

Where an executor was absent and expected to be absent for two years and had given X a power of attorney to act for him, administration with the will annexed was granted to X for the benefit of the executor; [1891] P. 251.

As to wills of persons long absent, see ABSENTEE. As to forfeiting a gift by contesting the will, see FORFEITURE. See FACSIMILE.

In Criminal Law. The power of the mind which directs the action of a man.

In criminal jurisprudence, the necessity of the concurrence of the will is deemed so far indispensable that, in general, those persons are held not amenable as offenders against the law who have merely done the act prohibited, without the concurrence of the will. This has reference to different classes of persons who are regarded as laboring under defect of will, and are, therefore, incapable of committing crime.

Infants, who, from want of age, are excused from punishment. See INFANT.

Persons laboring under mental imbecility are not amenable for crime. See INSANITY; LUCID INTERVALS.

Persons subject to the power of others. This exemption from crime, in the common law, extends to the wife while in the immediate presence and under the power of the husband, but not to a child or servant. See COERCION. The distinction between the wife and the child and especially the servant, where the relation of master and servant is of a permanent character, or where the law gives the master unlimited control over the acts of the servant, seems not to rest upon any well-founded basis in present social relations. The English law does not regard one in the power of robbers or of an armed force of rebels as responsible, criminaliter, for his acts. No more should one be who is wholly under the power of another, as a child or servant may be; 1 Russ. Cr. 14. See Ch. J. Howe, 18 St. Trials 293. These questions should, in strictness, be referred to the jury as matters of fact. See DURESS; COERCION.

As to ignorance of law or fact, see IGNORANCE; INTENT.

WILL, ESTATES AT. See ESTATES AT WILL.

WINCHESTER, STATUTE OF. An English statute, 13 Edw. I. relating to the internal police of the kingdom. It required every man to provide himself with armor to aid in keeping the peace; and if it did not create the offices of high and petty constables, it recognized and regulated them, and charged them with duties answering somewhat to those of our militia officers. The statute took its name from the ancient capital of the kingdom. It was repealed by the statute of 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27. See 1 Seld. Essays 153.

WINDFALL. See TIMBER; WOODS.

WINDING UP. The process of liquidating the assets of a partnership or corporation, for purposes of distribution. In England a number of statutes, known as the Winding-up Acts, have been passed to facilitate the settlement of partnership affairs; Lind. Part. book iv. c. 3. It is now regulated by Act of 1908 and is transacted in the department for companies winding-up.

WINDOW. An opening made in the wall of a house to admit light and air, and to enable those who are in to look out. Cited in Hale v. Ins. Co., 46 Mo. App. 508.

The owner has a right to make as many windows in his house, when not built on the line of his property, as he may deem proper, although by so doing he may destroy the privacy of his neighbors; Bacon, Abr. Actions in General (B).

In cities and towns it is evident that the owner of a house cannot open windows in the party wall, q. v., without the consent of the owner of the adjoining property, unless he possesses the right of having ancient lights, which see. The opening of such windows and destroying the privacy of the adjoining property is not, however, actionable; the remedy against such encroachment is by obstructing them, without encroaching upon the rights of the party who opened them, so as to prevent a right from being acquired by twenty years' use, 3 Camp. 82; Levy v. Brothers, 4 Misc. 48, 23 N. Y. Supp. 825. A bay or bow-window that projects over the land of another is a nuisance, and actionable as though it was an actual invasion of the soil; Commonwealth v. Harris, 10 Wkly. Notes & Cas. (Pa.) 10; Wood, Nuisance 113. Where it projects beyond the street line, it has been held in Pennsylvania a purpresture, and the erection of it may be restrained by injunction, although authorized by a special city ordinance; Com. v. Harris, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 10; see Appeal of Reimer, 100 Pa. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 373; whether the window reached to the ground; id.; or was built out of the second story; Com. v. Harris, 15 Phila. 10.

WINE. The fermented juice of the grape. State v. Moore, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 118. See LIQUOR LAWS.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY. The use of wireless telegraphy in the Russo-Japanese war, as a means of transmitting orders and information, gave rise to several difficult problems in the relations between belligerents and neutrals. In consequence, the Convention Respecting the Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers and Persons in War on Land, adopted at the Hague in 1907, provides (art. 3) that "belligerents are also forbidden (a) to erect on the territory of a neutral power a wireless telegraphy station or any apparatus intended to serve as a means of communication with belligerent forces on land or sea; (b) to make use of any installation of this kind established by them before the war on the territory of a neutral power, for purely military purposes and not previously opened for the service of public messages." Neutral powers are, moreover, required by art. 5 not to allow the acts forbidden to belligerents by art. 3. But, on the other hand, art. 8 states that "a neutral is not bound to forbid or restrict the employment on behalf of belligerents of telegraph or telephone cables or of wireless telegraphy apparatus whether belonging to it, or to companies or to private individuals." Art. 5 of the Convention Relating to the Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers in Maritime War repeats the prohibition in the first paragraph of art. 3. See Hershey, Int. L. and Dip. of the Russo-Japanese War 115-124.

A convention was concluded between the United States and foreign countries and was proclaimed by the President, July 8, 1913.

The Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea was signed at London, January 20, 1914. It has not yet been approved by the United States senate. Only an abstract of its provisions on this subject can be given. Merchant ships which are mechanically propelled, which carry more than twelve passengers and proceed from a port of one of the countries to a port situated outside such country, or conversely, are subject to the Convention. All merchant ships, whether they are propelled by machinery or by sails, and whether they carry passengers or not, shall, when they proceed between such ports, be fitted with a radiotelegraphic installation if they have on board 50 or more persons in all.

The governments of any contracting state, if it considers the installation unreasonable or unnecessary, may exempt ships which do not go more than 150 miles from the nearest coast; ships on which the number of persons is exceptionally or temporarily increased up to or beyond 50, by the carriage of cargo hands for part of the voyage, provided the ships are not going from one continent to another and remain between thirty degrees north and south latitude; and sailing ships of primitive build, such as junks, etc.

First class ships are those having a continuous service, including ships intended to carry 25 or more passengers, if they have an average speed in service of 15 knots, or more, or if they have an average speed in service of 13 knots and when subject to the twofold condition that they have on board 200 persons or more, passengers and crew, and that they go on their voyage more than 500 sea miles between any two consecutive ports. But such ships may be placed in the second class if they have a continuous watch.

Second class. Ships having a service of limited duration. Such ships must maintain a continuous watch for at least seven hours a day, and a watch of ten minutes at the beginning of every other hour.

Third class. They have no fixed period of service. All ships not in the first or second class are in the third class.

WIRES. By the provisions of the Revised Statutes § 5263, electrical companies must so construct and maintain their lines as not to obstruct ordinary travel or navigation. This act grants to the companies which accept its provisions a species of easement or right of way; Western U. Tel. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. 552, 3 L. R. A. 449. It does not prevent state legislatures from enacting statutes requiring telegraph wires to be placed underground; American R. Tel. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 26 N. E. 919, 13 L. R. A. 454, 21 Am. St. Rep. 764; New York v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 12 Sup. Ct. 880, 36 L. Ed. 666; and when declared a nuisance, they may be forcibly removed, although the subways are not in a condition to receive them; American R. Tel. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 26 N. E. 919, 13 L. R. A. 454, 21 Am. St. Rep. 764.

The attachment of wires to the roof of a building may be prohibited by municipal ordinance in the exercise of the police power; Electric Imp. Co. v. San Francisco, 45 Fed. 593, 13 L. R. A. 131; and the company is liable to the owner of the premises for making such attachment without permission; Gray v. G. L. Co., 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. Rep. 324.

Although not an insurer of safety to travellers all reasonable precautions must be taken in stringing wires; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Eyser, 2 Colo. 148; id., 91 U. S. 495, note, 23 L. Ed. 377; and in investigating promptly detached or grounded wires; Illingsworth v. Light Co., 161 Mass. 583, 37 N. E. 778, 25 L. R. A. 552; Texarkana G. & E. L. Co. v. Orr, 59 Ark. 215, 27 S. W. 66, 43 Am. St. Rep. 30; and in removing dead wires in the case of fire or accident; Nichols v. City of Minneapolis, 33 Minn. 430, 23 N. W. 868, 53 Am. Rep. 56; but the mere fact that one was killed by a hanging wire does not prove negligence; Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 34 Atl. 1069, 32 L. R. A. 700; contra, Haynes v. Gas Co., 114 N. C. 203, 19 S. E. 344, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786.

In many of the states the insulation of the wire is made the subject of statutory provision, and even in the absence of such provision, it has been held that non-insulation is negligence; Illingsworth v. Light Co., 161 Mass. 583, 37 N. E. 778, 25 L. R. A. 552.

A company will be liable for damages if a dead wire, coming into contact with a live wire of another company, becomes charged and causes injury or death; Texarkana G. & E. L. Co. v. Orr, 59 Ark. 215, 27 S. W. 66, 43 Am. St. Rep. 30.

One whose occupation requires his proximity to an electric wire may presume it to be insulated; Clements v. Light Co., 44 La. Ann. 692, 11 South. 51, 16 L. R. A. 43, 32 Am. St. Rep. 348; and he is not required to make an examination in order to ascertain if such be the case; Giraudi v. Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 Pac. 108, 28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114. A traveller may pick up a wire from the street and throw it outside the regular line of travel without being guilty of contributory negligence; Bourget v. Cambridge, 156 Mass. 393, 31 N. E. 390, 16 L. R. A. 605; Haynes v. Gas Co., 114 N. C. 203, 19 S. E. 344, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786; Texarkana G. & E. L. Co. v. Orr, 59 Ark. 215, 27 S. W. 66, 43 Am. St. Rep. 30. For injuries so received damages may be recovered either from the city; Bourget v. Cambridge, 156 Mass. 393, 31 N. E. 390, 16 L. R. A. 605; or from the company; Texarkana G. & E. L. Co. v. Orr, 59 Ark. 215, 27 S. W. 66, 43 Am. St. Rep. 30. But in order to sustain an action for damages, it must be clearly shown that there was no contributory negligence; Moore v. Illuminating Co., 43 La. Ann. 792, 9 South. 433. It has been considered contributory negligence to step on a live wire after a warning; Cook v. Electric Co., 9 Houst. (Del.) 306, 32 Atl. 643.

The wires of electric light and electric railway companies, unlike those of telegraph and telephone companies, carry a strong and dangerous current, and such companies are bound to the highest degree of care in the pursuit of their business; Haynes v. Gas Co., 114 N. C. 203, 19 S. E. 344, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786.

If a telephone wire has been negligently allowed to drop across a trolley wire, the owner of the latter is jointly liable with the owner of the telephone wire for injuries to a third person caused by electricity conveyed through it from the trolley wire; City Electric St. Ry. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 33 S. W. 426, 31 L. R. A. 570, 54 Am. St. Rep. 262. See Denver C. E. Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 41 Pac. 499, 31 L. R. A. 566; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 505; Keasbey, Electric Wires; Croswell, Electricity; ELECTRIC LIGHT; TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE; NEGLIGENCE; MASTER AND SERVANT.

WISBY, LAWS OF. See CODE. They are printed in 30 Fed. Cas. 1189.

WISCONSIN. One of the states of the United States.

It was originally part of the Northwest Territory. See Onto. It was made a separate territory, with the name of Wisconsin, by act of April 20, 1836. The territory was afterwards divided, and the territory of Iowa set off, June 12, 1838. It was admitted into the Union May 29, 1848.

The constitution was adopted by a convention at Madison, on February 1, 1848. This constitution, as modified by amendments, is still in force.

WITCHCRAFT. Under 33 Hen. VIII. c. 8 and 1 Jac. I. c. 12, the offence of witchcraft, or supposed intercourse with evil spirits, was punishable with death. These acts were not repealed till 1736. 4 Bla. Com. 60.

A charge to a jury was upheld that, if the accused believed in witchcraft founded on the belief that the Scriptures taught it and, that if, as a result of such belief, he considered he had a right to kill one accused of causing deaths among his people, though he knew such killing was contrary to human law, it was not an insane delusion; Höttema v. U. S., 186 U. S. 419, 22 Sup. Ct. 895, 46 L. Ed. 1225.

WITE. An atonement among the early Germans by a wrong-doer to the king or the community. It is said to be the germ of the idea that wrong is not simply the affair of the injured individual, and is therefore a condition precedent to the growth of a criminal law. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 37. See 1 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 100.

WITENA-GEMOT (spelled, also, wittena-gemot, gewitena-gemote; from the Saxon wita, a wise man, gemote, assembly,—the assembly of wise men). The king's council of wise men. There is said to be more authority for this short form (Witan) than for Witena-Gemot (not Witenagemot). Pollock, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 90 (14 L. Q. R. 291); Pollock, Expansion of C. L. 140; Vinogradoff (Engl. Soc. 6) gives it as witana-gemote.

It was the grand council of the kingdom, and was held, generally, in the open air, by public notice or particular summons, in or near some city or populous town. These notices or summonses were issued upon determination by the king's select council, or the body met without notice, when the throne was vacant, to elect a new king. Subsequently to the Norman conquest it was called commune concilium regni, curia regis and finally parliament; but its character had become considerably changed. It was a court of last resort, more especially for determining disputes between the king and his thanes, and, ultimately, from all inferior tribunals. Great offenders, particularly those who were members of or might be summoned to the king's court, were here tried. The casual loss of title-deeds was supplied, and a very extensive equity jurisdiction exercised. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 73; 1 Bla. Com. 147; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 7; 9 Co. Pref.

The principal duties of the witena-gemot, besides acting as a high court of judicature, was to elect the sovereign, assist at his coronation, and co-operate in the enactment and administration of the laws. It made treaties jointly with the king, and aided him in directing the military affairs of the kingdom. Examination into the state of churches, monasteries, their possessions, discipline, and morals, were made before this tribunal. It appointed magistrates, and regulated the coin of the kingdom. It also provided for levying upon the people all such sums as the public necessities required; and no property of a freeman was, in fact, taxable without the consent of the gemote. Bede, lib. 2, c. 5; 3 Turner, Angl. Sax. 209; 1 Dugdale, Mon. 20; Sax. Chron. 126, 140.

The deliberations of their body had great weight; all important actions, such as law-making, were done by their advice; but they could not and did not pretend to do without the consent of the freeholders when a capital decision—such as the voting of a tax, the election of a king, the passing of a law—was in question. At first the king of the English would go around with his proposed laws to the several folk-mote, getting the separate consent of each, but in the tenth century the kings bethought them of summoning the moots of the various shires to meet them at some convenient central spot, as Oxford or London, and what this collective moot or Mycel-gemot agreed to need not be confirmed again, since men from every shire were present. The Mycel-gemot was the Magnum Concilium of the Normans and developed into the High Courts and Parliaments of the thirteenth century. 1 Social England 136. See Stevens, Sources of the Constitution 62.

WITH STRONG HAND. In Pleading. A technical phrase indispensable in describing a forcible entry in an indictment. No other word or circumlocution will answer the same purpose. 8 Term 357.

WITHDRAW. To take away what has been enjoyed; to take from. Central R. & B. Co. v. State, 54 Ga. 409.

WITHDRAWAL OF OPINION. In a case in E. B. & E. 746, in the Exchequer, where there was an evenly divided court, it is stated in the syllabus that, the junior judge having withdrawn his opinion, a motion to enter verdict on the plea for the plaintiff was discharged. The case then went to the Exchequer Chamber; both cases are reported together.

WITHDRAWING A JUROR. An agreement made between the parties in a suit to require one of the twelve jurors impanelled to try a cause to leave the jurybox; the act of leaving the box by such a juror is also called the withdrawing a juror.

This arrangement usually takes place at the recommendation of the judge, when it is obviously improper the case should proceed any further. And it seems now settled that in civil cases the court has power to do this, in the exercise of a sound discretion, without the consent of the parties, instead of nonsuiting the plaintiff; People v. Judges of New York, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 127.

A refusal under the special circumstances was held error in McKahan v. R. Co., 223 Pa. 1, 72 Atl. 251, 16 Ann. Cas. 173.

The effect of withdrawing a juror puts an end to that particular trial, and each party must pay his own costs; 3 Term 657; 1 Cr. M. & R. 64. In Pennsylvania, the costs abide the event of the suit; Tr. & H. Pr. § 689. But the plaintiff may bring a new suit for the same cause of action; Ry. & M. 402; 3 B. & Ad. 349. See 3 Chitty, Pr. 917.

In American practice, however, the same cause goes over, or is continued, without impairing the rights of either party, until the next term.

It is usually a mere method of continuing a case, for some good reason. Most of the cases hold that it is the proper practice when it is necessary to prevent the defeat of justice, and that it may be done by the consent of the parties in a civil case.

The cases are collected in a note in 48 L. R. A. 432. It was held in the case there reported that the practice does not obtain in Oregon. There, however, the request appears to have been made immediately after a motion to continue for the absence of material evidence had been refused. In Glendenning v. Canary, 64 N. Y. 636, it was held the proper practice where any accident or misapprehension or disappointment would render a trial unjust. It is said to be proper in criminal cases, though without defendant's consent; State v. Weaver, 35 N. C. 203; U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815; contra, in a capital case; State v. Ephraim, 19 N. C. 162; a felony; 2 Stra. 984. But see JEOPARDY.

In the federal court (Illinois) where, at the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, the court would, if a verdict were rendered for him, set the same aside, and a motion is made by defendant to direct a verdict for him, plaintiff is not allowed to take a nonsuit, but may withdraw a juror and discontinue; Wolcott v. Studebaker, 34 Fed. 8.

Where the plaintiff, at the suggestion of the judge, withdraws a juror, with the understanding of bringing the matter to a final conclusion, it amounts to an undertaking not to bring an action for the same cause; and if a second action be commenced, the court will stay the proceedings as against good faith; 1 Chit. Arch. Pr. 285. It is held that, if a juror is withdrawn, no future action lies for the same cause of action; 14 M. & G. 808.

If, after a prisoner has pleaded to an indictment, and after the jury have been sworn and evidence offered, the public prosecutor, without the consent of the prisoner, withdraw a juror merely because he is unprepared with his evidence, the prisoner cannot afterwards be tried on the same indictment; People v.

Barrett, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 304, 2 Am. Dec. 239; Arch. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 347.

WITHDRAWING RECORD. The withdrawing by plaintiff's attorney of the nisi prius record filed in a cause, before a jury is sworn, has the same effect as a motion to postpone. 2 C. & P. 185; 3 Camp. 333.

WITHERNAM. The name of a writ which issues on the return of elongata to an alias or pluries writ of replevin, by which the sheriff is commanded to take the defendant's own goods which may be found in his bailiwick, and keep them safely, not to deliver them to the plaintiff until such time as the defendant chooses to submit himself and allow the distress, and the whole of it to be replevied; and he is thereby further commanded that he do return to the court in what manner he shall have executed the writ. Hamm. N. P. 453; Co. 2d Inst. 140; Fitzh. N. B. 68, 69.

WITHHOLD. Withholding property is not equivalent to concealing property. To withhold commissions implies a temporary suspension rather than a total and final denial or rejection of the same. U. S. v. Dumas, 149 U. S. 278, 13 Sup. Ct. 872, 37 L. Ed. 734.

WITHIN. In the limits or compass of. 54 Ala. 531. It may be used in the sense of in or at the end of. Adams v. Cummiskey, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 420.

WITHOUT. Outside; beyond. Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 277, 23 L. Ed. 347; Ainslie v. Martin, 9 Mass. 456.

WITHOUT DAY. This signifies that the cause or thing to which it relates is indefinitely adjourned: as, when a case is adjourned without day it is not again to be inquired into. When the legislature adjourn without day, they are not to meet again. This is usually expressed in Latin, sine die.

WITHOUT IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. When a tenant for life holds the land without impeachment of waste, he is, of course, punishable for waste, whether wilful or otherwise. But still this right must not be wantonly abused so as to destroy the estate; and he will be enjoined from committing malicious waste; Bac. Abr. Waste (N); 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. Waste (A, pl. 8). See IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE; WASTE.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. See COMPROMISE.

WITHOUT RECOURSE. See SANS RECOURS; INDORSEMENT.

WITHOUT RESERVE. These words are frequently used in conditions of sale at public auction, that the property offered, or to be offered, for sale, will be sold without reserve. When a property is advertised to be sold without reserve, if a puffer be employed to bid, and actually bid at the sale, the courts will not enforce a contract against a purchaser, into which he may have been drawn by the vendor's want of faith; 5 Madd. 34. See PUFFER; AUCTION.

WITHOUT THIS, THAT. In Pleading. Technical words used in a traverse (q. v.) for the purpose of denying a material fact in the preceding pleadings, whether declaration, plea, replication, etc. The Latin term is absque hoc (q. v.). Com. Dig. Pleader (G 1); 1 Chitty, Pl. 576, note a.

WITNESS (Anglo-Saxon witian, to know). One who testifies to what he knows. One who testifies under oath to something which he knows at first hand. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 98, 328.

One who is called upon to be present at a transaction, as, a wedding, or the making of a will. When a person signs his name to a written instrument to signify that the same was executed in his presence, he is called an attesting witness.

The principal rules relating to witnesses are the same in civil and in criminal cases, and the same in all the courts, as well in those various courts whose forms of proceeding are borrowed from the civil law, as in those of the common law; 3 Greenl. Ev. §§ 249, 402; 2 Ves. Ch. 41; Dwight v. Pomeroy, 17 Mass. 303, 9 Am. Dec. 148. There is no presumption that a witness will or will not speak the truth; Chicago U. T. Co. v. O'Brien, 219 Ill. 303, 76 N. E. 341; State v. Taylor, 57 S. C. 483, 35 S. E. 729, 76 Am. St. Rep. 575; State v. Halverson, 103 Minn. 265, 114 N. W. 957, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947, and note, 123 Am. St. Rep. 326; contra, Cornwall v. State, 91 Ga. 280, 18 S. E. 154; State v. Jones, 77 N. C. 520. In California there is a statutory presumption that a witness, uncontradicted, tells the truth; Code Civ. Proc. § 1847; and this requires an instruction to the jury to that effect; Fries v. American Lead Pencil Co., 141 Cal. 612, 75 Pac. 164. See BIAS.

AS TO THE COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES. The question of the competency of a witness is for the court, and not for the jury; State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 565, 16 S. E. 803, 19 L. R. A. 605; State v. Doyle, 107 Mo. 37, 17 S. W. 751; Mead v. Harris, 101 Mich. 585, 60 N. W. 284; and the determination, being of a matter of fact, is not, as a matter of principle, reversible; Freeny v. Freeny, 80 Md. 406, 31 Atl. 304; Com. v. Robinson, 165 Mass. 426, 43 N. E. 121; and an objection to competency is not necessarily waived if not taken before his examination in chief; Hill v. Postley, 90 Va. 200, 17 S. E. 946.

All persons, of whatever nation, may be witnesses; Bacon, Abr. Evidence (A). But in saying this we must, of course, except such as are excluded by the very definition of the term; and we have seen it to be essential that a witness should qualify himself by taking an oath. Therefore, all who cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath, or whose religious belief is so defective as to nullify and render it nugatory, or whose crimes have been such as to indicate an extreme insensibility to its sanctions, are excluded. And, accordingly, the following classes of persons have been pronounced by the common law to be incompetent.

Infants so young as to be unable to appreciate the nature and binding quality of an oath. A child under the age of fourteen is presumed incapable until capacity be shown, but the law fixes no limit of age which will of itself exclude. Whenever a child displays sufficient intelligence to observe and to narrate, it can be admitted to testify; 7 C. & P. 320; McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 151, 7 South. 35, 16 Am. St. Rep. 25; Com. v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 577, 8 N. E. 408, 56 Am. Rep. 709. A child five years old has been admitted to testify; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 367; 3 C. & P. 598; Com. v. Hutchinson, 10 Mass. 225; State v. Juneau, 88 Wis. 180, 59 N. W. 580, 24 L. R. A. 857, 43 Am. St. Rep. 877; Wheeler v. U. S., 159 U. S. 523, 16 Sup. Ct. 93, 40 L. Ed. 244. But if the child is not sufficiently instructed on this "point," the trial may be put off, in order to give the necessary instruction; 2 Leach, C. C. 86; but only in the discretion of the court; 2 C. & K. 246. The law presumes that all witnesses tendered in a court of justice are not only competent but credible. If a witness is incompetent, this must be shown by the party objecting to him; if he is not credible, this must be shown either from his examination, or by impeaching evidence aliunde; 1 Whart. Ev. § 392.

Idiots, lunatics, intoxicated persons, and, generally, those who labor under such privation or imbecility of mind that they cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath. The competency of such is restored with the recovery or acquisition of this power; Livingston v. Kiersted, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 362; Evans v. Hettich, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 453, 5 L. Ed. 496; but the question of their credibility should be left to the jury; Walker v. State, 97 Ala. 85, 12 South. 83. And so a lunatic in a lucid interval may testify; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 365; even though an inmate of an insane asylum; State v. Brown, 2 Marvel (Del.) 380, 36 Atl. 458 (where the testimony was admitted by a divided court); Pittsburgh & W. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 82 Fed. 720, 27 C. C. A. 333; or one who has been adjudged insane; Wright v. Exp. Co., 80 Fed. 85; and the question whether a lunatic has sufficient understanding to testify is to be determined by the court; District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519, 2 Sup. Ct. 840, 27 L. Ed. 618, where it was said that the rule as laid down in Reg. v. Hill, 5 Cox C. C. 259, "has never been overruled." Persons deaf and dumb from their birth are presumed to come within this principle of exclusion until their competency is shown; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 366; but such a person is not deemed to be an idiot; State v. Howard, 118

Mo. 127, 24 S. W. 41. A witness unable to speak or hear is not incompetent, but may give his evidence by writing or by signs, or in any other manner in which he can make it intelligible; Steph. Ev. art. 107. See Com. v. Casey, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 417, 59 Am. Dec. 150. A person in a state of intoxication cannot be admitted as a witness; Gebhart v. Shindle, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 235. See Hartford v. Palmer, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 143. Deficiency in perception must go to the incapacity of perceiving the matter in dispute, in order to operate as an exclusion, hence a blind man can testify to what he has heard, and a deaf man to what he has seen; 1 Whart. Ev. § 401.

Such as are insensible to the obligation of an oath, from defect of religious sentiment or belief. Atheists, and persons disbelieving in any system of divine rewards and punishments, are of this class, and are at common law incompetent as witnesses; Bull. N. P. 292. See 1 Atk. 21; Butts v. Swartwood, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 431, 433, n.; Arnold v. Arnold's Estate, 13 Vt. 362; Central Military Tract R. Co. v. Rockafellow, 17 Ill. 541; Smith v. Coffin, 18 Me. 157. It is reckoned sufficient qualification in this particular if one believe in a God and that he will reward and punish us according to our deserts. It is enough to believe that such punishment visits us in this world only; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 369; Blair v. Seaver, 26 Pa. 274; Brock v. Milligan, 10 Ohio, 121; Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66; People v. McGarren, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 460; State v. Belton, 24 S. C. 185, 58 Am. Rep. 245; see 3 Tayl. Ev. 9th ed. 910, where the cases are collected.

It matters not, so far as mere competency is concerned, that a witness should believe in one God, or in one God rather than another, or should hold any particular form of religious belief, provided only that he brings himself within the rule above laid down. And, therefore, the oath may be administered in any form whatever, and with any ceremonies whatever, that will bind the conscience of the witness; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371; 1 Sm. L. Cas. 739. See OATH. By statute in England and in most of the states, religious disbelief no longer disqualifies, provision being made for an affirmation instead, and the witness, if testifying falsely, being subject to the penalties of perjury; Whart. Ev. § 395, n. See, generally, 1 Sm. L. Cas. 737, where, under such a statute, the witness testified that he had no belief in a supreme being or a future state of rewards and punishment, it was error to charge that this might be considered as affecting his credibility; Brink v. Stratton, 176 N. Y. 150, 68 N. E. 148, 63 L. R. A. 182.

Persons infamous, i. e. those who have committed and been legally convicted of crimes the nature and magnitude of which show them to be insensible to the obligation of an oath. See INFAMY. Such crimes are enumerated under the heads of treason, felony, and the crimen falsi; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373; 2 Dods. Adm. 191. See CRIMEN FALSI.

The only method of establishing infamy is by producing the record of conviction. It is not even sufficient to show an admission of guilt by the witness himself; People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 707; Com. v. Bonner, 97 Mass. 587; but in England a witness may be asked whether he has been convicted, etc.; Steph. Ev. art. 130. Pardon or the reversal of a sentence restores the competency of an infamous person, except where this disability is annexed to an offence by a statute; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 378; 2 Hargr. Jurid. Arg. 221. See U. S. v. Hall, 53 Fed. 352; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429; Martin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 1, 17 S. W. 430; even if granted for the reason, among others, that his testimony was desired by the government in a cause then pending; Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S. 450, 12 Sup. Ct. 292, 35 L. Ed. 1077. See PARDON.

This exclusion on account of infamy or defect in religious belief applies only where a person is offered as a witness; 2 Q. B. 721. But wherever one is a party to the suit, wishing to make affidavit in the usual course of proceeding, and, in general, wherever the law requires an oath as the condition of its protection or its aid, it presumes conclusively and absolutely that all persons are capable of an oath; Skinner v. Perot, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 57. There is a conflict of authority as to how far a foreign judgment of an infamous offence disqualifies a witness. In New York, he is not disqualified; National T. Co. v. Gleason, 77 N. Y. 400, 33 Am. Rep. 632. In Pennsylvania, he is held not to be disqualified unless the record of conviction be produced, and not then if he has served out his term of imprisonment; Com. v. Hanlon, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 461. In Massachusetts, the record is admitted merely to affect his credibility; Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515. In New Hampshire, the witness will be disqualified if the laws of his own state make him so, and the crime, if committed in New Hampshire, would have had the same effect; Chase v. Blodgett, 10 N. H. 22. In Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44; and Uhl v. Com., 6 Gratt. (Va.) 706; the record is rejected altogether; but not so in State v. Candler, 10 N. C. 393. He is disqualified in Nevada; State v. Foley, 15 Nev. 64, 37 Am. Rep. 458. See Whart. Conf. Laws §§ 107, 769. A conviction and sentence can have no such effect beyond the limits of the state in which the judgment is rendered unless the statute of another state give such effect to them; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429. If a statute permits a defendant in a criminal case to testify on his own behalf, he may do so, though infamous, but not against a co-defendant; State v. Peterson, 35 S. C. 279, 14 S. E. 617.

When it is said that all persons may be witnesses, it is not meant that all persons may testify in all cases. The testimony of such as are generally qualified and competent under other circumstances or as to other matters is sometimes excluded out of regard to their special relations to the cause in issue or the parties, or from some other circumstances not working a general disqualification.

Parties to the record were not competent witnesses, at common law, for themselves or their co-suitors. Nor were they compellable to testify for the adverse party; 7 Bingh. 395; Frear v. Evertson, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 142; but they were competent to do so; although one of several co-suitors could not thus become a witness for the adversaries without the consent of his associates; Bridges v. Armour, 5 How. (U. S.) 91, 12 L. Ed. 64; Evans v. Gibbs, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 405. Regard was had not merely to the nominal party to the record, but also to the real party in interest; and the former was not allowed to testify for the adverse side without the consent of the latter; Bradlee v. Neal, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 501; Frear v. Evertson, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 142. Persons who have no interest in the matter in controversy are not incompetent merely because parties to the action; Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227, 20 N. E. 763.

In some jurisdictions a party had the right of compelling his adversary to answer interrogatories under oath, as also to appear and testify. And, in equity, parties could require and use each other's testimony; and the answer of a defendant as to any matters stated in the bill was evidence in his own favor; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 329; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1528.

There were other exceptions to this rule. Cases where the adverse party had been guilty of some fraud or other tortious and unwarrantable act of intermeddling with the complainant's goods, and no other evidence than that of the complainant himself could be had of the amount of damage,—cases, also, where evidence of the parties was deemed essential to the purposes of public justice, no other evidence being attainable,—were exceptions; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 348; Herman v. Drinkwater, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 27.

On this same principle, persons directly interested in the result of the suit (see INTEREST), or in the record as an instrument of evidence, were excluded; and where the event of the cause turned upon a question which if decided one way would have rendered the party offered as a witness liable, while a contrary decision would have protected him, he was excluded; Stark. Ev. 1730. But to this rule, also, there were exceptions: Stark. Ev. 1731; of which the case of agents testifying as to matters to which their agency extended, forms one; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 386; so also an employé of a charitable institution; Appeal of Combs, 105 Pa. 155; or a taxpayer of a town to which a library was given by will; Hitchcock v. Shaw, 160 Mass. 140, 35 N. E. 671; were not incompetent for interest.

In both England and the United States, the rules of exclusion on the ground of interest have been abrogated. The object of the statutes has been to remove all artificial restraints to competency so as to put the parties upon a footing of equality with other witnesses, both in their admissibility to testify for themselves, and in their being compellable to testify for others; Texas v. Chiles, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 488, 22 L. Ed. 650. In most of the statutes, however, cases are excepted where a suit is brought by or against executors or administrators. In these cases where one of the parties to a contract is dead, the survivor is not permitted to testify; Karns v. Tanner, 66 Pa. 297; but this exception does not exclude directors or stockholders of a corporation which is a party, when the other party is dead; Gunn v. Thruston, 130 Mo. 339, 32 S. W. 654; Ullman v. Loan Co., 96 Ga. 625, 24 S. E. 409. But the exception does not make the surviving party incompetent, it only precludes him from testifying to communications with the deceased; Kelton v. Hill, 59 Me. 259; Stonecipher v. Hall, 64 Ill. 121. The test is the nature of the communications. The witness cannot testify to personal communications with the deceased party; Hatch v. Peugnet, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 189; Richardson v. Haney, 76 Ia. 101, 40 N. W. 115; Blackwell's D. T. Co. v. McElwee, 100 N. C. 150, 5 S. E. 907; but it has been held that if documents can be proved by independent evidence, the case is not within the exception; Moulton v. Mason, 21 Mich. 364. A husband may testify to conversation between his wife and the decedent, in which he took no part; Sullivan v. Latimer, 38 S. C. 158, 17 S. E. 701; but one who is interested in the contest of a will cannot testify as to conversations between testator and another in which the witness took no part; In re Palmateer's Will, 78 Hun 43, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1062. If the suit is brought against co-defendants, of whom only one is dead, when the contract was made either with the living co-defendants, or with the living and dead concurrently, the case is not within the exception; Doody v. Pierce, 9 Allen (Mass.) 144; Hubbell v. Hubbell, 22 Ohio St. 208. But where an action was brought against three partners, one of whom subsequently died, and his executors were substituted, the plaintiff is not a competent witness as to anything which occurred during the lifetime of the deceased partner although the latter may have taken no part in the contract on which the action was brought; Brady v. Reed, 87 Pa. 111. In an action by a surviving partner on a book account, the defendant is competent to testify to payments by him to the deceased partner; Wood v. Stewart, 9 Ind. App. 321, 36 N. E. 658.

Under these statutes, which confine the exception to suits against executors and administrators, the death of an agent of one party, through whom the contract was made, does not prevent the surviving party from testifying to the contract; American L. I. & T. Co. v. Shultz, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 665; but under statutes which exclude the surviving party to a contract, the death of a contracting agent excludes the surviving party who contracted with him; Cornell v. Barnes, 26 Wis. 473. See Sprague v. Bond, 113 N. C. 551, 18 S. E. 701. An agent who makes a sale of goods for his principal is not incompetent to testify to the circumstances of the transaction because of the death of the buyer; Shaub v. Smith, 50 Ohio St. 648, 35 N. E. 503. Unless the exception expressly covers all suits against executors and administrators, it does not exclude the plaintiff from proving matters occurring since the death of the party of whom the defendant is executor; Brown v. Brown, 48 N. H. 90. The exception in statutes where the exclusion relates only to the surviving party in contracts does not include torts; Entwhistle v. Feigener, 60 Mo. 214. When the deposition of a deceased party afterwards is put in evidence, the other party being still living, such other party should be admitted as a witness in reply; Monroe v. Napier, 52 Ga. 385; Stone v. Hunt, 114 Mo. 66, 21 S. W. 454. See, generally, Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024, 12 L. R. A. 836. As to exclusion of testimony against a decedent on the ground of interest, see Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024, 12 L. R. A. 836.

Husband and wife were excluded at common law from giving testimony for or against each other when either was a party to the suit or interested. And neither was competent to prove a fact directly tending to criminate the other. This rule was founded partly on their identity of interest, and partly, perhaps chiefly, on the policy of the law which aims to protect the confidence between man and wife that is essential to the comfort of the married relation, and, through that, to the good order of society. Whether or not the disability of husband or wife may be removed by consent of the other is matter of dispute; 3 C. & P. 551; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 340. In England, by stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, consent removes the disability; Whart. Ev. § 428. It is not removed by death, nor by the dissolution of the marriage relation, so far as respects information derived confidentially during marital intercourse; Ryan v. Follansbee, 47 N. H. 100. She may, however, testify as to matters which transpired subsequently to a divorce; Long v. State, 86 Ala. 36, 5 South. 443.

The wife of a member of a partnership is not competent as a witness in a suit against the partnership; McEwen v. Shannon & Co., 64 Vt. 583, 25 Atl. 661.

The rule is not ordinarily affected by statutes permitting husband or wife to testify for or against each other; People v. Reagle, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 527; nor does the statute as to the evidence of parties in interest generally affect their common-law incapacity to testify; Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 452, 21 L. Ed. 779.

Some exceptions to this rule; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 343; are admitted out of necessity for the protection of husband and wife against each other, and for the sake of public justice, as in prosecutions for violence committed by either of them upon the other. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 334; Ry. & M. 253; Bassett v. U. S., 137 U. S. 496, 11 Sup. Ct. 165, 34 L. Ed. 762. It is not error to receive the testimony of the wife of a person on trial for murder by consent of his counsel if she is advised by the court that she need not testify unless she desires to do so; Benson v. U. S., 146 U. S. 325, 13 Sup. Ct. 60, 36 L. Ed. 991.

Parties to negotiable instruments are, in some jurisdictions held incompetent to invalidate these instruments to which they have given currency by their signature. Such seems to be the prevailing, but not universal, rule in the United States; while in England such testimony is admitted, the objection going only to its credibility; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 383; 1 Term 296; Dickinson v. Dickinson, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 471; Harding v. Mott, 20 Pa. 469; Pecker v. Sawyer, 24 Vt. 459.

And, finally, there are certain confidential communications; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 236; to which the recipient of them, from general considerations of policy, is not allowed to testify. But the privilege may be waived by the party entitled to claim the benefit of it, as when two physicians were in consultation, a party by calling one waives the right to object to the testimony of the other against her; Morris v. Ry. Co., 148 N. Y. 88, 42 N. E. 410, 51 Am. St. Rep. 675. See CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

Judges are not compellable to testify to what occurred in their consultations; but they may be examined as to what took place before them on the trial in order to identify the case, or prove the testimony of a witness; 1 Whart. Ev. § 600; see Huff v. Bennett, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 120; but in England there is a doubt as to the latter proposition; Steph. Ev. art. 111; and it is said that in England a barrister cannot be compelled to testify as to what he said in court in his character of barrister; id.

Whether attorneys and counsel are disqualified as witnesses in a trial in which they participate has always been a question of difficulty, and it can hardly be said that it is settled upon any principle. Of course, the primary disqualification of interest has become obsolete by the general abolition of rules for the disqualification of witnesses upon that ground. There remains, however, an objection which is based upon public policy and this has been generally recognized and frequently expressed by courts as well as by members of the bar. Strong expressions of disapproval of the practice by courts are found, by Lewis, J., in Mishler v. Baumgardner, 4 Clark (Pa.) 266, where he says that in 25 years experience he has seldom known an attorney received as a witness for his client on a disputed point without loss of reputation, and to some extent, reproach upon the profession; by Sanford, J., in Little v. Keon, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 4, who, while conceding that there is no legal objection, assumes that the practice will be confined to case of unforeseen necessity, and that the evil will work its own cure by the loss in character of those who indulge in it; by Lawrence, J., in Ross v. Demoss, 45 Ill. 447, who considers that one occupying the attitude of both witness and attorney subjects his testimony to criticism if not suspicion; and in an anonymous case, 5 West L. J. 457, the court said that the exclusion should rest upon peculiar grounds, "not because his integrity may be exposed to temptation, but because it will be exposed to suspicion." Porter, J., in Cox v. Williams, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 139, approved a prohibitory statute on the subject as being doubtless based upon the idea that the attorney could not be safely entrusted to testify for his client because of his natural identification with him in feeling if not in interest. The result of the controversy on the subject is stated to be that the force of the objection has been realized, but the courts have declined as a general thing to lay down a prohibitory rule; Wigm. Ev. § 1911. It is, however, suggested that this is due doubtless to the fact that the evil would arise rather from an inveterate custom than from casual instances, and that the strong expressions of the court upon the subject have sufficed to prevent a general indulgence in the practice.

Another reason sometimes given for the exclusion of counsel as a witness is that, if he afterward argues the case, his statements as a witness and his arguments as counsel might be confused in the minds of the jurors and the latter thus acquire undue weight; this objection was strongly stated in argument in 4 Dowl. & L. 395. But this rule was not followed in England, and those cases were discredited in 1 E. & B. 11, where the right of a party to testify and to argue his own case was held not inconsistent, though the practice was disapproved as "contrary to good taste and good feeling" and "revolting to the minds of the jury." This rule was not expressly but inferentially applied to counsel as witness, but the court said: "If the practice does gain ground to a degree seriously injurious, the judges have power to make a rule against it." In Canada, counsel was not allowed as witness in 3 Kerr 398; 4 U. C. Q. B. 96; but it was permitted in 2 Pugs. 462, with a disapproval of the case in 3 Kerr 398, and also with the expression of an opinion that the proceeding was indecent and should be discouraged, and in 39 U. C. Q. B. 452, the case in 4 U. C. Q. B. 96, and one which followed it (id. 189), were overruled and the testimony of counsel admitted, though the proceeding was characterized as not "desirable." In some American cases the testimony was held to be admissible; Madden v. Farmer, 7 La. Ann. 580 (but not as full proof); Potter v. Ware, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 519 (only proper in rare cases). In Folly v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 139; Tullock v. Cunningham, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 256, and Caniff v. Myers, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 246, he was held competent to prove his power of attorney. In Mott v. Bernard, 97 Mo. App. 265, 70 S. W. 1093, he was allowed to prove a paper even where there was a contingent fee. So in Abbott v. Stribley, 6 Ia. 191, he was held competent to prove a copy of a paper and the loss of the original, and in Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Fleming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420, he was held competent, but not compellable, under a statute to that effect. In Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Andrews, 41 Kan. 370, 21 Pac. 276, he was held competent, though acting upon a contingent fee, and in Hall v. Renfro, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 51, he was held competent, but the practice was apparently disapproved. In some cases the attorney is held not to be in any case a competent witness for his client; Pritchard v. Henderson, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 128, 50 Atl. 217, where even one who was in his office and helped in the preparation of the case was incompetent; also 72 Me. 566, and 6 N. H. 580, in both of which there was a general rule of court forbidding the practice, and in Voss v. Bender, 32 Wash. 566, 73 Pac. 697, such a rule, being challenged, was held proper. In other cases it has been held that there was no law to prevent such testimony, but the practice was almost in every case disapproved; Thresher v. Bank, 68 Conn. 201; State v. Seymour, 7 Idaho 548, 63 Pac. 1036; Wilkinson v. People, 226 Ill. 135, 80 N. E. 699; Frear v. Drinker, 8 Pa. 520 (no law to forbid it, but a "highly indecent practice"); Bell v. Bell, 12 Pa. 235 (competent, though it is "commendable delicacy to withdraw from argument"); but in a later case the exclusion of the attorney as a witness was held reversible error, and it was said that "the question may therefore be considered as settled in England and Pennsylvania and also in Massachusetts," citing Potter v. Ware, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 519; Follansbee v. Walker, 72 Pa. 228, 13 Am. Rep. 671; and still later, where the witness was admitted, the court said that counsel "who has a just sense of propriety" should decline unless under absolute necessity, but there is no interest or policy of law to exclude him, and absolute duty may sometimes be disclosed which he cannot disregard; Perry v. Dicken, 105 Pa. 83, 51 Am. Rep. 181; Mealer v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. Rep. 102, 22 S. W. 142 (counsel was not disqualified); but in Spencer v. Kinnard, 12 Tex.

180, such testimony was said to be sometimes necessary, but only to be tolerated by the courts in "cases of pressing necessity." Other cases are Reid v. Colcock, 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 592, 9 Am. Dec. 729 (not disqualified, but "a matter of much delicacy"); McLaren v. Gillispie, 19 Utah 137, 56 Pac. 680 (competent, but he should not be "called unless indispensable and he should then withdraw from the case if possible with safety to the client's interest"); Moats v. Rymer, 18 W. Va. 642, 41 Am. Rep. 703 (necessary in some extreme cases, but ordinarily much to be regretted); Hardtke v. State, 67 Wis. 552, 30 N. W. 723 (where counsel for prosecution testified to an admission by defendant, "the propriety" of it was "very questionable"). In French v. Hall, 119 U. S. 152, 7 Sup. Ct. 170, 30 L. Ed. 375, it was said that while there is nothing in the policy of the law, as there is no positive enactment, to hinder the attorney from testifying, "in some cases it may be unseemly."

Persons in possession of secrets of state or matters the disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the public interests, are not allowed to testify thereto; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 250. See SECRETS OF STATE.

Grand jurors and persons present before a grand jury; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 252; are not permitted to testify to the proceedings had before that body; 1 Phill. Ev. 177. See CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

THE MEANS OF SECURING THE ATTENDANCE AND TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES. In general, all persons who are competent may be compelled to attend and testify.

A statute providing that judges shall appoint expert witnesses changes the character of criminal procedure and endangers the constitutional safeguards by giving undue weight to the testimony of the experts appointed by the court and the statute is invalid; People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148, 129 N. W. 199, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 688.

As to compelling expert witnesses to attend, see EXPERTS.

Provision has been made by statute, in most if not in all of the states, for the case of persons living at an inconvenient distance from the place of trial, as well as for the case of such as are sick or about to leave the state, or otherwise likely to be put to great inconvenience by a compulsory attendance, and also for such as are already in a foreign jurisdiction, by allowing the taking of their deposition in writing before some magistrate or officer near at hand, to be read at the trial; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 321.

In criminal cases, all persons are compellable to appear and testify without any previous tender of their fees; and any bystander in court may be compelled to testify without a previous summons or tender of fees; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 311; Ex parte Cham- berlain, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 49; Robinson v. Trull, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 249.

Where a witness before a police court was ordered to give surety for his appearance at the trial, and in default thereof was detained in jail for eighty days, it was held that he was entitled to witness fees as "in attendance" upon the court for that period; Kirke v. Strafford Co., 76 N. H. 181, 80 Atl. 1046, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 807.

But in civil suits which are between man and man, a party is allowed to compel the attendance and testimony of a witness only on condition of a prepayment or tender of his fees for travel to the place of trial, and for one day's attendance there. This seems, as a general rule, to be the least that can be tendered; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 310; Howland v. Lenox, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 311; White v. Judd, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 293; Hutchins v. State, 8 Mo. 288; Gunnison v. Gunnison, 41 N. H. 121, 77 Am. Dec. 764. See Bonner v. People, 40 Ill. App. 628; and a witness who attends without the payment or tender of his fees, waives their tender or payment in advance; Rozek v. Redzinski, 87 Wis. 525, 58 N. W. 262. In the courts of the United States, as well as in England, a witness may require his fees for travel both ways; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 310; 6 Taunt. 88. And in civil cases a person cannot be compelled to testify, although he chance to be present in court, unless regularly summoned and tendered his fees; 1 Phill. Ev. 338. Being in attendance in obedience to a summons, he may, nevertheless, refuse to testify from day to day, unless his daily fees are paid or tendered; 2 Phill. Ev. § 376. Whether or not he may refuse to attend from day to day without the prepayment or tender of his daily fees, is a matter about which there are different decisions; Mattock v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 493; 14 East 15.

A witness may maintain an action against the party summoning him for his fees; Stark. Ev. 1727. Federal courts allow mileage and per diem fees, although no subpoena was issued; Pinson v. R. Co., 54 Fed. 464; Eastman v. Sherry, 37 Fed. 844. As to additional compensation to experts, see EXPERTS; Dixon v. People, 168 Ill. 179, 48 N. E. 108, 39 L. R. A. 116.

Witnesses are also compellable to produce papers in their custody to which either party has a right as evidence, on the same principle that they are required to testify what they know; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 558. See DISCOVERY; SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM.

This rule as to title-deeds appears to be peculiar to England. In this country, it is said that a witness, not a party, may be compelled to produce any of his private papers. Whether the court, on inspection, will require them to be put in evidence may be a matter of discretion; Steph. Ev. art. 118, n. See Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray (Mass.) 226, 74 Am. Dec. 676.

The attendance of witnesses is ordinarily procured by means of a writ of subpoena; sometimes, when they are in custody, by a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum; and sometimes, in criminal cases, by their own recognizance, either with or without sureties; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 309, 312. If a witness disobey the summons, process of attachment for contempt will issue to enforce his attendance and an action also lies against him at common law; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 319; 6 C. B. 703.

Nor can any third party intervene to prevent the attendance of a witness. Neither can he take advantage of a witness's attendance at the place of trial, to arrest him on civil process. See PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST.

Where a non-resident is in attendance on a trial in a circuit court of the United States as a witness in a case therein pending, he is privileged from service of summons in a civil action issued from a state court of such state, and the privilege extends to a reasonable time after the disposition of the cause to enable him to return to his own state; Atchison v. Morris, 11 Fed. 582; see In re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713; and this is the general rule.

As to the EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES. In the common-law courts, examinations are had viva voce, in open court, by questions and answers. The same course is now adopted to a great extent in equity and admiralty courts, and other proceedings according to the forms of the civil law. But a usual method of examining in these last-named courts, as also in the court of claims, is by deposition taken in writing out of court; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1527; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 251.

A trial court may ask a witness such questions as it deems necessary for its own information and that of the jury; State v. Nickens, 122 Mo. 607, 27 S. W. 339.

The court permitted the state to ask an extremely ill witness a single question and no more; accused was not refused a cross-examination, but it was held that he could not be compelled to take the risk to the witness of doing so, with perhaps fatal result, and a conviction was reversed; Wray v. State, 154 Ala. 36, 45 South. 697, 129 Am. St. Rep. 18, 16 Ann. Cas. 362.

On motion, in civil and criminal cases, witnesses will generally be excluded from the court-room while others are undergoing examination in the same case; this, however, is not matter of right, but within the discretion of the court; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 432; 4 C. & P. 585; Nelson v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 237. This may extend to a medical expert witness; Paul v. Ry. Co., 82 Mo. App. 500; it is too late if the request be made after some testimony has been received; Pritchard v. Henderson, 3 Pennewill 128, 50 Atl. 217; some of the cases seem to regard exclusion as the usual practice; Colbert v. Garrett, 57 S. W. 853; Timberlake v. Thayer, 76 Miss. 76, 23 South. 767; Sharpton v.

Ry. Co., 72 S. C. 162, 51 S. E. 553. If a witness violates an order of exclusion, the party calling him will not be deprived of his evidence; Murray v. Allerton, 3 Neb. (Unoff.) 291, 91 N. W. 518; it affects only his credit; Ferguson v. Brown, 75 Miss. 214, 21 South. 603.

Witnesses are required to testify from their own knowledge and recollection. Yet they are permitted to refresh their memory by reference, while on the stand, to papers written at or very near the time of the transaction in question. See MEMORANDUM.

Being once in attendance, a witness may, in general, be compelled to answer all questions that may legally be put to him. See EVIDENCE. Yet there are exceptions to this rule. He is not compellable where the answer would have a tendency to expose him to a penal liability or any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge or a forfeiture of his estate; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 451. See PRIVILEGE; INCRIMINATION.

The court, it is said, decides as to the tendency of the answer, and will instruct the witness as to his privilege; Com. v. Shaw, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 594, 50 Am. Dec. 813; Close v. Olney, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 319. It has been held that the question whether an answer would have this tendency is to be determined by the oath of the witness; 17 Jur. 393. And in point of fact, from the necessity of the case, it is a matter which the witness may be said practically to decide for himself. The witness may answer if he chooses; and if he do answer after having been advised of his privileges, he must answer in full; and his answer may be used in evidence against him for all purposes; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 252, 21 Am. Dec. 122; Foster v. Pierce, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 437, 59 Am. Dec. 152; Chamberlain v. Willson, 12 Vt. 491, 36 Am. Dec. 356. It is held that a defendant who voluntarily offers himself as a witness on his own behalf waives this privilege of refusing to answer a question because it may tend to criminate him; State v. Thomas, 98 N. C. 599, 4 S. E. 518, 2 Am. St. Rep. 351. The objection that the answer may tend to criminate can only be made by the witness himself; Lothrop v. Roberts, 16 Colo. 250, 27 Pac. 698.

Whether a witness be compellable to answer to his own degradation or infamy is a point as to which some distinctions are to be taken; a witness cannot refuse to testify simply because his answer would tend to disgrace him; it must be seen to have that effect certainly and directly; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 456. He cannot, it would seem, refuse to give testimony which is material and relevant to the issue, for the reason that it would disgrace him, or expose him to civil liability. A witness is not the sole judge whether a question put to him, if answered, may tend to criminate him. The court must see from the circumstances of the case that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer, in order to excuse him. But if the fact once appear that the witness is in danger, great latitude will be allowed him in judging for himself the effect of any particular question; 26 Ch. Div. 294; 1 Mood. & M. 108; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 250, 21 Am. Dec. 122; State v. Patterson, 24 N. C. 346, 38 Am. Dec. 699. See In re Taylor, 8 Misc. 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 500. A witness may, however, be compelled to testify concerning his criminal acts, when prosecution therefor is barred; Childs v. Merrill, 66 Vt. 302, 29 Atl. 532; but only after it is shown affirmatively that no prosecution is pending against him; Lamson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 781.

But it would appear that he may refuse where the question (being one put on cross-examination) is not relevant and material, and does not in any way affect the credit of the witness; 3 Camp. 519; Clement v. Brooks, 13 N. H. 92; Smith v. Castles, 1 Gray (Mass.) 108. Whether a witness, when a question is put on the cross-examination which is not relevant and material to the issue, yet goes to affect his credit, will be protected in refusing to answer, simply on the ground that his answer would have a direct and certain effect to disgrace him, is a matter not clearly agreed upon. There is good reason to hold that a witness should be compelled to answer in such a case; 1 C. & P. 85; 2 Swanst. 216; 2 Camp. 637; Republica v. Gibbs, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 429. But the whole matter is one that is largely subject to the discretion of the courts; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 431, 449.

There seems no doubt that a witness is in no case competent to allege his own turpitude, or to give evidence which involves his own infamy or impeaches his most solemn acts, if he be otherwise qualified to testify; Stark. Ev. 1737.

As to the protection to witnesses against self-incrimination, see INCRIMINATION; PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS; SEARCH.

The course of examination is, first, a direct examination by the party producing the witness; then, if desired, a cross-examination by the adverse party, and a re-examination by the party producing; 1 Starkie, Ev. 123, 129. As to the direct examination, the general rule is that leading questions, i. e. such as suggest the answer expected or desired, cannot be put to a witness by the party producing him. But this rule has some reasonable exceptions; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 434. See St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Gotthelf, 35 Neb. 351, 53 N. W. 137; Huntsville B. L. & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Corpening, 97 Ala. 681, 12 South. 295; as, where a witness is hostile, leading questions are proper; Meixsell v. Feezor, 43 Ill. App. 180; McBride v. Wallace, 62 Mich. 451, 29 N. W. 75; also when the answers of a witness have taken by surprise the party calling him; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936. A court of error will not reverse because a leading question was allowed, Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Blair, 87 Pa. 124; Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl, 139 Ill. 644, 29 N. E. 714; Van Doren v. Jelliffe, 1 Misc. 354, 20 N. Y. Supp. 636; contra, Coon v. People, 99 Ill. 368, 39 Am. Rep. 28. As the allowance of leading questions is largely in the discretion of the trial judge, the appellate court will reverse for such cause only where there has been an abuse of discretion; Badder v. Keefer, 91 Mich. 611, 52 N. W. 60. See King v. R. Co., 75 Hun. 17, 26 N. Y. Supp. 973; Proper v. State, 85 Wis. 615, 55 N. W. 1035; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936; State v. Pugsley, 75 Ia. 742, 38 N. W. 498. See LEADING QUESTION.

Leading questions, however, are allowed upon cross-examination. See CROSS-EXAMINATION.

The right of re-examination extends to all topics upon which a witness has been cross-examined; the witness cannot at this stage, without permission of the court be questioned as to any new facts unconnected with the subject of the cross-examination and not tending to explain it; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 467.

But the court may in all cases permit a witness to be called either for further examination in chief, or for further cross-examination; Steph. Ev. art. 126; and may itself recall a witness at any stage of the proceedings, and examine or cross-examine, at its discretion; 6 C. & P. 653. If new matter is introduced on the re-examination, by permission of the court, the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter; Steph. Ev. art. 127.

As a general rule no one can impeach his own witness; Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137. This rule of the common law applies only to one who has given evidence material to the issue; 7 C. & P. 64; 2 Moo. & R. 273. It rests on the theory that a party calling the witness guarantees his veracity; Selover v. Bryant, 54 Minn. 434, 56 N. W. 58, 21 L. R. A. 418, 40 Am. St. Rep. 349; Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137; but this reasoning has been characterized as artificial and unsatisfactory; 13 Harv. L. Rev. 60, citing 11 Am. L. Rev. 261. But a witness summoned by one party and examined by him on an immaterial point may be impeached by him if called by the other party as a general witness; Fall Brook C. Co. v. Hewson, 158 N. Y. 150, 52 N. E. 1095, 43 L. R. A. 676, 70 Am. St. Rep. 466; though in that state the common law rule against impeaching one's own witness remains in force; Coulter v. Exp. Co., 56 N. Y. 585; but this rule has been largely altered by statute; 13 Harv. L. Rev. 60. So a party may contradict his own witness when not selected by him but by the law as necessary to prove the particular fact; Morris v.

Guffey, 188 Pa. 534, 41 Atl. 731; Crocker v. Agenbroad, 122 Ind. 587, 24 N. E. 169; and a party is sometimes, in cases of hardship, permitted to contradict him by other testimony; 1 Stark. Ev. 147; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 442. And a party bona fide surprised at the unexpected testimony of his witness may be permitted to interrogate him, as to previous declarations alleged to have been made by him inconsistent with his testimony, the object being to prove the witness's recollection, and to lead him, if mistaken, to review what he has said; 1 Whart. Ev. § 549. See infra.

"Adverse" witness, in the sense of the statutes allowing contradiction by the party calling him, means really "hostile" and not merely "unfavorable"; Fisher v. Hart, 30 W. N. C. (Pa.) 208; he must have "proved adverse in the sense of showing a mind hostile to the party calling him"; 5 C. B. N. S. 786, 788, where the subject is discussed at length by all the judges, with the curious result that Cockburn, C. J., having decided as above stated, and his associates having affirmed his decision, he himself suggested a doubt arising out of the discussion, and concluded by saying that "without, therefore, actually dissenting from it, it is enough to say that I do not wholly concur in it." In L. R. 1 P. & D. 70, counsel said, in objecting to evidence contradicting a witness from the side which called him (a necessary witness—to a will): "He is not a hostile witness, for he gave his evidence fairly and with no animus against the plaintiff. He is an adverse witness, for he did not give the evidence which the plaintiff wished him to give; but that does not entitle the plaintiff to contradict him on a collateral matter." The court said: "The counsel is right in the distinction he draws between an adverse and hostile witness. A hostile witness is a witness who, from the manner in which he gives his evidence, shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the court." See Tayl. Ev. (p. 1132 of 3d ed.) and § 1288. See also cases cited in 1 Rosc. N. P. Ev. 174.

The opinion of the trial judge as to whether a witness is hostile is conclusive; 5 C. B. (N. S.) 786; 16 Q. B. D. 681; where Coleridge, C. J., refused to look at an affidavit made by a witness to show that he was hostile, being of opinion that there was nothing in his demeanor or the way he gave his evidence to show that he was hostile, and this view was affirmed by full bench, on motion for new trial.

A report of an employé to his master may be called for to impeach the employer as witness; Freel v. Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 40, 31 Pac. 730.

The credit of an adversary's witness may be impeached by cross-examination, or by general evidence affecting his reputation for veracity (but not by evidence of particular facts which otherwise are irrelevant and im-material), and by evidence of his having said or done something before which is inconsistent with his evidence at the trial. Also, of course, he may be contradicted by other testimony; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 401. But he cannot be contradicted as to collateral and irrelevant matter on which he was cross-examined; Kuhns v. Ry. Co., 76 Ia. 67, 40 N. W. 92; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Townsend, 39 Kan. 115, 17 Pac. 804; State v. Ballard, 97 N. C. 443, 1 S. E. 685; Jones v. Lumber Co., 58 Ark. 125, 23 S. W. 679. In some states evidence may be given of a witness' general reputation (q. v.); People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 257, 21 Am. Dec. 122; State v. Boswell, 13 N. C. 209; State v. Raven, 115 Mo. 419, 22 S. W. 376. But the testimony of a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular crimes; Lowery v. State, 98 Ala. 45, 13 South. 498; nor can a woman be impeached by evidence of her lack of chastity; People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630, 54 N. W. 488. See IMPEACHMENT.

In order to test a witness' accuracy, veracity, or credibility, he may be cross-examined as to "his relations to either of the parties or the subject-matter in dispute; his interest, his motives, his way of life, his associations, his habits, his prejudices, his physical defects and infirmities, his mental idiosyncrasies, if they affect his capacity; his means of knowledge and powers of discernment, memory, and description—may all be revelant." May's Steph. Ev. art. 129. But it has been said that questions otherwise irrelevant cannot be asked for the purpose of testing his moral sense; Com. v. Shaw, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 593. He cannot be discredited by asking him if he has not been impeached as a witness upon the trial of another action; Cockrill v. Hall, 76 Cal. 192, 18 Pac. 318.

The essence of the right to refresh the memory of a witness by reference to a writing is that the matter so used be contemporaneous with the occurrence testified to; Putnam v. U. S., 162 U. S. 687, 16 Sup. Ct. 923, 40 L. Ed. 1118; Maxwell v. Wilkinson, 113 U. S. 656, 5 Sup. Ct. 691, 28 L. Ed. 1037, in both of which the cases are collected. In the case first cited, a report of testimony given four months after the occurrence was not so contemporaneous and could not be used. In this case the exception, held by some courts to exist in the case of surprise to the party calling the witness, is discussed at length and the authorities critically examined and the exception disapproved. See note on use of paper to refresh memory; Republic F. Ins. Co. v. Weide, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 375, 20 L. Ed. 894. See MEMORANDUM.

Generally, where proof is to be offered that a witness has said or done something inconsistent with his evidence, a foundation must first be laid.

See CROSS-EXAMINATION.

In England and Massachusetts, by statute, the same course may be taken with a witness on his examination in chief, if the judge is of opinion that he is hostile to the party by whom he was called, and permits the question. Apart from statute such evidence has not generally been considered as admissible; May's Steph. Ev. art. 131; Coulter v. Express Co., 56 N. Y. 585; People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384; if the sole effect is to discredit; but if the purpose be to show the witness he is in error, it is admissible; 15 Ad. & E. 378; Bullard v. Pearsall, 53 N. Y. 230.

Proof of declarations made by a witness out of court in corroboration of the testimony given by him at the trial is, as a general rule, inadmissible. See Fallin v. State, 83 Ala. 5, 3 South. 525; Thurmond v. State, 27 Tex. App. 347, 11 S. W. 451. But when a witness is charged with having been actuated by some motive prompting him to a false statement, or with having fabricated his story, it may be shown that he made similar statements before any such motive existed; Conrad v. Griffey, 11 How. (U. S.) 480, 13 L. Ed. 779; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 15 Pac. 307, 5 Am. St. Rep. 413. See State v. Rowe, 98 N. C. 629, 4 S. E. 506.

Evidence of general good reputation may be offered to support a witness, whenever his credit is impeached, either by general evidence affecting his reputation, or on cross-examination; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 469; Pulliam v. Cantrell, 77 Ga. 563, 3 S. E. 280.

A party cannot attack the credibility of his own witness in the case, even after he has become the witness of his adversary; White v. State, 87 Ala. 24, 5 South. 829; except where the witness does not testify as he did on the preparatory examination and his testimony is unfavorable; National Syrup Co. v. Carlson, 42 Ill. App. 178; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170; the contradiction of such witness may be allowed; Hollingsworth v. State, 79 Ga. 605, 4 S. E. 560; Chester v. Wilhelm, 111 N. C. 314, 16 S. E. 229.

Under statutes forbidding comment upon the failure of the accused to testify in his own behalf or providing that it shall not create any presumption against him, it was held error for either court or counsel to refer to it; Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 213; or for the judge to permit, against objection, allusion to it by the prosecution; Crandall v. People, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 309; but not where the reference was in a retort by counsel to an interruption of his argument by the prisoner; Calkins v. State, 18 Ohio St. 366, 98 Am. Dec. 121; and see People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522; but the error resulting from such comments by the district attorney was held to be cured by the court calling attention to the provisions of the statute; People v. Priori, 164 N. Y. 459, 58 N. E. 668. Though in another case where the prosecuting attorney made such comments, and the court subsequently directed the jury to disregard them, it was held reversible error; State v. Marceaux, 50 La. Ann. 1137, 24 South. 611; otherwise, where the court made such comments; [1899] 1 Q. B. D. 77; State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574. The failure of a federal court to condemn emphatically such comment by a prosecuting officer was held reversible error under the federal statute of the same character; Wilson v. U. S., 149 U. S. 60, 13 Sup. Ct. 765, 37 L. Ed. 650.

The failure to produce a witness equally accessible to both sides cannot be made the subject of unfavorable comment by the prosecuting officer; Brown v. State, 98 Miss. 786, 54 South. 305, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811, and note collecting the cases on this point and also as to comments on character and failure to prove it. But the rule was held inapplicable in the case of a railroad failing to produce its engineer who caused the accident; Story v. R. R., 70 N. H. 364, 48 Atl. 288.

MODIFICATIONS OF THE COMMON LAW. There have been various important modifications of the common law as to witnesses, in respect of their competency and otherwise, as well in England as in this country. A general and strong tendency is manifest to do away with the old objections to the competency of witnesses, and to admit all persons to testify that can furnish any relevant and material evidence,—leaving these to judge of the credibility of the witnesses. Such is the law and practice in most English and American jurisdictions. The statutes vary in their terms, and the decisions should be read in connection with them.

As to the proper question to be put to a medical expert, see MEDICAL EVIDENCE.

A New York statute authorizing the granting of a subpoena to compel a witness to appear in a criminal trial in another state is unconstitutional, as depriving a person of liberty without due process of law; In re Com. of Pa., 45 Misc. 46, 90 N. Y. Supp. 808, where it was said that the effect of the statute would be to deprive a person of his liberty and banish him temporarily from the state without a hearing, and not being passed in the interest of New York, cannot be treated as an exercise of the police power.

WITTINGLY. Knowingly; designedly. Harrington v. State, 54 Miss. 493; Osborne v. Warren, 44 Conn. 359.

WITWORD. A legally allowed claim, more especially the right to vindicate ownership or possession by one's affirmation under oath. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. in 11th Cent. 9.

WOLF'S HEAD. See CAPUT LUPINUM.

WOMEN. All the females of the human species. All such females who have arrived at the age of puberty. Mulieris appellatione etiam virgo viri potens continetur. Dig. 50. 16. 13.

A woman by the fact of marriage invests herself with the nationality of her husband; 13 Op. Att. Gen. 128; 14 id. 402; contra, 2 Knapp, P. C. 364. See DOMICIL.

Single or unmarried women have all the civil rights of men; they may, therefore, enter into contracts or engagements; sue and be sued; be trustees or guardians; they may be witnesses, and may for that purpose attest all papers; but they were, generally, not possessed of any political power; and were not as citizens eligible to public office or entitled to vote; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627.

In Finland, Norway and Iceland all women have the full parliamentary vote on the same terms as men. In Sweden all women have the municipal or communal suffrage on the same terms as men, and in Denmark women who pay taxes or whose husbands have the municipal vote.

In Australia, New Zealand and the Isle of Man women have full parliamentary suffrage. England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales have given women municipal suffrage on the same terms as men. In eight provinces of Canada taxpaying widows and spinsters have the municipal franchise, and in Nova Scotia married women whose husbands are not voters are included.

In the United States women have the full suffrage in Wyoming since 1869, in Colorado since 1893, in Utah and Idaho since 1896, in Washington since 1910, in California since 1911, in Kansas, Oregon and Arizona since 1912, and in Alaska since 1913. The Illinois constitution permits the legislature to confer suffrage for any official whose election is not provided for in the constitution. An act passed thereunder which has been held constitutional confers it on women.

School suffrage was granted to certain classes of women subject to various restrictions in Kentucky, 1838; Kansas, 1861; Michigan and Minnesota, 1875; Colorado, 1876; New Hampshire, 1878; Massachusetts, 1879; Vermont, New York and Mississippi, 1880; Nebraska, 1883; Montana, New Jersey, North Dakota, South Dakota and Arizona, 1887; Oklahoma, 1890; Connecticut, 1893; Ohio, 1894; Delaware, 1898; Wisconsin, 1900.

Limited suffrage other than school is given to women taxpayers in Montana since 1897 on questions of special taxation and for school trustees; in Iowa, 1894, on issuing bonds or increasing the tax levy; in Minnesota, 1898, for library trustees (in addition to school officers since 1875). In New York, 1901, taxpaying women of towns and villages may vote upon propositions for special taxation, and in 1910 the law was amended to include the issuing of bonds. Women of towns and villages who have children of school age or who are assessed for over $50 may vote at district school meetings. In Michigan in 1893 women were given the municipal franchise by act of the legislature which was held unconstitutional. In 1903, through a new constitution, taxpaying women were given a vote on all questions of special taxation, and the granting of franchises. Kansas in 1861 came into the Union with school suffrage in her constitution; in 1887 she gave women municipal suffrage; in 1912 full suffrage. In 1869 Wyoming, then just organized as a territory, enfranchised women, and after twenty years a convention which met to form a constitution for statehood adopted as its first clause: "Equal political rights for all male and female citizens."

A woman was held not eligible as a candidate for admission to the bar; Bebb v. Law Society, 50 W. N. (Eng.) 355. They have never been admitted as solicitors in England, though the Solicitor's Act does not prevent; Odgers, C. L. 1431.

Some American courts, even without positive statutory enactment, have held women qualified to practice as attorneys; In re Leach, 134 Ind. 665, 34 N. E. 641, 21 L. R. A. 701; In re Thomas, 16 Colo. 441, 27 Pac. 707, 13 L. R. A. 538. Others have reached this result only after such enactments; Mass. Acts, 1882, c. 139; In re Robinson's Case, 131 Mass. 376. By statute women have been granted the right to practice before the United States Supreme Court; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901 (Supp. 1911), § 255. See ATTORNEY.

If the constitution of a state prevents a woman from being a member of a school committee, it must be by force of some express provision thereof or else by necessary implication arising from the nature of the office itself; 115 Mass. 602; and where an office is created and regulated by statute and the constitution confers upon the general court authority to name and settle all civil officers within the commonwealth, the election and constitution of whom are not otherwise provided for in the constitution, a woman may fill a local office of an administrative character; id.; but see Atchison v. Lucas, 83 Ky. 464, where it was held that when a woman is excluded from the right to vote for any particular office, she is also excluded from the right to hold the office voted for. In California they may pursue any lawful business or profession; Cons. of Cal. art. 20, § 18. In Illinois, a woman may be a master in chancery; Schuchardt v. People, 99 Ill. 501, 39 Am. Rep. 34; and in Iowa, a county recorder; Laws of 1880, c. 40. In Colorado, a deputy clerk; Jeffries v. Harrington, 11 Colo. 191, 17 Pac. 505; a policeman; In re Dugan, 19 Co. Ct. (Pa.) 657; a county clerk; State v. Hostetter, 137 Mo. 636, 39 S. W. 270, 38 L. R. A. 208, 59 Am. St. Rep. 515.

It has been held that a woman may not be a justice of the peace; Opinion of Justices, 62 Me. 596; or a jailer; Atchison v. Lucas, 83 Ky. 457; or a superintendent of a medical hospital for the insane; State v. Wil- son, 29 Ohio St. 347; or a member of a board of workhouse directors; State v. Rust, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 329 (contra, In re Opinion of Justices, 136 Mass. 578); or county superintendent of schools; State v. Stevens, 29 Or. 464, 44 Pac. 898; (contra, Russell v. Guptill, 13 Wash. 360, 43 Pac. 340; Wright v. Noell, 16 Kan. 601); or school director; State v. McSpaden, 137 Mo. 628, 39 S. W. 81; or a notary public; State v. Adams, 58 Ohio St. 612, 51 N. E. 135, 11 L. R. A. 727, 65 Am. St. Rep. 792; Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 586, 23 N. E. 850, 6 L. R. A. 842. In England a woman may be elected to the office of sexton; 7 Mod. 263; but a woman is not entitled to vote at elections for members of parliament; 38 L. J. C. P. 25.

See MARRIED WOMAN; NATURALIZATION.

Anne, Countess of Penbrooke, Dorset and Montgomery, held the office of hereditary sheriff, and exercised it in person. At the assizes at Appleby she sat with the judges on the bench; Co. Litt. 326 a; but it is said to be very improbable that she habitually discharged the duties of the office in person, as she could not have done so without violating the well-settled law; 4 Craik's Romance of the Peerage 162.

In 1673, Lady Braughton held the office of the keeper of the gatehouse prison; Rex v. Braughton, 3 Keb. 32. On the authority of the Braughton Case, it was held in 3 Salk. 2, that the keeper of the workhouse at Chelmsford, being a woman, was not disqualified on account of her sex. The court said "she may be capable of executing the office either by herself or deputy as the Lady Braughton did." And in 2 Ld. Raym. 1014, it was held that the appointment of a woman as governor of a workhouse was good, and she could act by deputy. A woman held the office of custodian of a castle; Lady Russell's Case, Cro. Jac. 17; 5 Comyns' Dig. 189; of forrester; 4 Co. Inst. 311, 5 Comyns' Dig. 189; of overseer of the poor; 2 T. R. 395; of sexton of the parish, 2 Str. 1114; 7 Mod. 263, where it was also held that, as she was the owner of the property, she was a qualified voter for the purpose of electing such officer.

The office of Great Chamberlain of England was hereditary and upon the death of the incumbent leaving two sisters, the office was held to belong to both; they could exercise it by deputy, subject to the king's approval of the deputy; 2 Bro. P. C. (2d Ed. 146). So the office of marshal of the court will descend to a woman and she may exercise it by deputy; Callis, Sewers, 253, citing B. R. 5 Car. I. The hereditary office of Constable of England descended to two daughters of the Duke of Buckingham. It was held that they might exercise it by deputy, and that after the marriage of the elder, her husband should exercise its function alone, if the king did not refuse such services; 3 Dyer 285 b.

Robert Callis, in his fourth lecture on the statute 23 Henry VIII. ch. 5, delivered at Gray's Inn, in August, 1622, said that "although it is uncouth in our law to have women justices and commissioners, and to sit in places of judicature, yet by the authorities ensuing you shall find this a point worth insisting upon, both in human and in divine learning." He then quotes from the first chapter of Genesis and proceeds: "This was the first commission that ever was granted; and it passed under the divine immediate seal of the Almighty, and extended over the whole world. And by virtue of the word 'dominamini,' in the plural number, God coupled the woman in commission with the man." He further shows that, while woman was created a commissioner over fishes and over birds and beasts, such commission extended over neither man nor woman; but after citing various cases of divine authority to sustain that doctrine, he called attention to many instances of ancient and modern history, and concluded that, a woman might be commissioner of sewers in London; Countess of Warwick's Case, Callis, Sewers 250 (Callis's Reading on Sewers is a "good authority"; Marvin, Leg. Bibliogr., citing 2 Dunnif. & E. 365; 5 B. & Ad. 282).

Queen Eleanor held the office of Lady Keeper of the Great Seal and performed the duties, both judicial and ministerial, for more than a year.

It is said that the simplest statement of the common law situation is that, while women did not generally hold office and the question of their competency was not well settled, they did in fact hold various offices, some of which were of great importance. Some were hereditary, and the duties thereof were often performed by deputy. But in every instance in which a woman's right to hold office was questioned prior to the present generation she was held to be competent, although the court often took occasion to say that women were not competent to hold all offices; 38 L. R. A. 208, note.

In 1647, Margaret Brent claimed the right to sit in the Assembly of Maryland as executor of Lord Baltimore. Abigail Adams (wife of John Adams) and two others claimed the right of direct representation for women taxpayers.

In New Jersey, under the first constitution, women could vote from 1776 to 1807.

WOODGELD. In Old English Law. To be free from the payment of money for taking of wood in any forest. Co. Litt. 233 a. The same as PUDZELD.

WOODMOTE. The court of attachment. Cowell.

WOODS. A piece of land on which forest-trees in great number naturally grow. According to Lord Coke, a grant to another of omnes boscos suos, all his woods, will pass not only all his trees, but the land on which they grow. Co. Litt. 4 b. See State v. Howard, 72 Me. 459. A field grown up in wire-grass surrounded by a fence and used for pasturing is not a woods. Achenbach v. Johnston, 84 N. C. 264; but see Hall v. Crawford, 50 N. C. 4. See TIMBER; SALE.

WOODS AND FORESTS. By Act of March 3, 1891, and subsequent acts, the secretary of agriculture was authorized to make provisions for the protection against destruction by fire and depredations of the public forests and forest reservations and to make such rules and regulations and establish such service as would insure the object of the reservations, namely, to regulate their occupation and use, and to preserve the forests thereon from destruction. This act was held constitutional and not to be a delegation of legislative power: Light v. U. S., 220 U. S. 523, 31 Sup. Ct. 485, 55 L. Ed. 570; the power conferred is administrative: U. S. v. Grimaud, 220 U. S. 506, 31 Sup. Ct. 480, 55 L. Ed. 563.

The federal courts have been divided on the question as to whether violations of the regulations of the secretary of agriculture constitute a crime, but in U. S. v. Grimaud, 220 U. S. 506, it was held that, where the penalty for a violation of regulations to be made by an executive officer is prescribed by statute, the violation is not made a crime by such officer, but by congress, and congress, and not such officer, fixes the penalty, nor is the offense against such officer, but against the United States, reversing U. S. v. Grimaud, 170 Fed. 205, and sustaining a regulation made by the secretary of agriculture as to grazing sheep on forest reserves.

In Light v. U. S., 220 U. S. 523, 31 Sup. Ct. 485, 55 L. Ed. 570, it was held that where cattle were turned loose under circumstances showing that the owner expects and intends that they shall graze upon a reserve, for which he has no permit, and he declines to apply for one, and threatens to resist efforts to have the cattle removed, and contends that he has a right to graze his cattle, he can be enjoined at the instance of the government, whether the land has been fenced or not. Not decided whether the United States is required to fence property under the laws of the state.

The location of a mining claim within a forest reserve was held not to operate to withdraw the land embraced therein from the jurisdiction of the secretary of agriculture, nor to give to locators having acquired a possessory interest only any authority to use the surface for the erection of a saloon, without a permit from the secretary of agriculture; U. S. v. Rizzinelli, 182 Fed. 675.

Whatever rights the holders of unpatented mining claims may have in the timber on their claims are subject to the paramount title of the government. When such claims are in a national forest, timber thereon which is dead, matured, and infested with insects, so as to be a menace to the young and growing trees, may be sold by the forest service under the regulations prescribed by the secretary of agriculture; Lewis v. Garlock, 168 Fed. 153.

WOODWARDS. Officers appointed by owners of forest lands, whose duty it was to protect their master's property and the king's venison. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 342.

WOOLSACK. The seat of the lord chancellor in the house of lords, without back or arms, with a large cushion of wool covered with red cloth. The custom arose from wool being a staple of Great Britain from early times. Encyc. Amer.

WORDS. See CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION; LIBEL; SLANDER.

WORK AND LABOR. In actions of assumpsit it is usual to put in a count, commonly called a common count, for work and labor done and material furnished by the plaintiff for the defendant; and when the work was not done under a special contract the plaintiff will be entitled to recover on the common count for work, labor, and materials. 4 Tyrwh. 43; 2 Carr. & M. 214. See ASSUMPSIT; QUANTUM MERUIT.

WORKHOUSE. A prison where prisoners are kept in employment; a penitentiary. A house where the poor are taken care of and kept in employment.

WORKING DAYS. In Maritime Law. Working days include all days except Sundays and legal holidays and do not include days on which, by the custom of the port, baymen stop work on the day of the funeral of one of their deceased members; Wood v. Keyser, 84 Fed. 688. In settling lay-days, or days of demurrage, sometimes the contract specifies "working days"; in the computation, Sundays and custom-house holidays are excluded; 1 Bell, Com. 577.

Running or calendar days on which the law permits work to be done. The term excludes Sundays and legal holidays, but not stormy days; Sorensen v. Keyser, 52 Fed. 163, 2 C. C. A. 650, 2 U. S. App. 297; Pedersen v. Engster & Co., 14 Fed. 422; The Cyprus, 20 Fed. 144; The Oluf, 19 Fed. 459; and a Saturday half-holiday; Holman v. S. Line, 186 Fed. 96, 108 C. C. A. 208.

Working or lay-days, by the general rule, do not commence until the vessel has arrived at the usual place for unloading; 1 H. & C. 388; Tweedie Trading Co. v. Barry, 205 Fed. 721, 124 C. C. A. 15; although she was obliged to await her turn to berth; Swan v. Wiley, Harker & Camp Co., 161 Fed. 905, 88 C. C. A. 510.

But where such place is a dock, it has been held that they begin when she enters the dock, and not when she reaches her place of discharge in the dock; 1 Bing. N. C. 283.

The parties may, however, stipulate as they please as to the time when they shall commence; 5 Bing. N. C. 71. And it sometimes depends on the usage of the port; 24 E. L. & Eq. 305. Usage, however, cannot be admitted to vary the express terms of the contract; Pars. Ship. & Adm. 313. See DEMURAGE; LAY-DAYS.

WORKMAN. One who labors; one who is employed to work for another. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS. Acts regulating this subject have been passed in Arizona, California, Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Texas, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. Congress has passed acts relating to the Canal Zone, government manufacturing establishments, arsenals, navy yards, the construction of river and harbor, and fortification work, hazardous employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands, also such employment under the bureau of mines, the forestry service, and in the lighthouse service.

A Uniform Act has been prepared by the Commissioners on Uniform Laws, but not passed in any state.

Legislation providing for stated benefits payable without suit or proof of negligence, was first enacted in the United States in the form of a co-operative insurance law of Maryland in 1902. This law was of restricted application and was declared unconstitutional, as depriving parties of the right of trial by jury and conferring on an executive officer judicial or at least quasi-judicial functions. The legislation, antedating what may be called the commission period, is of limited application, either locally or as to the classes of employees affected; and there appears to have been but little regard to actuarial requirements in its enactment. Later most of the laws were drawn up by a commission, and after their enactment were administered by a commission.

While all the laws under consideration are compensation laws, in that they provide for fixed awards in case of industrial accidents, proof of negligence and legal actions being dispensed with, some of them go beyond the simple determination of the right to compensation, and provide insurance systems, either under state supervision or otherwise. While, therefore, the laws are all classifiable as compensation laws, they may be distinguished for convenience as compensation laws and insurance laws.

A question, second only in importance to the right of the workman to compensation for industrial accidents, is the security of payments. Under some of the acts, the provision is made that the employer must give satisfactory evidence of his solvency, or must give bond for the payment of any sums for which he may become liable, or must insure his responsibility in some approved company.

The establishment of a state fund involves a considerable departure from the experience of the past in this country, and the question of its advisability is warmly discussed.

There is wide variety in the scope of the laws and of the test adopted for the inclusion or exclusion of industries. In most cases, domestic and agricultural labor is excluded, while in some only extra-hazardous employments are concerned (which, however, cover the great majority of employments).

Under the acts, methods are usually prescribed for the expression by employers and workmen of their preference as to the acceptance or rejection of the compensation system. This ranges from each workman filing a written rejection to a presumed acceptance in the absence of formal rejection.

Under the elective system in most of the states, it is made an inducement, which has been criticized as coercive, that where employers refuse to come within the provisions of the compensation law, the customary defenses to actions for injuries shall not be allowed them. In some cases where the law applies only to employers having in excess of a certain number of employees, the abrogation of these defenses does not affect employers of a small number of employees. The same is true also in cases in which the employee rejects the compensation system and sues an employer who has accepted such a system.

The bringing of suits for damages seems not absolutely forbidden in any state, though after electing to accept compensation, or failing to give notice of a rejection of the system, as the case may be, the employee may not sue unless the employer was guilty of serious or wilful misconduct or failed to comply with the safety laws.

Substitute schemes or modifications of the employer's liability under the law by agreements between employers and employees are not usually forbidden, but the employer is not allowed to reduce his liability as fixed by law. Where the burden is entirely on the employer by the statute, if the employee makes any contribution to the fund or to any substitute system, he must receive additional compensation benefits.

With practical uniformity the states have placed the entire burden of the compensation or insurance systems on the employer. The exceptions to this rule are Oregon and West Virginia.

Most of the laws fix a time during which no compensation is payable immediately following the accident causing disability. This ranges from six days to two weeks, during which time no compensation is allowed in most states, other than such provision as is made for medical or surgical attendance. In a few instances, however, if the disability is prolonged beyond a designated time, benefits are payable for the first week or weeks of disability.

Compensation proper falls into three classes: for death, for total disability, and for partial disability. For disability of any class there may be also different provisions for temporary and permanent disability. Besides these compensation provisions, a number of the acts provide for medical, surgical, and hospital attendance, and in a number of cases for burial in case of fatal injuries.

The benefits for death are in most cases based on the earnings of the injured person, usually approximating three or four years' wages, payable in installments, ranging from 50 to 66½ per cent of the weekly or monthly wages. In a few cases the amounts are fixed monthly payments, uniform for all classes of employees, without reference to their previous income. Minimum and maximum amounts for weekly or monthly payments and for the total are frequently prescribed. The provisions as to children who are beneficiaries usually are that the benefits payable in their behalf shall cease on their reaching the age of 16 years, though in a few cases the limit is 18 years. In West Virginia, benefits to children cease when they reach the legal age of employment, which in that state is 14 years. A few states have the provision also that benefits shall not cease at the ages named if the recipient is mentally or physically incapacitated from earning a living.

The remarriage of a widow is made to terminate benefits in a number of cases, though in a few instances a lump sum is payable on such remarriage, either a fixed amount or representing a fixed number of months of benefit payments. If the beneficiary is a widower, no provision is made for a similar allowance in case of his remarriage.

A few states recognize the fact that a permanently disabled workman is a greater economic loss to his family than if he were killed outright at the time of the accident, and allow in case of permanent total disability a larger amount of compensation than in case of fatal accidents, some continuing payments for such disability for the full period of the injured workman's life. For the most part, however, this basis of the payments is the same as for death.

Limitations are placed on the time for giving notice and for making claims under the acts, notice usually being required within from ten to thirty days, and a claim within from six months to six years. A number of the acts contain the provision that no notice is necessary where the employer has other knowledge of the fact or where the accident was a fatal one. The time set may also be extended if it is shown that the employer was not prejudiced by the delay. The time for presenting the claim or bringing action thereon appears usually to be fixed absolutely.

On the failure of the employer and his workmen or the claimant to reach an agreement as to the amount of compensation or other facts involved, recourse may be had in a number of states to a special commission or board which is created to have charge of the administration of the law. In other states arbitrators chosen for the purpose or any standing committee of the employer and his workmen may take cognizance of the disputes. In some states the disputes are referred to the courts. In all cases an appeal, sometimes only on certain phases of questions involved, may be had to the courts.

The provisions as to beneficiaries residing abroad are quite various, some of the acts giving them the same standing as other beneficiaries, others excluding them entirely, while still others permit persons only of certain degrees of kinship to receive benefits or limit the amount payable to non-residents.

Injuries Arising out of, and in the Course of, the Employment. The injuries compensated are usually all of those which arise out of, and in the course of, the employment and are not due to wilfulness or intoxication. An accident is said to arise "in the course of" a man's employment if it occurs while he is doing what a man so employed may reasonably do within a time during which he is employed, and at a place where he may reasonably be during that time; Bryant v. Fissell, 84 N. J. Law, 72, 86 Atl. 458. A workman, while on his way by a route which he was permitted to take by his employers, attempted to get on a tram car to ride up an incline, which was in violation of his employer's rules, and fell and was killed. Held, that the accident did not occur in the course of his employment; Pope v. Hills Plymouth Co., 105 L. T. Rep. 678. A workman receives injuries by accident "arising out of" his employment when the accident was due to the nature of the work, or was incidental to it, as where a man undertakes to do something and the required exertion which produces the injury is too great for him, whatever the degree of exertion or the condition of his health; Clover, etc., Co. v. Hughes, 102 L. T. Rep. 340. A man employed to collect insurance premiums from door to door slipped on some stairs while pursuing the duties of his employment and was injured. It was held that the accident arose out of his employment; Refuge Assurance Co. v. Millar, 49 Sc. L. Rep. 67. A young woman was employed as lady's maid and serving maid. She was sitting in the nursery room on a warm evening with the window open, doing some sewing for herself which she was allowed to do. A beetle flew into the room, and the young woman threw up her hand to keep it from striking her face, and in doing so struck her eye with her hand in such a way as to cause serious and permanent injury. Held, that the accident did not arise out of her employment; Craske v. Wigan, [1909] 2 K. B. 635. A locomotive engineer was injured while on duty by a stone thrown by a boy from a bridge, under which the engine was passing at the time. It was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment; Challis v. London, etc., R. Co., 93 L. T. Rep. 330. A workman employed in the construction of a building was struck by lightning when working at the height of twenty-three feet. The evidence showed that a man working in that position incurs a risk substantially greater than the normal risk of being struck by lightning. It was held that the accident arose out of the employment; Andrew v. Failsworth Industrial Society; [1904] 2 K. B. 32.

Employment does not commence the moment the workman leaves home on his way to work, nor does it continue until he reaches home after the day's work is done. Nor does it continue while the workman steps aside—that is, leaves his work—for purposes of his own. Thus, a railway engineer, on his way to work earlier than was necessary, went out of his course for purposes of his own to talk to a signal-man. In order for him to reach the man it was necessary to cross some railroad tracks, but on a direct route from his home to the engine shed where he signed on for work every morning there were no tracks to cross. When he had finished speaking to the signal-man, he started back across the tracks and was struck and killed by an engine. It was held that the accident was not one arising out of and in the course of the employment; Benson v. Lancashire, etc., R. Co., [1904] 1 K. B. 242. There is considerable difficulty in ascertaining precisely when a workman's employment begins. Each case must be decided on its individual facts. Generally speaking, the factory gate or yard, or the like, indicates the boundary, but in particular instances there may be a wider margin in favor of the workman. The fact that an accident happens at a time when there is a temporary cessation of work does not preclude its being one arising out of and in the course of the employment. The employment continues during all the time from the employé's arrival on the premises until his departure, providing he is engaged in the employment or something ancillary thereto; Blovelt v. Sawyer, [1904] 1 K. B. 271. Minor employés occupying a platform where they were sent to rest during an intermission in the performance of their duties, were held to continue as employés in the service of their employer during such time; Chambers v. Mfg. Co., 106 Md. 496, 68 Atl. 290, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 383. It has been held that the relation of master and servant continues to exist during the servant's noon hour, where it is understood that the servant will remain on the master's premises to eat his meal.

Where workmen are employed to work at a certain place, and are transported to and from such place by the employer, as a part of their contract of employment, the period of service continues during transportation; Ryan v. C. R. Co., 23 Pa. 384.

If a workman is about his own affairs at the time an accident happens, such accident cannot be said to arise out of and in the course of his employment. If he deliberately and for no reason leaves the work he is employed upon, and attempts to do something he knows he is not employed to do, it would be contradictory to say that he is acting within the scope of his employment.

Where injury occurs to a workman acting in an emergency, the rule is that the workman does not go out of his employment if he endeavors to prevent the danger from taking effect. Acting in an emergency, the employé is not expected to act as he would under circumstances that give time for more deliberate action.

The work of a girl employed in a mill ended on Wednesday, but she could not be paid until two days later. She returned to the mill on the following Friday to secure her pay, and while there fell down stairs and was injured. Held that the employment existed at the time; Kiley v. Holland, [1911] 1 K. B. 1029.

Notice. The acts generally require an injured workman to give notice to his employer of his injury within a specified time. Most of the statutes give thirty days within which the notice must be given. The notice must be in writing and state the time, place and, in ordinary language, the cause of the injury. It must contain the name or names of the person or persons claiming compensation, and must be served on the employer in the manner specified by statute, which is generally by personal service on the employer or some representative or superintendent, or by registered mail. Usually the want of or any defect or inaccuracy in the notice, or in its service, will not defeat the right to compensation unless the employer is prejudiced thereby. If the failure to give notice, or the giving of a defective notice, is occasioned by mistake, physical or mental incapacity, or other reasonable cause, it is not fatal.

Aside from the fact that the giving of notice of injury to the employer has a tendency to defeat any fraudulent claim and the making of a stale demand, it is intended to put the employer in possession of the facts of the particular accident, so that he may make investigations of the details of the accident in order to ascertain whether or not he is liable to pay compensation, and to prepare his defense if he desires to contest the claim.

The requirement that the notice state the place where the accident occurred is not complied with by giving the name of the town in which it occurred, or by any other such general statement. A notice under the New York statute which stated that because of the slippery, greasy and defective condition of the floor around the machine at which the employé worked, he slipped and his left hand was caught in the machine, was held not sufficiently definite as to the place and cause of the injury to authorize an action; Welch v. Waterbury Co., 144 App. Div. 213, 128 N. Y. Supp. 974. By requiring a statement of the cause of the injury, it is meant a statement of the physical cause; Valentino v. Machine Co., 139 App. Div. 139, 123 N. Y. Supp. 959; and not a statement of the particular violation of the employer's duty by reason of which the injury occurred; Impelizzieri v. Cranford, 141 App. Div. 755, 126 N. Y. Supp. 644. It means that the accident should be so described that a person of ordinary intelligence who knows nothing about it could understand how it happened. It is not necessary that all the facts going to establish a cause of action should be stated, as they would in a complaint or petition; Dippolito v. Brown, 148 App. Div. 116, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1021.

The compensation statutes as a rule do not require the workman himself, or, in case of his death, his dependents, to give notice of the injury. They merely require that notice of the injury be given the employer. It may, therefore, be given by any one on behalf of the workmen, but it is thought it must purport to come by authority of the workman. Thus, a mere report of an accident made by a third person at the instance of the employer is thought not to be sufficient; Roberts and Wallace, Duty and Liability of Employers (3d Ed.) 317; although such fact may go to show that the employé was not damaged by the want of notice. A notice signed "Corcoran and Parker, Attorneys for Charles Dolan," purports to be signed on behalf of Charles Dolan, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, sufficiently shows that the attorneys were authorized to sign it; Dolan v. Alley, 153 Mass. 380, 26 N. E. 989.

Under a statute providing that "the notice may be served by post or letter addressed to the person on whom it is to be served, at his last known place of residence or place of business, and if served by post shall be deemed to have been served at the time when the letter containing the same would be delivered in the ordinary course of the post," it is immaterial that the notice in fact never reaches the person to whom it is addressed; Hurley v. Olcott, 198 N. Y. 132, 91 N. E. 270, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238. It has been held that notice given or claim made by or on behalf of one dependent does not inure to the benefit of the other dependents; Kyle v. McGinty, 48 Sc. L. Rep. 474.

An injured workman will be excused for delaying to give notice, where the injury at first appears to be of little or no consequence, but later proves to be serious. An honest mistake of this kind is well within the statutory exception; Tibbs v. Watts & Co., 2

Butterworth's W. C. Cas. 164. As soon as it becomes apparent, however, that the injury is likely to prove serious, the workman should hasten to give notice. Ignorance on the part of the workman of the existence of a compensation statute in the state in which he works, or of his rights thereunder, or of the requirements of such statute relative to giving notice of injury, is not such a mistake that will excuse the giving of notice to the employer of an injury within the time required by the statute; Koles v. Pascall, [1911] 1 K. B. 982.

Most of the statutes excuse the failure to give notice if there was no intention to mislead the employer and he was not in fact misled thereby. The wording of the statutes varies greatly, but the purpose seems to be to excuse the want of notice when the employer is not prejudiced thereby. Ordinarily the onus of proving that the failure to give notice of an accident has not prejudiced the employer is on the one making claim for compensation; Roles v. Pascall, [1911] 1 K. B. 982. By the terms of some of the statutes in this country the burden is put upon the employer to show that he has been prejudiced thereby, while in others the burden of proof is not placed on either party, but naturally it is on the applicant for compensation, because unless it affirmatively appears during the proceedings that the employer was not so prejudiced no recovery can be had. The notice of injury which compensation statutes require to be given employers should be liberally construed; Jones v. Francis, 70 Wash. 676, 127 Pac. 307.

Accident. Most of the states have followed the English act in many respects, including the requirement that, to entitle an injured workman to compensation, his injury must have been due to an accident. The House of Lords has declared that the word is used in its popular and ordinary sense, and means "an unlooked-for mishap, or an untoward event, which is not expected or designed"; Fenton v. Thorley & Co., [1903] A. C. 443. This definition was adopted in Bryant v. Fissell, 84 N. J. Law 72, 86 Atl. 458. To constitute an accident, a happening must be capable of being described as having occurred on a particular date; it must be an event, as distinguished from a gradual growth, the commencement of which is uncertain; Marshall v. East Holywell Coal Co., 93 L. T. Rep. 360. Thus, the contraction of lead-poisoning from the continual use of red and white lead, by absorbing it through the pores, or inhaling the poison into the lungs, or by eating food to which small particles have adhered, is not an accident, as the development of the disease is a gradual process, generally taking considerable time; Steel v. Cammell, etc., Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 232. So an abscess in the knee, gradually developed by kneeling while at work, is not due to an accident; Gorley v. Backworth Collieries, 93 L. T. Rep. 360. The event, to constitute an accident, must be one that is unforeseen by the person injured by its occurrence, and it has been declared that an occurrence is unexpected if it is not expected by the man who suffers by it, even though every man of common sense who knew the circumstances would think it certain to happen; Clover, etc., Co. v. Hughes, [1910] A. C. 242. An event may constitute an accident, although the person causing it did so intentionally. Thus, an engineer was injured while driving the engine of an express train by a stone thrown by a boy from a bridge under which the train was passing at the time. It was held that the injury was due to an accident, that the circumstance of the throwing of the stone being a wilful act on the part of the boy was immaterial; [1905] 2 K. B. 154. The fact that the physical condition of the injured person is a contributory cause of the event does not prevent its being an accident; [1908] A. C. 437.

Whether or not the contraction of a disease constitutes an accident depends upon the nature of the disease. It must be one the contraction of which can be definitely fixed in point of time as an event. This would seem not to include idiopathic diseases. On the other hand, a disease contracted as by infection from the lodgment of bacilli comes well within the definition of an accident. A workman was employed to open and sort bales of Persian wool. While so engaged his eye became infected with anthrax which necessitated an operation, from which he died. The disease was caused by a bacillus alighting on his eye. In this instance it could be told definitely the day on which the injury occurred, and with considerable certainty the manner in which it occurred, and it was held to be due to an accident; [1905] A. C. 230. While employed in clearing a mill-race, a workman caught a sudden chill, caused by immersion in the water. Inflammation of the kidneys supervened, and he died several days later. The evidence showed that the attack could only have been brought on by exposure to cold water. It was held that death was due to an accident; [1910] Ir. Rep. 105. A workman of poor physique was employed in the stoke-hold of a vessel. The conditions there were normal, but as usual the place was very warm. The man suffered from a heat stroke, which resulted in his death. It was held that his death was due to an accident; [1908] A. C. 437.

Shock and fright are included within the meaning of accident, although the injury is purely mental, and not physical; [1896] 3 Q. B. 248. Death from heart disease; 4 Butterworth's W. S. Cas. 190; death or injury from inhalation of gas; [1911] 2 K. B. 747; or from lightning; [1904] 2 K. B. 32; have been held accidents. The question of accident is one of fact and law; [1903] A. C. 443.

Dependents. The compensation acts usually award benefits to those who are dependent upon the deceased workman. There are various statutory provisions as to just who are dependents.

Romer, L. J., in [1899] 1 Q. B. 1005, said: "I think that the 'dependents' who are entitled to claim compensation under the act must be dependents in the proper sense of the word, and not merely persons who derive a benefit from the earnings of the deceased. I also think that a 'dependent' must be a person who is dependent upon the deceased for the ordinary necessities of life having regard to the class and position of the parties."

This view has since been very materially changed; it being held that no standard of living can be considered. Consequently the fact that a person may be able-bodied and well able to make a living for himself and family, so far as necessities are considered, does not prevent his being dependent upon another. Thus, Main Colliery Co. v. Davies, [1900] A. C. 358, holds that a father is part dependent on the earnings of a son who contributes to the support of the family, which the father is bound by law to maintain. A woman may be dependent on her husband or children, or on her husband and her children at the same time, the question being one of fact. The widow and children of a workman have been held to be no less wholly dependent upon the workman because the latter had been enabled, through the receipt by him, either directly or through his wife as his agent, of money from wage-earning sons or of money coming to him through other channels, to augment the fund out of which he has been legally bound to maintain, and had maintained, his house-hold; Senior v. Fountains, [1907] 2 K. B. 563. The earnings of a father, and son and two daughters were put in a fund from which the expenses of the entire family, including a mother and three other children, were paid. The son was killed in his employment, and the parents applied for compensation, and the court found as a fact that the parents were partly dependent upon the son's earnings; Main Colliery Co. v. Davies, [1900] A. C. 358.

The fact that a wife is not living with her husband at the time of his death is of no consequence, aside from some express statutory provision to the contrary. The question is still one of fact whether she is being supported by him. Aside from statutory provision, and contrary to the earlier English decisions on the question, it is now settled that there is no legal presumption of the dependency of the wife upon her husband, on account of the legal obligation of the husband to support her; New, etc., Collieries v. Keeling, [1911] A. C. 648.

A husband and wife quarreled at a time when he was unemployed. He went to another town and secured employment, and earned regular wages for about three weeks, when he was killed by an accident. This was about four months after his separation from his wife. During this time the wife had subsisted on her own small casual earnings and occasional small contributions from relatives, and for one week she was in the work-house. In her testimony she stated that she expected her husband back every day to provide a home for her. It was held that the wife was dependent upon her husband's earnings, and entitled to compensation: Coulthard v. Consett Iron Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 869. Upon the death of her mother a daughter, who had previously been earning wages, remained at home to keep house for her father. For this she received board, lodging and clothing, but no wages. She applied for compensation on the death of her father, and was awarded the same on the ground that she was dependent upon him; Moyes v. Dixon, 42 Sc. L. Rep. 319.

A posthumous child may be a dependent within the meaning of the compensation statutes; Williams v. Ocean Coal Co., [1907] 2 K. B. 422. Whether or not an illegitimate child can be dependent depends primarily upon the provisions of the particular statute, but unless there appears a contrary intention an illegitimate child may be dependent; Schofield v. Orrell Colliery Co., [1909] 1 K. B. 178.

In the absence of any statutory prohibition an alien is within the definition of a dependent, although he still resides in a foreign country.

The fact that one is lending assistance to another does not conclusively prove that he himself is not a dependent. Where it was claimed that a father was partly dependent upon the earnings of his son only because he supported a crippled brother, who lived with him, and it was true that the father was doing his best to help the brother, the court held that that was a circumstance but was not conclusive on the question of the father's dependence; Leggett v. Borke, 39 Sc. L. Rep. 448.

A husband and wife are living together when there has been no legal separation, and no actual separation, as, for instance, where there has been an estrangement, or a separation with the intention of continuing it permanently. The length of time the parties are separated and the distance intervening between them is not necessarily material to the solution of the question. The true intention of the parties is the test by which the matter is determined; Northwestern Iron Co. v. Industrial Commission, 154 Wis. 97, 142 N. W. 271.

Workmen. In some of the statutes the term "employé" is used, while others use that of "workman." The two words are synonymous, and are used interchangeably.

One is not a workman unless there exists between him and his employer a contract of service. In this regard there is a distinction between a contract of service and a contract for services. The latter not only includes the relation of master and servant, but other relations in which the employer has no control over the employé, who may be rendering services as an independent contractor. The former is a contract which creates the relation of master and servant. While it is a contract for services, it is something more, the distinguishing feature of which is the right of control the employer has over the way in which the services shall be rendered, not only generally, but in regard to details; [1910] 1 K. B. 543.

As to casual employment, Buckley, L. J., in Hill v. Begg, [1908] 2 K. B. 802, said: "The words are not 'who is casually employed,' but 'whose employment is of a casual nature.' I have to investigate what is the character of the man's employment, not what is the tenure of his employment. Is the employment one which is in its nature casual? To take an analogy or illustration from a different subject, say land. The question is, what is the nature or quality of the land—is it, for instance, building land or agricultural land—not what estate is held in the land? Suppose that a host, when from time to time he entertains his friends at dinner, or his wife gives a reception or dance, has been in the habit for many years of employing the same men to come in and wait at his table or assist at the reception, it may be said that their employment is regular. But the employment is of a casual nature. It depends upon the whim or the hospitable instincts or the social obligations of the host whether he gives any, and how many dinner parties or receptions, and the number of men he will want varies with the number of his guests. In such a case the waiters may not incorrectly be said to be regularly employed in an employment of casual nature."

A window-cleaner called and cleaned the windows of the house of a physician about once a month, without receiving a special invitation or permission to do so on each occasion, and there was no formal contract between the parties. A portion of the house was used by the physician in connection with the practice of his profession. On one occasion, while cleaning a window of the dining room, the cleaner received an injury. Held, that the employment was of a casual nature, and that the man was not employed for the purpose of the employer's trade or business; Rennid v. Reed, 45 Sc. L. Rep. 814.

A woman worked regularly without fresh instructions for an employer on every Friday and alternate Tuesdays for eighteen months. She worked at home and for others on the other days of the week. While at work at this employer's house on one of the specified days, she met with an accident. It was held that the contract of service was of a periodic nature, and that the employment was not casual; Dewhurst v. Mather, [1908] 2 K. B. 754.

If a man is employed for the purposes of the employer's trade or business, it matters not that the employment is of a casual nature.

A laborer complained of the height of a hedge which extended between his garden and the land of a farmer; the hedge being located entirely on the land of the latter. The former agreed to give the laborer ten shillings to cut the hedge, and he (the farmer) would use the poles on his farm. While employed at this work the laborer met with an accident. Held that, while the employment was of a casual nature, it was for the purpose of the farmer's trade or business, and that the laborer was a workman engaged in that employment; Tombs v. Bouford, 106 L. T. Rep. 823.

One May, a real estate agent, who had been instructed to let a dwelling house, decided to take the house himself. He was allowed a sum to pay for redecorating and repairing the house, and he contracted with one Smith to do the work under his (May's) supervision. Smith employed a man to help, who was injured in the course of the work. Held, that this was not a contract in the course of or for the purpose of May's trade or business; Brine v. May, etc., Cq., 6 Butterworth's W. C. Cas. 134.

The members of an employer's family are not workmen. A man, twenty-six years of age, was employed as an ordinary workman by his father, with whom he lived, paying board and lodging. While employed by his father on work at another town, where he lodged for the time, he received an injury, for which he applied for an award of compensation. The son maintained that, being self-supporting, he was not a member of the employer's family and that, being absent at the time of the accident, he was not "dwelling in his house." It was held that at the time of the accident he was a "member of the employer's family dwelling in his house," and accordingly was not a "workman"; McDongall v. McDongall, 48 Sc. L. Rep. 315.

An independent contractor is not a workman; indeed, when a person undertakes to do work as a contractor, that fact negatives the idea that he is a workman. Thus a man was employed by timber merchants to bring his horse and drag logs from one place to another, for which he was paid by the day. His work was to lead the horse, and this he might have done by a means of a substitute, it not being understood that he should perform the work personally. It was held that he was an independent contractor, and was not entitled to compensation for injuries received while so engaged; Chrisholm v. Walker & Co., 46 Sc. L. Rep. 24.

A partner may be a workman for the firm. One of three partners, owners and operators of a coal mine, worked in the mine as working foreman, under an agreement with the other partners that he should receive weekly wages like an ordinary workman. While so engaged he met with an accident, which caused his death, and a claim for compensation was made by his widow against the surviving partners. It was held that, as the deceased had been a partner in the firm, there was not the relation of employer and employee contemplated by the statute; Ellis v. Ellis & Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 324. It was said that the deceased man might come within the definition of "workman," if the definition were considered separate from the other provisions of the act, but, in view of the fact that the act contemplates the existence of the relation of employer and employee, and it being evident that the same man cannot be both employer and employee, the relation in its true sense did not exist, and the applicant must therefore fail.

Employé of a charitable institution is a workman. A blind pauper was injured while working in the industrial department of a charitable institution, which supplied charitable instruction to blind persons. The institution was not self-supporting, but depended partly on charity. On account of this pauper the institution received fourteen pounds eight shillings a year from his parish, and twenty pounds a year from a charitable fund. The institution supplied the pauper with board, lodging and clothing, and paid him five shillings a month. Held, that the pauper was a workman; MacGillivray v. Northern Counties Institute, [1911] Sc. Sess. Cas. 897. A man employed by a society for the purpose of giving work to unemployed persons has been held to be a workman; Porton v. Central Body, [1909] 1 K. B. 173.

A dispensary physician was held not to be a workman; Murphy v. Enniscorthy Board, 42 Ir. L. T. 246. Persons engaged in the business of copying or translating legal documents or manuscripts, and who are known as "law writers," are held to be workmen; McKrill v. Howard & Jones, 2 Butterworth's W. C. Cas. 460.

Whether or not an employé is a workman depends upon his contract of employment. If he is employed as a workman, the fact that he has a university degree does not render him any less a workman. On the other hand, if he is employed in a capacity of a scientist, the fact that he performs manual labor in connection with the work for which he was employed does not make him a workman; Bagnall v. Levinstein, [1907] 1 K. B. 531. A professional foot-ball player has been held a workman; Walker v. Crystal Palace Football Club, [1910] 1 K. B. 87; but not a lecturer; Waite v. Franco-British Exhibition, 25 T. L. Rep. 441.

Serious and Wilful Misconduct. The word "serious" refers to the conduct, not to the results of the conduct, and the misconduct of a workman is not necessarily serious because it results in serious consequences. It has been held, however, that any neglect is serious which, in view of reasonable persons in a position to judge, exposes any person including the person guilty of it, to the risk of serious injury; Hill v. Granby Consol. Mines, 12 Br. Col. 118.

It may be contended that, on account of the necessity for strict discipline among employees engaged in establishments where machinery is used, and the grave danger attendant upon a general laxity of discipline, a violation of any rule is serious. If such contention were true it would render the word "serious," as used in the statutes, mere surplusage. The word must be taken to have a meaning, and it must be given full weight. It is very evident that the legislatures did not intend that the workman should be deprived of compensation merely because a breach of some rule attended the accident.

"Serious" and "wilful" do not refer to conduct, but to "misconduct." In the first place, there must be misconduct; then it must be wilful; and, finally, it must be serious. Conduct may often be wilful, and its consequences serious, but yet not amount to misconduct. "Misconduct" means wrong conduct.

"Wilful" means by one's own volition or will; intentional. It imports that the misconduct was deliberate, not merely a thoughtless act on the spur of the moment; Johnson v. Marshall Sons & Co., [1906] A. C. 409. It is not enough that the act is wilful; it must be done by the workman with the intention or knowledge of being guilty of misconduct; Bist v. London, etc., R. Co., [1907] A. C. 209.

Wilful misconduct must mean the doing of something, or the omitting to do something, which is wrong to do or omit, where the person who is guilty of the act or omission knows that the act which he is doing, or that which he is omitting to do, is a wrong thing to do or omit; and it involves the knowledge of the person that the thing which he is doing is wrong; Beven, Workmen's Compensation (4th ed.) 396.

A miner was killed by a tram car while going from his work. He was leaving the mine by the usual way. There were manholes at intervals along the way, which were to be used in avoiding trains of tram cars. He was warned by a fellow-workman to get into a manhole as the "journey" was coming near. He did not heed the warning, and was overtaken by the cars and killed. The trial judge found that he was guilty of serious and wilful misconduct, and, on appeal, it was held that there was evidence to support the finding; John v. Albion Coal Co., 18 T. L. Rep. 27.

Serious and wilful misconduct is something more than contributory negligence, as the latter will not defeat recovery of compensation; Praties v. Broxburn Oil Co., 44 Sc. L. Rep. 408.

A locomotive engineer left the foot-plate of his engine while it was running at considerable speed, in order to get coal from the tender, and was killed while so doing. His conduct was in violation of a rule of the employer that "enginemmen and firemen must not leave the foot-plate of their engine when the latter is in motion." There was evidence that the engineer knew of this rule and could have gotten coal without leaving the foot-plate. The court held that the accident was due to serious and wilful misconduct; Bist v. London, etc., R. Co., [1907] A. C. 209.

In order that the violation of a rule of the employer shall militate against the workman, he must have notice, either actual or constructive, of the rule. But it is held that knowledge on the part of the workman is sufficient, regardless of the way in which such knowledge was acquired; Port Royal & W. C. R. Co. v. Davis, 95 Ga. 292, 22 S. E. 833. On the other hand, it has been held that a mere statement by the foreman to the workman that a certain rule exists is insufficient to charge the workman with notice; Daubert v. Meat Co., 135 Cal. 144, 67 Pac. 133; and a printed rule was declared insufficient to constitute notice to a workman who could not read; Himrod Coal Co. v. Clark, 197 Ill. 514, 519, 64 N. E. 282.

Whether or not a workman has been guilty of serious or wilful misconduct is a mixed question of law and fact. After the facts have been found, whether or not they constitute serious or wilful misconduct is a question of law; Dailly v. Watson, 8 Sc. L. T. 73. Whether or not there is any reasonable evidence to support a finding of serious and wilful misconduct is a question of law; British Columbia Sugar Refining Co. v. Granick, 44 Can. Sup. Ct. 105.

In this article the provisions of the English workmen's compensation act and the cases thereunder have been considered principally, inasmuch as some or all of their provisions have been incorporated in many of the statutes enacted in the United States, and their construction in this country will doubtless be substantially the same as in England.

See Elliott on Workmen's Compensation Acts, Labatt on Workmen's Compensation, and Butterworth's Workmen's Compensation Cases, containing cases in Great Britain and Ireland, and another series for Canada.

For the law in foreign countries not above referred to, reference may be had to the works above mentioned. The department of labor has published (December 23, 1913) the laws of the United States and foreign countries.

WORSHIP. Honor and homage rendered to God. State v. Norris, 59 N. H. 536. See CHRISTIANITY; DISTURBANCE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP; RELIGION.

In English Law. A title or addition given to certain persons. Co. 2d Inst. 666; Bacon, Abr. Misnomer (A 2).

WORTHIEST OF BLOOD. An expression used to designate that in descent the sons are to be preferred to daughters, which is the law of England. See some singular reasons given for this in Plowd. 305.

WOUND. A solution of the natural continuity of any of the tissues of the body. Taylor, Med. Jurispr.

In jurisprudence a wound may be said to exist even if there is no effusion of blood or severing of the skin. No question is raised as to the nature of the tissue damaged, be it skin and appendages, bone, joint or internal organ; and it is even urged that the result of disease upon tissue be described as wounds.

Under the statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 21, s. 12, it has been held in England that to make a wound, in criminal cases, there must be an injury to the person by which the skin is broken; 6 C. & P. 684. See DEATH.

WRECK (called in law Latin wreccum maris, and in law French wrec de mer). Such goods as after a shipwreck are cast upon the land by the sea, and left there within some country so as not to belong to the jurisdiction of the admiralty, but to the common law. Co. 2d Inst. 167; 1 Bla. Com. 290. A ship becomes a wreck when, in consequence of injuries received, she is rendered absolutely unnavigable, or unable to pursue her voyage, without repairs exceeding the half of her value; Wood v. Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 479, 4 Am. Dec. 163. A sunken vessel is not a wreck, but derelict; wreck applies to property cast upon land by the sea; Baker v. Hoag, 7 N. Y. 555, 59 Am. Dec. 431; to jetsam, flotsam and ligan; Murphy v. Dunham, 38 Fed. 503.

Wrecks and shipwrecked goods under a state act are confined, in their ordinary legal meaning, to ships and goods cast on shore by the sea, and do not include a boat or other property not cast ashore or thrown overboard or lost from a vessel in distress; Proctor v. Adams, 113 Mass. 376, 18 Am. Rep. 500.

Coal lying in a sunken ship in Lake Michigan is not a wreck of the sea; Murphy v. Dunham, 38 Fed. 503; the United States has no title to it; id.

See SUNKEN WRECK.

Goods found at low water, between high and low water mark, and goods between the same limits partly resting on the ground, but still moved by the water, are wreck; 3 Hagg. Adm. 257, 294.

Wreck, by the common law, belongs to the king or his grantee; but if claimed by the true owner within a year and a day the goods, or their proceeds, must be restored to him, by virtue of stat. Westm. I., 3 Edw. I. c. 4. Ships and goods found derelict or abandoned at sea belonged until lately to the office of the lord high admiral, by a grant from the crown, but now belong to the national exchequer, subject, however, to be claimed by the true owner within a year and a day; 1 Hagg. 383.

But in America the king's right in the sea-shore was transferred to the colonies, and therefore wreck cast on the sea-shore belongs to the owner of the shore, as against a mere stranger, if not reclaimed; Barker v. Bates, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 255, 23 Am. Dec. 678. See Proctor v. Adams, 113 Mass. 377, 18 Am. Rep. 500.

In this country, the several states bordering on the sea have enacted laws providing for the safekeeping and disposition of property wrecked on the coast. In one case, it was held that the United States succeeded to the prerogative of the British crown, and are entitled to derelict ships or goods found at sea and unclaimed by the true owner; but in the southern district of Florida it is held that such derelicts, in the absence of any act of congress on the subject, belong to the finder or salvor, subject to the claim of the true owner for a year and a day. Marv. Wreck.

Wrecked goods, upon a sale or other act of voluntary importation, become liable to duties; The Concord, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 387, 3 L. Ed. 768.

A wrecked vessel, in common phraseology, includes a sunken vessel; see Gilchrist v. Godman, 79 Fed. 970.

The act of congress, March 3, 1899, provides that, whenever a vessel is wrecked and sunk in a navigable channel, it shall be the duty of the owner immediately to mark it by a buoy or beacon by day and a lighted lantern by night. Failure to do so within six hours (one hour only being required) rendered the owner of a canal boat liable in damages to a passing vessel colliding with the wreck; The Anna M. Fahy, 153 Fed. 866, 83 C. C. A. 48; so when not marked for two days; The Macy, 170 Fed. 930, 96 C. C. A. 146.

Marking a sunken yacht (18 feet) with pieces of wood, two partly submerged buckets and a pocket handkerchief on a pole, was insufficient; The Fred. Schlesinger, 71 Fed. 747.

The act also requires the owner to commence the removal of the wreck at once; failing which (or upon its earlier abandonment) it may be removed by the secretary of war. The owner is required to maintain the mark during all this period; Second Pool Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 188 Fed. 892, 110 C. C. A. 526.

See SALVAGE; TOTAL LOSS.

WRIT. A mandatory precept, issued by the authority and in the name of the sovereign or the state, for the purpose of compelling the defendant to do something therein mentioned.

It is issued by a court or other competent jurisdiction, and is returnable to the same. It is to be under seal and tested by the proper officer, and is directed to the sheriff or other officer lawfully authorized to execute the same. Writs are divided into—original, of mesne process, of execution. See 3 Bla. Com. 273; Gould, Pl. c. 2, s. 1.

The list of original writs was not the reasoned scheme of a provident legislator, calmly devising apt remedies for all conceivable wrongs, rather it was the outcome of the long and complicated struggle whereby the king drew into his court all the litigation of the realm. The statute of Westminster 2d (1285) allowed the chancery to vary the old forms so as to suit new cases, but only new cases which fall under old law.

This gave in time one new form of action—trespass upon the special case—and this again threw out branches which came to be considered distinct forms of action, namely, assumpsit and trover. Equity, again, met some of the new wants, but others had to be met by a stretching and twisting of the old forms which were made to serve many purposes for which they were not originally intended; Poll. Torts (5th ed.) 535, note by F. W. Maitland.

See Maitland, Register of Original Writs (3 Harv. L. Rev. 97, 167, 212; 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 549), with a classified list of writs.

A writ is "issued" when it is delivered to an officer, with the intent to have it served; Wilkins v. Worthen, 62 Ark. 401, 36 S. W. 21; Michigan Ins. Bk. v. Eldred, 130 U. S. 693, 9 Sup. Ct. 690, 32 L. Ed. 1080; Webster v. Sharpe, 116 N. C. 466, 21 S. E. 912.

Although a writ which the court had power to issue was irregularly issued, the marshal must still act under it; Bryan v. Ker, 222 U. S. 107, 32 Sup. Ct. 26, 56 L. Ed. 114.

As to the history of assumpsit, see 2 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 53, by Prof. J. B. Ames. See WESTMINSTER 2d, STATUTE OF; BREVIA FORMATA.

WRIT DE EJECTIONE FIRMÆ. See EJECTMENT.

WRIT DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO. See DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO.

WRIT DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. See DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO.

WRIT DE ODIO ET ATIA. See DE ODIO ET ATIA; ASSIZE.

WRIT DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM. A writ which was sued out by a widow when the executors of her deceased husband refused to let her have a third part of her late husband's goods, after the debts were paid. Fitzh. N. B. 284.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE. A writ issuing out of chancery in pursuance of an order, commanding the sheriff to eject the defendant from certain lands and to put the plaintiff in possession. Cowell; 3 Steph. Com. 602; Bruce v. Roney, 18 Ill. 67. An ancient writ issuing out of the exchequer. Moz. & W.

A writ issuing from the court of exchequer to the sheriff commanding him to be in aid of the king's tenants by knight's service, or the king's collectors, debtors, or accountants, to enforce payment of their own dues, in order to enable them to pay their own dues to the king. 1 Madox, Hist. Exch. 675.

A writ commanding the sheriff to assist a receiver, sequestrator, or other party in chancery to get possession of land withheld from him by another party to the suit. Quincy, Mass. Appx.; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1062.

A process issuing in equity to enforce its decree, and coextensive with the court's jurisdiction to hear and determine the rights of the parties; Fox v. Stubenrauch, 2 Cal. App. 88, 83 Pac. 82.

Its office is to give effect to chancery decrees, where the rights of the parties are fixed thereby; Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 32 Mich. 285; or to put a party into possession; Sills v. Goodyear, 88 Mo. App. 316; rests in sound discretion, and will issue only when the right is clear; Hagerman v. Heltzel, 21 Wash. 444, 58 Pac. 580.

These writs which issue from the equity side of the court of exchequer or from any court of chancery are at least as old as the reign of James I., and were formerly in common use in England, Ireland, and some of the United States; 1 Ves. 454; 3 Swanst. 299, n.; but whether from the odium attached to the name in Massachusetts or from the practice in that state to conform processes in equity to those at law, no instance is known of such a writ having been issued in that commonwealth. Quincy, Mass. Appx. 369, with note by Horace Gray.

A writ of assistance is founded on the general principle that a court of equity will, when it can do so justly, carry its own decrees into full execution without relying on the co-operation of any other tribunal; Beatty v. De Forest, 27 N. J. Eq. 482, where it was remarked that it was of comparatively recent use in that state, the first instance being in 1853. It can issue only against parties affected by the decree; Howard v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 849, 25 L. Ed. 1081; Sills v. Goodyear, 88 Mo. App. 316; and not against one who entered on land pendente lite on claim of right; Merrill v. Wright, 65 Neb. 794, 91 N. W. 697, 101 Am. St. Rep. 645; the right to it may be lost by laches; Hooper v. Yonge, 69 Ala. 484. The order granting this writ is not appealable; Bryan v. Sanderson, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 402.

It will not issue in favor of a purchaser at an execution sale, where there is a bona fide contest as to the right of possession; Stanley v. Sullivan, 71 Wis. 585, 37 N. W. 801, 5 Am. St. Rep. 245.

Writs of assistance to seize uncustomed goods were introduced by statute 12 Charles II., c. 19, and were perhaps copied from the sheriff's patent of assistance; 4 Doug. 347; these writs authorized the person to whom they were issued, with the assistance of the sheriff, justice of the peace, or constable, to enter into any house where the goods were suspected to be concealed. One acting under this writ and finding nothing was not justified; 4 Dougl. 347. See Quincy, Mass. Rep. Appx.; 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L.; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1062.

WRIT OF ASSOCIATION. In English Practice. A writ whereby certain persons (usually the clerk of assize and his subordinate officers) are directed to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants; and they are required to admit the said persons into their society in order to take the assizes. 3 Bla. Com. 59. See ASSIZE.

WRIT OF CONSPIRACY. The name of an ancient writ now superseded by the more convenient remedy of an action on the case, which might have been sued against parties guilty of a conspiracy. Fitzh. N. B. 260.

It did not lie at common law, in any case, except when the conspiracy was to indict the party either of treason or felony; all the other cases of conspiracy in the books were but actions on the case; Hutchins v. Hutchins, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 104.

WRIT OF COVENANT. A writ which lies where a party claims damages for breach of covenant, i. e. of a promise under seal.

WRIT OF DEBT. A writ which lies where the party claims the recovery of a debt, i. e. a liquidated or certain sum of money alleged to be due to him.

This is debt in the debet, which is the principal and only common form. There is another species mentioned in the books, called the debt in the detinet, which lies for the specific recovery of goods under a contract to deliver them. 1 Chitty, Pl. 101.

WRIT OF DECEIT. The name of a writ which lies where one man has done anything in the name of another, by which the latter is damnified and deceived. Fitzh. N. B. 217.

The modern practice is to sue a writ of trespass on the case to remedy the injury. See DECEIT.

WRIT OF DETINUE. See DETINUE.

WRIT OF DOWER. A writ which lies for a widow claiming the specific recovery of her dower, no part having been yet assigned to her. It is usually called a writ of dower unde nihil habet. 3 Chitty, Pl. 393. There is another species, called a writ of right of dower, which applies to the particular case where the widow has received a part of her dower from the tenant himself; and of land lying in the same town in which she claims the residue. This latter writ is seldom used in practice. See DOWER.

WRIT OF EJECTMENT. See EJECTMENT.

WRIT OF ENTRY. See ENTRY, WRIT OF.

WRIT OF ERROR. A writ issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, directed to the judges of a court of record in which final judgment has been given, and commanding them, in some cases, themselves to examine the record, in others to send it to another court of appellate jurisdiction, therein named, to be examined, in order that some alleged error in the proceedings may be corrected. Steph. Pl. 138; 2 Saund. 100, n. 1; Bac. Abr. Error.

The first is called a writ of error coram nobis or vobis. When an issue in fact has been decided, there is not, in general, any appeal except by motion for a new trial; and although a matter of fact should exist which was not brought into the issue, as, for example, if the defendant neglected to plead a release, which he might have pleaded, this is no error in the proceedings, though a mistake of the defendant; Steph. Pl. *118. But there are some facts which affect the validity and regularity of the proceeding itself; and to remedy these errors the party in interest may sue out the writ of error coram vobis. The death of one of the parties at the commencement of the suit, the appearance of an infant in a personal action by an attorney and not by guardian, the coverture of either party at the commencement of the suit, when her husband is not joined with her, are instances of this kind; 1 Saund. 101; Steph. Pl. *119; Day v. Hamburg, 1 Browne, Pa. 75. The writ of error coram vobis is used to correct errors of fact and not of law; Maple v. Havenhill, 37 Ill. App. 311.

The second species is called, generally, writ of error, and is the more common. Its object is to review and correct an error of the law committed in the proceedings, which is not amendable or cured at common law or by some of the statutes of amendment or jeoffail. See, generally, 1 Vern. 169; 1 Salk. 322; 2 Saund. 46, 101; 3 Bla. Com. 405.

It is the usual way of bringing up a case; an appeal is an exception; Carino v. Insular Government, 212 U. S. 456, 29 Sup. Ct. 334, 53 L. Ed. 594. There cannot be two in the same case at the same time; Columbus Const. Co. v. Crane Co., 174 U. S. 600, 19 Sup. Ct. 721, 43 L. Ed. 1102.

See APPEAL AND ERROR; BILL OF EXCEPTION.

WRIT OF EXECUTION. A writ to put in force the sentence that the law has given. See EXECUTION.

WRIT OF EXIGI FACIAS. See EXIGENT; EXIGI FACIAS; OUTLAWRY.

WRIT OF FORMEDON. This writ lies where a party claims the specific recovery of lands and tenements as issue in tail, or as remainder-man or reversioner, upon the determination of an estate in tail. Co. Litt. 236 b. See FORMEDON.

WRIT OF INQUIRY. See INQUISITION; INQUEST.

WRIT OF MAINPRISE. A writ directed to the sheriff (either generally, when any man is imprisoned for a bailable offence and bail has been refused, or specially, when the offence or cause of commitment is not properly bailable below), commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner's appearance, commonly called mainpernors, and to set him at large. 3 Bla. Com. 128. See MAINPRISE.

WRIT OF MESNE. In Old English Law. A writ which was so called by reason of the words used in the writ, namely, Unde idem A qui medius est inter C et præfatum B; that is, A, who is mesne between C, the lord paramount, and B, the tenant paravail. Co. Litt. 100 a.

WRIT OF PRÆCIPE. This writ is also called a writ of covenant, and is sued out by the party to whom lands are to be conveyed by fine,—the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant that the one shall convey the land to the other. 2 Bla. Com. 349.

WRIT OF PREVENTION. This name is given to certain writs which may be issued in anticipation of suits which may arise. Co. Litt. 100. See QUIA TIMET.

WRIT OF PROCESS. See PROCESS; ACTION.

WRIT OF PROCLAMATION. A writ which issues at the same time with the exigi facias, by virtue of stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3, s. 1, by which the sheriff is commanded to make proclamations in the statute prescribed.

When it is not directed to the same sheriff as the writ of exigi facias is, it is called a foreign writ of proclamation. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 261.

WRIT OF PROHIBITION. See PROHIBITION.

WRIT OF QUARE IMPEDIT. See QUARE IMPEDIT.

WRIT OF RECAPTION. A writ which lies where, pending an action of replevin, the same distrainer takes, for the same supposed cause, the cattle or goods of the same distrainee. See Fitzh. N. B. 169.

This writ is nearly obsolete, as trespass, which is found to be a preferable remedy, lies for the second taking; and, as the defendant cannot justify, the plaintiff must necessarily recover damages proportioned to the injury.

WRIT OF REPLEVIN. See REPLEVIN.

WRIT OF RESTITUTION. A writ which is issued on the reversal of a judgment commanding the sheriff to restore to the defendant below the thing levied upon, if it has not been sold, and, if it has been sold, the proceeds. See RESTITUTION.

WRIT OF RIGHT. The remedy appropriate to the case where a party claims the specific recovery of corporeal hereditaments in fee-simple, founding his title on the right of property, or mere right, arising either from his own seisin or the seisin of his ancestor or predecessor. Fitzh. N. B. 1 (B); 3 Bla. Com. 391.

"Originally a writ of right is so called because it orders the feudal lord to do full right to the demandant, plenum rectum tenere. . . . But when possessory actions have been established in the king's court, 'right' is contrasted with 'seisin,' and all writs originating proprietary actions for land . . . come to be known as writs of right;" Maitland, in 2 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Am. Leg. Hist. 563.

At common law, a writ of right lies only against the tenant of the freehold demanded; Green v. Lister, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 239, 3 L. Ed. 545.

This writ brings into controversy only the rights of the parties in the suit: and a defence that a third person has better title will not avail; Green v. Watkins, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 27, 5 L. Ed. 388; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbour, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 133, 7 L. Ed. 617; 3 Bingh. N. S. 434; 6 Ad. & E. 103.

WRIT OF SUMMONS. See SUMMONS.

WRIT OF TOLL. In English Law. The name of a writ to remove proceedings on a writ of right patent from the court-baron into the county court. 3 Bla. Com. App. No. 1, § 2.

WRIT OF TRIAL. In English Law. A writ directing an action brought in a superior court to be tried in an inferior court or before the under-sheriff, under stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42. It is now superseded by the County Courts Act of 1867, c. 142, s. 6, by which a defendant in certain cases is enabled to obtain an order that the action be tried in a county court; 3 Steph. Com. 515, n.

WRIT OF WASTE. The name of a writ to be issued against a tenant who has committed waste of the premises. See WASTE.

WRIT PRO RETORNO HABENDO. The name of a writ which recites that the defendant was summoned to appear to answer the plaintiff in a plea whereof he took the cattle of the said plaintiff (specifying them), and that the said plaintiff afterwards made default, wherefore it was then considered that the said plaintiff and his pledges of prosecuting should be in mercy, and that the said defendant should go without day, and that he should have return of the cattle aforesaid. It then commands the sheriff that he should cause to be returned the cattle aforesaid to the said defendant without delay, etc. 2 Sell. Pr. 168.

WRITER OF THE TALLIES. In England. An officer of the exchequer whose duty it was to write upon the tallies the letters of tellers' ills. The office has long been abolished. See TALLY.

WRITERS TO THE SIGNET. In Scotch Law. Anciently, clerks in the office of the secretary of state, by whom writs passing the king's signet were prepared. Their duty now is to prepare the warrants of all lands flowing from the crown, and to sign almost all diligencies of the law affecting the person or estate of a debtor, or for compelling implementation of decree of superior court. They may act as attorneys or agents before the court of sessions and have various privileges. Bell, Dict. Clerk to Signet. They are members of the Society of Writers to His Majesty's Signet, the head of which is the Keeper of the Seal.

WRITING. The act of forming by the hand letters or characters of a particular kind, on paper or other suitable substance and artfully putting them together so as to convey ideas.

The word "writing," when not used in connection with analogous words of more special meaning, is an extensive term, and may be construed to denote a letter from one person to another. But such is not its ordinary and usual acceptation. Neither in legislative enactments nor in common intercourse are the two terms "letter" and "writing" equivalent expressions. In law the term "writing" is much more frequently used to denote legal instruments, such as deeds, agreements, memoranda, bonds, and notes, etc. In the statute of frauds the word occurs in that sense in nearly every section. But in its most frequent and most familiar sense the term "writing" is applied to books, pamphlets, and the literary and scientific productions of authors; U. S. v. Chase, 135 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 756, 34 L. Ed. 117.

It differs from printing, which is the formation of words on paper or other proper substance by means of a stamp. Sometimes by writing is understood printing, and sometimes printing and writing mixed. See Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 312. A theatre ticket is the subject of forgery. "Printing" is "writing" in the legal sense of the term, and an instrument, the words of which are printed either wholly or in part, is equally valid with an instrument written by a pen; In re Benson, 34 Fed. 652; Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 467, 8 Sup. Ct. 1240, 32 L. Ed. 234.

Many contracts are required to be in writing; all deeds for real estate must be in writing, for it cannot be conveyed by a contract not in writing, yet it is the constant practice to make deeds partly in printing and partly in writing. Wills, except nuncupative wills, must be in writing, and signed by the testator; and nuncupative wills must be reduced to writing by the witnesses within a limited time after the testator's death.

Records, bonds, bills of exchange, and many other engagements must, from their nature, be made in writing.

The notes of a stenographer, taken when the witness gives his oral testimony in court, is a "taking in writing," as required by a statute; Nichols v. Harris, 32 La. Ann. 648.

See ALTERATION; FORGERY; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; LANGUAGE; SALE; TYPEWRITING; STENOGRAPHER; SIGNATURE; WILL.

WRITING OBLIGATORY. A bond; an agreement reduced to writing, by which the party becomes bound to perform something or suffer it to be done.

WRITTEN INSTRUMENT. A judgment and a tax duplicate have been held not to be written instruments, within the meaning of a statute requiring a copy to be filed with the pleadings; Wyant v. Wyant, 38 Ind. 48; Hazzard v. Heacock, 39 Ind. 172.

WRONG. An injury; a tort; a violation of right.

In its broad sense, it includes every injury to another, independent of the motive causing the injury; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Henry, 36 Kan. 570, 14 Pac. 1.

A wrong is an invasion of right to the damage of the party who suffers it. It consists in the injury done, and not commonly in the purpose or mental or physical capacity of the person or agent doing it. It may or may not have been done with bad motive; the question of motive is usually a question of aggravation only; Williams v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 447, 38 N. E. 449, 26 L. R. A. 153, 42 Am. St. Rep. 743.

In its most usual sense, wrong signifies an injury committed to the person or property of another, or to his relative rights unconnected with contract; and these wrongs are committed with or without force. But in a more extended signification, wrong includes the violation of a contract; a failure by a man to perform his undertaking or promise is a wrong or injury to him to whom it was made; 8 Bla. Com. 158.

A public wrong is an act which is injurious to the public generally, commonly known by the name of crime, misdemeanor, or offence; and it is punishable in various ways, such as indictments, summary proceedings, and, upon conviction, by death, imprisonment, fine, etc.

Private wrongs, which are injuries to individuals, unaffecting the public; these are redressed by actions for damages, etc. See REMEDIES; TORT.

For a classification of wrongs, see Holland, Jurispr. 270.

WRONG-DOER. One who commits an injury; a tort-feasor. See Dane, Abr.

WRONGFUL ACT, DEATH BY. See DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT.

WRONGFUL CONVICTION. An act in Wisconsin, 1913, provides compensation for persons wrongfully convicted and imprisoned under the judgment; not more than $1,500 for each year or $5,000 in all can be paid, but the board (created for this purpose) may recommend to the legislature an additional payment.

See INNOCENCE.

WRONGFULLY. In a wrong manner; unjustly; in a manner contrary to the moral law, or to justice. Webster, cited Board of Com'rs of Howard County v. Armstrong, 91 Ind. 536.

WRONGFULLY INTENDING. In Pleading. Words used in a declaration when in an action for an injury the motive of the defendant in committing it can be proved; for then his malicious intent ought to be averred. This is sufficiently done if it be substantially alleged, in general terms, as wrongfully intending. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2875.

WYOMING. One of the states of the United States.

By act of congress, approved July 25, 1868, the territory of Wyoming was constituted. See MONTANA; NEW MEXICO.

Wyoming became one of the states of the Union by virtue of the act of congress of July 10, 1890.

Its constitution was amended in 1912, so as to provide for initiative, referendum and recall. Woman Suffrage was introduced in 1869.

Y

YACHT. A light sea-going vessel for the purpose of pleasure, racing, and the like. See VESSEL. A steam pleasure yacht is an "ocean going vessel" and not a coasting vessel; Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 14 Sup. Ct. 264, 37 L. Ed. 1218.

Yachts may be licensed by the secretary of commerce and may then proceed from port to port of the United States and to foreign ports without entering or clearing at the custom house, except yachts of over 15 gross tons returning to the United States. Act Aug. 20, 1912.

As to the tax on foreign-built yachts, and as to what are such, see TONNAGE; VESSEL; SHIP; NAVIGATION RULES.

YARD. A measure of length, containing three feet, or thirty-six inches.

A piece of land inclosed for the use and accommodation of the inhabitants of a house. In England it is hearily synonymous with backside. 1 Chitty, Pr. 176; 1 Term 701.

YARDLAND. In Old English Law. A quantity of land containing twenty acres. Co. Litt. 69 a. See VIRGATA.

YEAR. The period in which the revolution of the earth round the sun, and the accompanying changes in the order of nature, are completed.

The civil year differs from the astronomical, the latter being composed of three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight seconds and a fraction, while the former consists sometimes of three hundred and sixty-five days, and at others, in leap-years, of three hundred sixty-six days.

The year is divided into half-year, which consists, according to Co. Litt. 135 b, of one hundred and eighty-two days; and quarter of a year, which consists of ninety-one days. Id.; 2 Rolle, Abr. 521, l. 40. It is further divided into twelve months.

The civil year commences immediately after twelve o'clock at night of the thirty-first day of December, that is, the first moment of the first day of January, and ends at midnight of the thirty-first day of December twelve months thereafter. See Com. Dig. Annus; 2 Chitty, Bla. Com. 140. Before the alteration of the calendar from old to new style in England (see BISSEXTILE) and the colonies of that country in America, the year in chronological reckoning was supposed to commence with the first day of January, although the legal year did not commence until March 25, the intermediate time being doubly indicated; thus February 15, 1724/5, and so on. This mode of reckoning was altered by the statute 24 Geo. II, c. 23, which gave rise to an act of assembly of Pennsylvania, passed March 11, 1752, 1 Smith, Laws, 217, conforming thereto, and also to the repeal of the act of 1710.

In New York it is enacted that whenever the term "year" or "years" is or shall be used in any statute, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, the year intended shall be taken to consist of three hundred and sixty-five days; half a year, of a hundred and eighty-two days; and a quarter of a year, of ninety-two days; and the day of a leap year, and the day immediately preceding, if they shall occur in any period so to be computed, shall be reckoned together as one day. Rev. Stat. vol. 2, c. 19, t. 1, § 3. The meaning of the term "year," as used in a contract, is to be determined from the connection in which it is used and the subject-matter of the contract; Brown v. Anderson, 77 Cal. 236, 19 Pac. 487; Knobe v. Baldrige, 73 Ind. 54.

See AGE; ALLOWANCE; TIME; REGNAL YEARS; OLD STYLE.

The omission of the word "year" in an indictment is not important, provided the proper numerals are written after the month and day of the month; State v. Munch, 22 Minn. 67. An indictment which states the year of the commission of the offense in figures only, without prefixing "A. D.," is insufficient; Com. v. McLoon, 5 Gray (Mass.) 91, 66 Am. Dec. 354; but it has been held otherwise in Maine under a statute; State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 388.

See YEAR OF OUR LORD.

YEAR AND DAY. A period of time much recognized in law.

It is not in all cases limited to a precise calendar year. In Scotland, in computing the term, the year and day is to be reckoned, not by the number of days which go to make up a year, but by the return of the day of the next year that bears the same denomination; 1 Bell, Com. 721. See Bac. Abr. Descent (I 3). In the law of all the Gothic nations, it meant a year and six weeks.

It is a term frequently occurring; for example, in case of an estray, if the owner challenged it not within a year and a day, it belonged to the lord; 5 Co. 108. So of a wreck; Co. 2d Inst. 168. This time is given to prosecute appeals and for actions in a writ of right, and, after entry or claim, to avoid a fine; Plowd. 357 a. And if a person wounded die in that time, it is murder; Co. 3d Inst. 53; 6 Co. 107. So, when a judgment is reversed, a party, notwithstanding the lapse of time mentioned in the statute of limitations pending that action, may commence a fresh action within a year and a day of such reversal; 3 Chitty, Pr. 107. Again, after a year and a day have elapsed from the day of signing a judgment no execution can be issued till the judgment be revived by scire facias; Bac. Abr. Execution (H).

An acquittal on an indictment was no bar to an appeal. After such acquittal the accused remained in prison for a year and a day in order to see if the relative of the murdered man wished to begin an appeal; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 307.

Protection lasted a year and a day; and if a villein remain from his master a year and a day in an ancient demesne, he is free; Cunningham, Dict. If a person is afraid to enter on his land, he may make claim as near as possible,—which is in force for a year and a day; 3 Bla. Com. 175. In case of prize, if no claim is made within a year and a day, the condemnation is to captors as of course; The Avery, 2 Gall. 388, Fed. Cas. No. 672. So, in case of goods saved, the court retains them till claim, if made within a year and a day, but not after that time; Stratton v. Jarvis, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 4, 8 L. Ed. 846.

Coke gives various rules as to the proposition that the common law has often limited year and day as a convenient time. See Co. Litt. 254 b; 5 Rep. 218.

See Possession for Year and Day, by F. W. Maitland, in 5 L. Q. Rev. 253.

The same period occurs in the Civil Law, in the Book of Feuds, the Laws of the Lombards, etc.

YEAR-BOOKS. Books of reports of cases. From Edward I to Richard III, they are almost continuous. During the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII, they became intermittent, the last being in 27 Hen. VIII. They were compiled by eye-witnesses or from the narration of eye-witnesses. They are contemporary reports of the utmost value. The former belief that some of them were compiled by paid official reporters is now doubted. Holdsworth in 2 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Am. Leg. Hist. 104. See Pollock, First Book of Jur. 284.

Charles C. Soule, the eminent legal bibliographer, in a "Preliminary Sketch for a Bibliography of the Year-Books" (14 Harv. L. Rev. 557), gives the following list of the last edition of the Year-Books, "made up of eleven parts, one part printed in 1678, one in 1680, and the other nine in 1679, so that it may be properly called the 1679 (or 'Standard') edition":

- | | |
|------|--------------------------------------------------------|
| Part | I. Memoranda in Scaccario (only) |
| | 1 to 29 Edw. I. Year Books, |
| | 1 to 19 Edw. II. |
| | II. First Part of Edw. III, years |
| | 1 to 10. |
| | III. Second Part of Edw. III, years |
| | 17 to 39 (omitting 19, 20 and |
| | 31 to 37). |
| | IV. Third Part of Edw. III, years |
| | 40 to 50, "Quadragesms." |
| | V. " Liber Assisarum ," years 1 to |
| | 50 Edw. III. |
| | VI. Year Books of Hen. IV (years |
| | 1 to 14) and Hen. V (years |
| | 1, 2, 5, 7, 8, and 9). |
| | VII. First Part of Hen. VI, years 1 |
| | to 20 (omitting 5, 6, 13, 15, |
| | 16, and 17). |
| | VIII. Second Part of Hen. VI, years |
| | 21 to 39 (omitting 23 to 26 |
| | and 29). |
| | IX. Edw. IV, years 1 to 22. |
| | X. "Long Quinto" or the long report of year 5 Edw. IV. |
| | XI. Edw. V (year 1); Rich. III |
| | (years 1 and 2); Hen. VII |
| | (years 1 to 21, omitting 17, |
| | 18 and 19); and Hen. VIII |
| | (years 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 26 |
| | and 27 only). |

Part V is not exactly a Year-Book, nor yet an "abridgment," but rather a compilation of selected cases from the manuscript Year-Books of Edw. III. Part X covers only a single year, and it ought properly to have found a place beside the regular or short report of 5 Edw. IV. The eight remaining parts are reprints of earlier impressions of Year-Books arranged in chronological order from Edward III to Henry VIII, with various unexplained and unaccountable gaps, which are now being gradually filled up by the publication of the volumes of the Rolls series.

The current series of Year-Books is reprinted under the editorship of L. Owen Pike, the foremost expert in ancient English legal records.

The Ames Foundation at the Harvard Law School has published the Year Books of 12 Rich. II. under the editorship of George F. Dreiser, of the Philadelphia Bar, who has added a valuable Introduction to the volume.

Professor Wambaugh (Study of Cases § 98) says they "are the work of skilled lawyers; and the reports of cases, when complete, present an adequate view of the pleadings." They were Court Rolls, intended for the preservation of the results in order to fix the rights of the parties, but not adapted for use as precedents. See 1 Dougl. v; 1 Co. XXVI.

YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE (Lat. annus, dies, et vastum). A part of king's prerogative, whereby he takes the profits of the lands and tenements of those attainted of petty treason or felony, for a year and a day, but, in the end, may waste the tenements, destroy the houses, root up the woods, gardens, and pasture, and plough up the meadows (except the lord of the fee agree with him for redemption of such waste); after which the lands are to be restored to the lord of the fee. Staundford, Prerog. c. 16, fol. 44. By Magna Carta, it would appear that the profits for a year and a day were given in lieu of the waste. 9 Hen. III, c. 22. But 17 Edw. II declares the king's right to both. It was, in practice, usually compounded for by the person who claimed the escheat. The crown's claim of forfeiture (except in the case of outlawry) was abolished in England in 1870.

YEAR OF OUR LORD. In England the time of an offense may be alleged as that of the sovereign's reign, or as that of the year of our Lord. The former is the usual mode. Hence there "year" alone might not indicate the time intended, but as we have no other era, therefore, any particular year must mean that year in our era. Com. v. Doran, 14 Gray (Mass.) 38. The abbreviation A. D. may be omitted; and the word year is not fatal; State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 393; contra, Com. v. McLoon, 5 Gray (Mass.) 92, 66 Am. Dec. 354. See REGNAL YEARS.

YEARS, ESTATE FOR. See ESTATE FOR YEARS.

YEAS AND NAYS. The list of members of a legislative body voting in the affirmative and negative of a proposition.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, directs that "the yeas and nays of the members of either house, on any question, shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal." See 2 Story, Const. 301.

Constitutional provisions in some states require the yeas and nays to be entered on the journal on the final passage of every bill. See Ryan v. Lynch, 68 Ill. 160; Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104. These directions are clearly imperative; Cooley, Const. Lim. 171.

The power of calling the yeas and nays is given by all the constitutions of the several states; and it is not, in general, restricted to the request of one-fifth of the members present, but may be demanded by a less number; and, in some, one member alone has the right to require the call of the yeas and nays.

YEOMAN. In the United States this word does not appear to have any very exact meaning. It is usually put as an addition to the names of parties in declarations and indictments. In England it signified a free man who has land of the value of forty shillings a year. Co. 2d Inst. 668; Respublica v. Steele, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 92, 1 L. Ed. 303. The local volunteer militia raised by individuals with the approbation of the queen are also called yeomen. The term yeomanry is applied to the small freeholders and farmers in general. Hallam, Cons. Hist. c. 1.

YIELDING AND PAYING. These words, when used in a lease, constitute a covenant on the part of the lessee to pay the rent; Platt, Cov. 50; Royer v. Ake, 3 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 464; 2 Lev. 206; 3 Term 402; 1 B. & C. 416; 2 Dowl. & R. 670; but whether it be an express covenant or not seems not to be settled; 2 Lev. 206; T. Jones 102; 3 Term 402.

In Pennsylvania, it has been decided to be a covenant running with the land; Royer v. Ake, 3 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 464. See 1 Saund. 233, n. 1; Kimpton v. Walker, 9 Vt. 191.

YORK-ANTWERP RULES. Certain rules relating to uniform bills of lading formulated by the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Laws of Nations, now the International Law Association.

These rules are commonly incorporated in contracts of affreightment. They are the result of conferences of representatives of mercantile interests from several countries, in the interest of uniformity of law. They have no statutory authority. The text is in Mac-lachlan's Mercht. Shipping. For a history of them, see Lowndes, Gen. Av.

YORK, CUSTOM OF, is recognized by 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 10, and 1 Jac. II, c. 17. By this custom, the effects of an intestate are divided according to the anciently universal rule of pars rationabilis. 4 Burn, Eccl. Law 342.

YORK, STATUTE OF. The name of an English statute, passed at York, 12 Edw. II, 1318. It contains many wise provisions and explanations of former statutes. Barrington, Stat. 174. There were other statutes made at York in the reign of Edward III, but they do not bear this name.

YOUNG ANIMALS. It is a rule that the young of domestic or tame animals belong to the owner of the dam or mother, according to the maxim, Partus sequitur ventrem. Dig. 6. 1. 5. 2; Inst. 2. 1. 9. See WHELP.

YOUNGER CHILDREN. When used with reference to settlements of land in England, this phrase signifies all such children as are not entitled to the rights of an eldest son, including daughters who are older than the eldest son. Moz. & W.

YOUTH. This word may include children and youth of both sexes. Nelson v. Cushing, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 519, 528.

Z

ZAMINDAR, or ZEMINDAR. A landholder in India, who is the responsible collector of revenues on behalf of the government. Wilson's Gloss.

ZINC ORE. A mineral body, containing so much of the metal of zinc as to be worth smelting. Lehigh Z. & I. Co. v. New Jersey Z. & I. Co., 55 N. J. L. 350, 26 Atl. 920.

ZOLL-VEREIN. A union of German states for uniformity of customs, established in 1819. It continued until the unification of the German Empire, including Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, Württemberg, Baden, Hesse-Cassel, Brunswick, and Mecklenberg-Strelitz, and all intermediate principalities. Whart. Lex.
